S. N. Kherdeker—for Non-applicants.
R. Kaushalendra Rao, Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order.—The non-applicants were prosecuted under S. 429, Penal Code, for mischief by killing a buffalo. The complaint was filed on 25-7-1946. There were eight hearings and on the ninth the complainant was absent. Accordingly, the trying Magistrate, purporting to act under S. 253 (2), Criminal P. C., discharged the accused. He did not say that he considered the charge to be groundless, but merely said that :

"The complainant being absent there is no evidence against the accused persons."

[2] Now of course, if there is no evidence against an accused person, that is a good ground for discharging him. But before it can be said that there is no evidence, it is incumbent on the Magistrate to call and examine such witnesses as are said to know the facts. When the complainant was examined on 25-7-1946 he stated on affirmation that he knew nothing personally but had been told the facts by two persons whom he named. The Magistrate was bound in these circumstances to call these two witnesses and examine them.

[3] This is a warrant case. An offence under S. 429, Penal Code, is cognisable and non-compoundable. The procedure for such trials is laid down in Chap. 21. Section 252 (2) requires the Magistrate to "ascertain from the complainant or otherwise, the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution" and then says

"and shall summon to give evidence before himself such of them as he thinks necessary."

Then comes S. 253 which provides in sub-s. (1) for the discharge of the accused

"if upon taking all the evidence referred to in S. 252" he finds no case made out etc. See also I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 205[1] at p. 214.

[4] Sub-section (2) leaves the Magistrate a large discretion for discharging the accused if he considers the charge to be groundless, but he can only do this "for reasons to be recorded."

[5] It was argued that the omission to record reasons was a curable irregularity. I agree that the reasons need not be recorded in any particular form and that it would be enough if the reasons which motivated the discharge can be gathered from the order, but reasons there must be in some form or other. There must be enough material in the order to satisfy the High Court that the discharge was for good and proper cause. The only reason which can be gathered from the order is that as the complainant was absent there is no evidence. But that was not the complainant's fault. He had already named two of the persons who were likely to know the facts of the case.

[6] The absence of the complainant is not sufficient in cognisable and non-compoundable cases under Chap. 21. There is a difference here between a summons case and a warrant case. In the former, S. 247 applies and there the accused can be acquitted if the complainant does not appear "upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned."

In warrant cases S. 259 applies and the power to discharge the accused in the absence of the complainant is only given in compoundable and non-cognizable cases. The orders of the lower Court are set aside and the trying Magistrate is directed to proceed with the trial.

Narayan Prasad and others—Applicants v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 190 of 1947, Decided on 26-9-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Damoh, D/- 5-4-1947.

Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 133, 144—Public servant extorting bribe — Evidence of bribe given —Very little corroboration is required— Penal Code (1860), Ss. 161 and 165.

The rule of the Court which requires corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice as against each accused, if it applies at all, applies with very little force to a case in which the accused is charged with extorting a bribe from other persons. The objections which usually arise to the evidence of an accomplice do not really apply where the alleged accomplice, that is, the person who pays the bribe, is not a willing participant in the offence, but is really a victim of that offence. In cases of this kind, where the payment of the bribe has not been voluntary, very slight corroboration would be sufficient to make the evidence of such persons admissible against the receiver of the bribe: 22 A. V. R. Sen—for Applicants.

R. Kaushalendra Rao, Government Pleader—for the Crown.

Order.—Narayan Prashad, Patwari, Bhawani Prashad, revenue peon, and Abdul Majid, revenue peon, were convicted and each sentenced to undergo 3 consecutive terms, each of 3 months rigorous imprisonment, and pay Rs. 75 fines by the First Class Magistrate, Damoh, under S. 161, read with S. 34, Penal Code. In appeal the Additional Sessions Judge, Damoh, held Narayan Prashad liable under S. 165, ibid, maintained the jail punishment awarded and set aside the fines. Bhawani Prashad was also adjudged liable under that section but on one count only and he was sentenced to undergo 3 months rigorous imprisonment. His fines too were set aside. Abdul Majid was acquitted. Narayan Prashad and Bhawani Prashad have now come up in revision to this Court.

[2] The case against them shortly stated was to the effect that while they were engaged in grain procurement work in mouza Gadhola, Hatta tahsil, Saugor District, in April-May 1945, they received illegal gratifications from Prahlad Singh (P. W. 1), Bhopal Singh (P. W. 2) and Bahadur Singh (P. W. 3) with the consequence that they did not procure from them the stipulated quantity of grain. An anonymous petition despatched in July 1945 was received by the Tahsildar, Hatta, and S. P. Sukul (P. W. 7) carried out the investigation in the course of which Prahlad Singh, Bhopal Singh and Bahadur Singh made the reports Exs. P-1, 3 and 4 respectively on 12-8-1945.

[3] The applicants asserted that they had demanded and received only the stipulated amounts of grain from each of those three witnesses, and that they had neither demanded nor received illegal gratification from any of them. They claimed in defence that they had been inculpated because of their refusal to depose against Mr. B. D. Tiwari, Naib-Tahsildar.

[4] Prahlad Singh's version was briefly to the effect that when he refused to supply 12 bags of wheat and 8 bags of juar as demanded by the accused as his father and uncle were not at home, they threatened to enter his house and remove that quantity forcibly. Eventually, the applicant Bhawani Prashad said that he would accept a smaller quantity if he were paid Rs. 20, but he agreed to take Rs. 15 and the accused decided that the quantity to be supplied by Prahlad Singh was only 3 bags of wheat and 1 bag of juar.

[5] Bhopal Singh claimed that when he refused to supply the two bags of wheat demanded by the accused, they threatened to enter his house and demanded Rs. 5 from him. On his payment of that amount to the applicant Narayan Prashad they took only 1 bag of wheat from him.

[6] Bahadur Singh's version was that on his refusal to supply two bags of wheat to the accused, they were about to enter his house and Narayan Prashad demanded Rs.4 from him. When he paid that amount, only one bag of wheat was taken from him.

[7] Puransingh (P. W. 4) averred that after he had paid Rs. 5 in similar circumstances, the demand of 2 bags of wheat from him was met by the delivery of 1 bag of juar. On Kadore P. W 5's payment of Rs. 5 to Narayan Prashad, one bag of wheat was accepted in lieu of two bags thereof demanded. Ujyar Singh (P. W. 6) had been taken from his village Khiria to Gadhola to assist the applicants in grain procurement and from his testimony it was shown that in the distribution of the money received by them at Gadhola each received Rs. 28. This would signify that the total amount collected was Rs. 84, but from the testimony of Prahlad Singh (P. W. 1) and Puransingh (P. W. 4) who also averred that each of the accused received Rs. 28 it would appear that the total amount collected was Rs. 86. Prahlad Singh could not say what happened to the extra Rs. 2, but Puransingh stated that it remained with the applicant Bhawani Prashad. The point is not, however, of any salient importance as it was clear from the independent and reliable evidence of Ujyar Singh (P. W. 6) that each of the accused received Rs. 23.

[8] That evidence did not, it is true, refer specifically to the amount recovered from Prahlad Singh and the other Gadhola witnesses, but it did corroborate their testimony concerning the unlawful recovery of money at that place and of its distribution among the accused and if the Gadhola witnesses can be regarded as accomplices, substantial corroboration of their evidence was not required.

[9] In 59 Bom. 486,[1] Wadia J. made the following observations :

"But in cases of bribery the persons who pay the bribe and those who act as intermediaries are the only persons who can ordinarily be expected to give evidence about it. It is not possible to expect absolutely independent evidence about the payment of a bribe, and a distinction has to be made between persons who have voluntarily paid a bribe to a public servant in order to secure some advantage for themselves, and persons, such as Krishna, Dadu and Namu in this case, who have been compelled by improper pressure put upon them by a public servant to pay a bribe. In cases of this kind, where the payment of the bribe has not been voluntary, very slight corroboration would, in my opinion, be sufficient to make the evidence of such persons admissible against the receiver of the bribe."

In the same case Beaumont C. J. said:

"In my opinion, the rule of the Court which requires corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice as against each accused, if it applies at all, applies with very little force to a case like the present, in which the accused is charged with extorting a bribe from other persons. The objections which usually arise to the evidence of an accomplice do not really apply where the alleged accomplice, that is, the person who pays the bribe, is not a willing participant in the offence but is really a victim of that offence."

In A. I. R. 1947 P. C 135[2] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in dealing with the contention that reliance had been placed on the uncorroborated evidence of accomplices observed:

"Section 133, Evidence Act, expressly provides that 'an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person' and that 'a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.' No doubt the evidence of accomplices ought as a rule to be regarded with suspicion. The degree of suspicion which will attach to it must however vary according to the extent and nature of the complicity: sometimes, as was said by Sir John Beaumont C. J. in 59 Bom. 486,[1] accomplice is 'not a willing participant in the offence but a victim of it.' There is ground for saying that the accomplices in this case acted under a form of pressure which it would have required some firmness to resist."

[10] If, as stated, the evidence of the Gadhola witnesses required corroboration, that supplied by Ujyar Singh was sufficient. The evidence of the Gadhola witnesses had necessarily to be received with caution, but there is no reason why it should be disbelieved. The applicants had undoubtedly collected money to which they were not entitled and exerted pressure on the villagers who were reluctant to supply the amount of grain demanded from them. The reports Exs. P-1, 3 and 4 had been made belatedly, but there was nothing unusual in the delay, as villagers ordinarily are reluctant to move against Government servants and in the present case they had themselves gained advantage from the payments to the applicants.

[11] The evidence of the defence witnesses was disbelieved by both Courts for cogent reasons with which I am in agreement. There was manifestly no substance in the defence plea that the accused had been incriminated because of their refusal to testify against Mr. B. D. Tiwary, Naib Tahsildar.

[12] Two of Narayan Prashad's convictions were in order and are maintained, but the third which is in respect of the amount paid by Prahlad Singh must be set aside. Prahlad Singh had paid Rs. 15 not to this applicant but to the applicant Bhawani Prashad and the latter was convicted therefor. That conviction too was in order and is maintained. As to sentence, Narayan Prashad shall undergo two concurrent terms, each of 3 months rigorous imprisonment. He as patwari was undoubtedly the chief offender. With regard to the applicant Bhawani Prashad, who was merely a tahsil peon, the position is different and the ends of justice will be met if he is ordered to pay a substantial fine. The sentence of imprisonment awarded to him is accordingly set aside and in lieu of it he is sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200. In default of payment he shall undergo 3 months rigorous imprisonment. Subject to these modifications the application is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 94 of 1947, Decided on 25-7-1947, from order of Sessions Judge Raipur, camp Bilaspur, D/- 14-4-1947.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 24 — Retracted confession—It may form basis of conviction if believed —But it is unsafe to convict on it without independent corroboration — Corroboration must be in material particulars—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164.

A retracted confession, if believed to be true, may form the basis of a conviction; but as a rule of caution it is unsafe to base a conviction even of the maker on a retracted confession alone without some independent corroboration. The corroboration must be in material particulars so as to satisfy the Court that the confession, even though retracted may be acted upon : 26 A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 65 (FB), Ref. [Para 15]

The accused must be free and unhampered at the time when his confession is recorded and should not be subject to the influence of the police. [Para 16]

The accused persons were produced before a Magistrate in the custody of the guard provided by the police. The Magistrate who recorded the confessions noted that one constable stood guard on the dais when the confessions were recorded. Two of the accused were handcuffed when their confessions were recorded:

Held, that it was impossible to be sure that the confessions made by the accused persons in these circumstances were not made under the influence of the police. 24 A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 409, Rel. on. [Para 20]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 24 — Inducement — Positive proof of, is not required for rejecting confession — Well-grounded conjecture reasonably based upon circumstances disclosed is sufficient.

Section 24 does not require positive proof (as defined in S. 3 of the Act) of improper inducement to justify the rejection of the confession; the word 'appears' indicating a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if 'proof' had been required. A well-grounded conjecture, reasonably based upon circumstances disclosed in the evidence, is sufficient to exclude the confession, because it would be idle to expect the accused to prove the inducement, threat or promise; for in most cases such proof cannot be available : 12 A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587, Rel. on. [Para 21]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 — Confession must be voluntary — Magistrate must question accused with view to discover whether accused confesses voluntarily.

A Magistrate recording a confession of an accused must question him with a view to discovering whether he confesses voluntarily, and this questioning must be in pursuance of a real endeavour to find out the object of it, the requirement not being satisfied by putting a few formal questions. An attempt must be made by the Magistrate to elicit facts from the accused to help him in determining whether the statements were made voluntarily and were not made under improper inducement. [Para 23]

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164—Voluntary confession—Magistrate eliciting necessary facts by putting leading questions to accused—Procedure held highly objectionable and confession must be rejected as not voluntary.

A Magistrate who recorded a confession instead of allowing the accused to make a statement in his own words put three leading questions to the accused. The questions indicated that the Magistrate was told what the accused was to state and he elicited the necessary facts by putting him three leading questions.

Held, that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was highly objectionable and the confession so recorded must be rejected as not voluntary. [Para 25]

An accused who was charged with abetment of murder by poisoning, made a statement that he purchased poison pasted in an arrow and produced an arrow.

Held that the statement did not lead to any discovery. His statement that he purchased poison pasted in an arrow related to the previous history and was not admissible : 34 A. I. R. 1947 P. C. 67, Rel. on. [Para 29]

Held further, that though the statement was not admissible, the fact that the accused produced an arrow which was subsequently seized and sent to the Chemical Examiner who reported that there was poison on it was relevant. [Para 29]

(h) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 288—Discretion is to be judicially exercised—Prosecution and accused are entitled to notice.

The power under S. 288 is not to be lightly used. The discretion vested under that section has to be judicially exercised. As the evidence before the committal Court, which is admitted in evidence under S. 288, is substantive evidence, the prosecution and the accused are entitled to notice so that they may have an opportunity to test it by further cross-examination: 33 A. Judgment.—This judgment will govern the disposal of Criminal Appeals Nos. 94, 145 and 146 of 1947 and Criminal Reference No. 29 of 1947. These proceedings arise out of the same sessions trial.

[2] Four persons were tried for murder. They were charged under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code, for causing the death of Gajraj Raut on 7th July 1946 at Karma in furtherance of their common intention by giving him poison mixed in food. Mt. Bhukin was also charged under S. 302, Penal Code, for causing the death of her husband Gajraj. The other three accused were charged for abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 109, Penal Code, in addition to the charge under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code.

[3] Mt. Bhukin was convicted under S. 302, Penal Code, for causing the death of her husband and was sentenced to death by the Court of Session on 14th April 1947. Criminal appeal No. 94 of 1947 has been filed by her to set aside her conviction and sentence. The Court of Session has made Criminal Reference No. 29 of 1947 under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for confirmation of the capital sentence.

[4] Bulthu, son of Ghasiram Kanwar, was convicted of abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 109, Penal Code, and sentenced to transportation for life. Criminal Appeal No. 146 of 1947 has been filed by him to set aside his conviction and sentence.

[5] The two other accused persons viz. Malikram, son of Sunhar Teli, and Bedmati, widow of Ghasiram, Kanwar, were acquitted. The Provincial Government has filed Criminal Appeal No. 145 of 1947 to set aside the order of acquittal of Malikram but has not filed any appeal against the order of acquittal of Bedmati. No reference will be made to her except when necessary while discussing the case of the other accused.

[6] The prosecution case briefly stated, was as follows. Malikram frequently visited the house of Gajraj who suspected that he was carrying on criminal intrigue with his wife Mt. Bhukin. Due to this suspicion he used to beat her. On 9th April 1946, the Ramnavami day, there was a serious quarrel between them and Gajraj gave a severe beating to his wife Bhukin. When Malikram subsequently turned up, Gajraj abused him and threatened to kill him. Due to this threat Malikram did not visit the house of Gajraj for two months. Gajraj suspected that Bedmati was a procuress and that at her place Malikram used to meet Bhukin. Gajraj had also threatened to kill Bedmati. Bhukin got nervous and sought the advice of the other three accused. Bulthu stated that he had some medicine and suggested that she might give it to her husband. A conspiracy to murder Gajraj was formed between all the four accused on Thursday, the 4th July 1946. On Sunday, the 7th July 1946, in the evening Bulthu brought some poison and handed it over to Bedmati who gave it to Bhukin and directed her to mix it in dal and give it to her husband. As Bhukin had no dal it was supplied to her by Bedmati. Bhukin mixed the poison in the dal as directed and served it to her husband when he took his meal on Sunday, the 7th July 1946, in the night. After taking his meals Gajraj went to sleep. Gajraj got up at midnight, complained of pain in the stomach and had a few vomitings and purgings. He died in the early hours of the morning of the 8th July and was buried the same day.

[7] Sukritdas (P. W. 1), the kotwar of Karma, made a report (Exhibit P 23) on Thursday, the 11th July 1946, at Ratanpur police station house which is at a distance of 15 miles from Karma where Gajraj Raut died. In that report the kotwar stated that he suspected that Bhukin had administered poison to her husband in the food which he took on the Sunday night. He alleged that she had criminal intimacy with Malikram, son of Sunhor Teli, but did not mention that he had admitted that he along with three others had poisoned Gajraj Raut. The effect of this omission will be considered when discussing the evidence regarding the extra-judicial confession alleged to have been made by Malikram in the presence of Bulthu to Sukritdas on the night of Tuesday, the 9th July 1946, before he made the report, Exhibit P. 23.

[8] After the report was made at the Ratanpur police station house, Abdul Hamid (P. W. 18) Head Constable moharir left for Karma accompanied by the kotwar. They arrived in the village in the evening at 7 O'clock the same day. The head constable started investigation on 12th July 1946. On that date he seized earth (Article E) from the place where Gajraj had vomited under seizure memo Exhibit P. 18. The next day he recorded the statement (Exhibit P.

19.) of Bulthu under S. 27, Evidence Act, regarding the purchase made by him of poison pasted in an arrow from Bamhni Khurd. Bulthu produced the arrow (Article F) which was seized from him under seizure memo Exhibit P-20. Dhoti (Article G) which Gajraj was wearing at the time of his death was seized under seizure memo (Exhibit P 21). The head constable made an application (Exhibit P-16) under S. 176 (2) Criminal P. C , to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bilaspur, on 14th July 1946 for exhumation of the corpse of Gajraj from the grave. He also asked the District Superintendent of Police, Bilaspur, to send a doctor for medical examination. The head constable sent a report (Exhibit P-17A) through a constable and it was recorded as first information report (Exhibit P. 17) at the police station house, Ratanpur. He seized the dhoti (Article H) on which Gajraj was sleeping at the time of his death under seizure memo Exhibit P-22.

[9] Mohammad Yakub (P. W. 19), Sub-Inspector of Police, took charge of the investigation on 15th July 1946. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bilaspur, passed an order (Exhibit P. 7) under S. 176 (2), Criminal P. C., on 15th July 1946 that the corpse of Gajraj Raut be disinterred and examined. The corpse was accordingly exhumed on 16th July 1946 and the inquest report is Exhibit P-8. As the body was in an advanced state of decomposition no injuries could be observed. The Sub-Inspector seized the register (Exhibit P 2) from Bodhiram (P. W.9) under seizure memo (Exhibit P-3). The four accused persons were arrested on 16th July 1946 at 8 p. m. On the 17th the Sub-Inspector seized 2 one rupee notes from Sonsai (P. W. 3) under the seizure memo (Exhibit P-1), and an arrow (Article B)from him under the memo Exhibit P-4. The Sub-Inspector recorded the statement (Exhibit P-5) of Bedmati under S. 27, Evidence Act, regarding stone (Article C) and wooden plate (Article D) which were seized under memo Exhibit P-6. The statement of Bedmati (Exhibit P-5) has been excluded from consideration as inadmissible because the articles C and D are common articles and were in no way connected with the crime.

[10] The Sub-Inspector in his application (Ex. P-14) dated 17-7-1946 asked that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bilaspur, be requested to record the confessions of the accused. Two days were taken in deciding about the Magistrate who was to record the confessions. On 19-7-1946 it was settled that Mr. Tobin was to record their confessions. Accordingly they were produced before him and he gave them time to reflect and directed their production before him on 20-7-1946 for recording their confessions. Bhukin was produced before him on 20-7-1946 and Ex. P-24 is the record of her confession. Malikram, Bulthu and Bedmati were produced on 22-7-1946 and Exs. P-25 to P-27 are the records of their confessions.

[11] Mr. Razak, Assistant Medical Officer, Raipur, was present at the time the corpse of Gajraj was disinterred. He made the post mortem examination on 26-7-1946 of which the report is Ex. P-32. In the report he noted that he did not detect any injuries on the person of the deceased or find any disease, and stated that he could not give any opinion as to the cause of death of Gajraj. The Assistant Medical Officer preserved the viscera, had it sealed and sent it to the Chemical Examiner for report. A few other articles noted in Exs. P-30 and P-31 were also sent to the Chemical Examiner. The report of the Chemical Examiner is Ex. P-12 dated 12-9-1946. A charge-sheet against the four accused viz. Bhukin, Malikram, Bulthu and Bedmati was filed on 19-9-1946 under S. 302 read with Ss. 109 and 34, Penal Code.

[12] The first question for decision is whether Gajraj Raut died of aconite poisoning. (After considering the medical evidence and the report of the Chemical Examiner, the judgment proceeded:) On a careful consideration of the Chemical Examiner, we have no hesitation in holding that Gajraj died of aconite poisoning.

[13] The next question is whether there was a liaison between Malikram and Bhukin. (After considering the evidence their Lordships concluded thus.) The evidence on record is sufficient to establish that Gajraj did not like the frequent visits of Malikram to his house, that he suspected that Malikram was carrying on criminal intrigue with his wife Bhukin and that there used to be frequent quarrels between Gajraj and his wife Bhukin and he used to beat her due to suspicion.

[14] The next question for consideration is whether the confessions of the four accused viz., Bhukin, Malikram, Bulthu and Bedmati, were voluntary. The accused persons were arrested on Tuesday, the 16th July 1946, at 8 P. M. and were produced before Mr. Tobin, Magistrate First Class, on 19-7-1946, on which date he gave them time for reflection and directed that they be produced on 20-7-1946 for recording their confessions. Bhukin was produced on 20-7-1946 and the record of her confession is Ex. P-24. Malikram, Bulthu and Bedmati were produced on 22-7-1946 and the records of their confessions are Exs. P-25 to P-27 respectively. These confessions were retracted in the committal Court and the retractions were adhered to in the Sessions Court. In the memorandum of appeal Bhukin has stated the circumstances under which she was made to confess by the Sub-Inspector.

[15] In I. L. R. (1939) 1 Cal. 1[1] at P. 20 it was observed:

"Therefore, normally a confession of guilt is the most conclusive evidence which one can have. But if that confession is 'retracted,' to use the word which has almost become a word of art, then it is certainly desirable, if not absolutely necessary, that there should be some corroboration of what the accused has said about himself even in respect of his own actions."

A retracted confession, if believed to be true, may form the basis of a conviction: but as a rule of caution it is unsafe to base a conviction even of the maker on a retracted confession alone without some independent corroboration. The corroboration must be in material particulars so as to satisfy the Court that the confession, even though retracted, may be acted upon.

[16] The accused persons were produced before Mr. Tobin, Magistrate 1st class, in the custody of the guard provided by the police. The Magistrate who recorded the confessions has noted that one constable stood guard on the dais when the confessions were recorded. Except Bhukin and Bedmati, the other two accused viz., Malikram and Bulthu were handcuffed when their confessions were recorded. The accused must be free and unhampered at the time when his confession is recorded and should not be subject to the influence of the police. In order to ensure that the confessions may be voluntarily made, instructions have been issued; vide Circulars 1-6, paragraphs 5 to 12, and the procedure to be followed and the safeguards to be observed by a Magistrate before recording a confession have been set out.

[17] In 39 P. L. R. 663[2] the confession of the accused was discarded because the accused was not only in the custody of the police but he was actually fettered and had a policeman on either sides of him. The Divisional Bench stated that it was impossible to be sure that a confession made in those circumstances was not made under the influence of the police.

[18] Sukritdas (P. W. 1), the kotwar of the village, stated that when he left Karma on 10-7-1946 to make a report at the police station house, he asked Baldeo (P. W. 4), the malguzar of the village, to keep a watch on Malikram. Baldeo stated that Malikram was confined to his house by keeping a watch over him till the arrival of the police. Baldeo further stated that when he returned to his village on 15th July he found that the three accused viz., Malikram, Baldeo and Bhukin, were confined in his bada and the next day Bedmati was arrested and that they were all kept in his bada till they were taken away on the 17th.

[19] Manglu (P. W. 5) stated that his mother Bhukin was confined in the bada of the malguzar for nearly three or four days while the head constable was investigating and that Bhukin did not return home till she was taken to Bilaspur. From the evidence of these two witnesses, it appears that the accused persons were confined in the bada of the malguzar before they were arrested on 16th July and that thereafter they were in the custody of the police up to 19th July when they were produced before the Magistrate. They were remanded to jail custody by the Magistrate on that date. Bhukin was produced on 20th July before the Magistrate in the custody of the guard provided by the police. Similarly, Malikram, Bulthu and Bedmati were also produced in the custody of the police guard on 22nd July 1946. When the confessions of these accused persons were recorded, a police constable stood guard on the dais. Bulthu and Malikram were also handcuffed when their confessions were recorded.

[20] The principle underlying the decision in 39 P. L. R. 663[2] is applicable and it is impossible to be sure that the confessions made by the accused persons in these circumstances were not made under the influence of the police.

[21] Section 24, Evidence Act, 1872, does not require positive proof (as defined in S. 3 of the Act) of improper inducement to justify the rejection of the confession; the word 'appears' indicating a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if 'proof' had been required. As observed in 52 Cal. 67[3] at p. 84 a well-grounded conjecture, reasonably based upon circumstances disclosed in the evidence, is sufficient to exclude the confession, because it would be idle to expect the accused to prove the inducement, threat or promise; for in most cases such proof cannot be available.

[22] A Magistrate recording a confession of an accused must question him with a view to discovering whether the prisoner confesses voluntarily, and this questioning must be in pursuance of a real endeavour to find out the object of it, the requirement not being satisfied by putting a few formal questions. This has not been done in the present case. The confessions were recorded on the printed forms. The learned Magistrate merely put the stereotyped printed questions to the accused except Malikram and no attempt was made by him to elicit facts from the accused to help him in determining whether the statements were made voluntarily and were not made under improper inducement. The answers of the accused to the questions actually put by the Magistrate did not furnish data for the determination of the points stated above. In the case of Malikram the additional question that was put to him and the answer given by him are reproduced below:

"Q. Did somebody tell you that you would be excused, if you made a (confessional) statement?

A. No sir."

The answer was bound to be in the negative the more readily the greater the influence, if any, that he may have been labouring under.

[23] The substance of the confession (EX. P-24) of Bhukin has been given in paragraph 5 of our judgment. The confession is full and detailed and the facts, have been stated in natural and proper sequence. The entire prosecution case has been set out therein. Everything necessary for the prosecution to establish a charge of murder has been admitted. In her confession she admitted that she had criminal intimacy with Malikram and that she used to meet him at the house of Bedmati. Bhukin stated that there was a serious quarrel with her husband who beat her severely and threatened to kill her and Malikram, that all the four accused conspired to kill Gajraj and that in pursuance thereof poison was procured and mixed in food which was served on Sunday night when Gajraj took his meal. Bhukin is an illiterate and ignorant woman. In our opinion it was impossible for her to make a coherent and a complete statement which she did unless she was tutored by someone familiar with the requirements of the law. The internal evidence furnished by the contents of the confession leave no room for doubt that it was not made voluntarily. As the confession was not voluntary it must be discarded.

[24] Apart from the statements contained in the confession EX. P-24, there is no independent evidence to prove that Bhukin used to meet Malikram at the house of Bedmati, that Gajraj had threatened to kill Bhukin and Malikram or that the four accused conspired to kill Gajraj. There is some evidence regarding the purchase of poison and of dal (pulse) which we shall discuss in a later paragraph.

[25] The record of confession (EX. P-25) of Malikram is unsatisfactory. Instead of allowing him to make a statement in his own words he was put three questions which are given below:

"Q. Were you in criminal intimacy with Bhukin Raotin?

Q. Did Gajraj Raot use to prohibit you from visiting his house?

Q. Did you think any remedy for this?

The questions indicate that the learned Magistrate was told what Malikram was to state and he elicited the necessary facts by putting him three leading questions. The procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate was highly objectionable and the confession so recorded must be rejected as not voluntary.

[26] There is a variation in the confession of Bhukin and of Malikram in the matter of the person who gave the dal to Bhukin. In her confession Bhukin stated that she had no dal and Bedmati gave it to her. She did not implicate Malikram or state that she had asked him to procure dal for her. This statement was made on 20-7-1946. Two days later, Malikram in his confession stated that Bhukin asked him to bring urad dal and that accordingly he purchased it from the shop of Bodhiram and gave it to Bedmati. This was an improvement with a view to implicating Malikram.

[27] Similarly, an improvement has been made in the matter of purchase of poison from Sonsai (P. W. 3). In his confessional statement (EX. P-19) recorded under S. 27, Evidence Act, Bulthu stated that he purchased poison from Sonsai and gave it to Bedmati who handed it over to Bhukin. This statement was recorded on 13-7-1946. There was no reference that Malikram had accompanied him at the time of purchase of poison. In his confession (EX. P-26) he stated that he brought poison and gave it to Bhukin but did not refer to Malikram. Similarly in the statements made before the police (EXS. D-1 and D-2) Sukritdas and Pachkaud respectively stated that Bulthu brought the poison from Sonsai but did not mention the name of Malikram. Malikram in his confession stated that he had accompanied Bulthu on the first day but no poison was given and that he did not accompany Bulthu on Sunday when he brought the poison. Bhukin in her confession stated that Malikram had accompanied Bulthu on both the occasions, when Bulthu went to purchase poison. The variation in the story has been made with a view to implicate Malikram who had not originally been stated to have accompanied Bulthu to purchase poison.

[28] Bulthu and Bedmati are Kanwars. Gajraj was a Raut. Malikram is a Teli. These are of different castes. No reasons have been stated why Bulthu should desire to encompass the death of Gajraj or enter into a conspiracy with the other accused to kill him. It has not been brought out that he was on inimical terms with Gajraj or that he was in any way interested in Bhukin or Malikram.

[29] The learned Sessions Judge has relied on the confessional statement (EX. P-19) recorded under S. 27, Evidence Act. The statement, however, was inadmissible. Bulthu made the statement and produced an arrow. The statement did not lead to any discovery. His statement that he purchased poison pasted in an arrow from Bamhni Khurd relates to the previous history and was not admissible in view of the decision in A. I. R. 1947 P. C. 67.[4] Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed at page 70 :

"..... it is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within the section as equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to past user, or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered."

The learned Sessions Judge was, therefore, not right in relying on the confessional statement recorded in Exhibit P-19 which must be ignored. Though the statement is not admissible, the fact that the accused produced an arrow which was subsequently seized and sent to the Chemical Examiner who reported that there was poison on it is relevant. The only evidence about the purchase of poison is that of Sonsai (P. W. 3) which will be discussed later.

[30] The confession of Bulthu is Exhibit P-26. The confession has been retracted and there is no independent evidence to prove that there was a conspiracy to kill Gajraj or that Bulthu procured poison and gave it to Bhukin. It is, therefore, not safe to base a conviction upon his confession which has been retracted.

[31] Bedmati has been acquitted and no appeal has been filed against her acquittal. It is, therefore, not necessary to discuss her confession.

[32] On a careful consideration we have reached the conclusion that the confessions of Bhukin, Malikram and Bulthu (Exs. P-24, P-25 and P-26 respectively) were not voluntary and they appear to have been made under improper inducement. They are accordingly inadmissible in evidence under S. 24, Evidence Act, and must be ignored.

[33] The next question is whether Malikram made an extra-judicial confession. The extra-judicial confession is alleged to have been made on two different occasions. (After discussing the evidence on this point their Lordships concluded.) We accordingly hold that no extra-judicial confession was made by Malikram either on the 9th or 10-7-1946.

[34] The procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge was very irregular. He permitted the Public Prosecutor to cross-examine these witnesses under S. 154, Evidence Act, read with S. 288, Criminal P. C. No case had been made out for permitting cross-examination of these witnesses. The Public Prosecutor did not give any reasons why he wanted permission for cross-examination of these two witnesses. Similarly, the learned Sessions Judge gave no reasons why permission to cross-examine was granted. We pointed out in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 946[5] at p. 956 that the power under S. 288, Criminal P. C., is not to be lightly used. The discretion vested under that section has to be judicially exercised. As the evidence before the committal Court, which is admitted in evidence under S. 288, Criminal P. C., is substantive evidence the prosecution and the accused are entitled to notice so that they may have an opportunity to test it by further cross-examination.

[35] Baldau (P. W. 4) and Manglu (P. W. 5) were examined on 11-2-1947 and Navratan on 12-2-1947. The learned Sessions Judge did not admit under S. 288, Criminal P. C., the depositions of Baldau and Manglu before the committal Court on 11-2-1947 but they were admitted on 12-2-1947. In the order-sheet it has not been stated that the depositions before the committal Court were admitted under S. 288, Criminal P. C., though in the endorsements on the depositions it has been so stated. [After discussing the evidence on the questions, (1) whether poison was purchased from Sonsai? (2) whether urad dal was purchased by Malikram from the shop of Bodhiram at instance of Bhukin? and (3) whether poison was mixed in the urad dal which was served to the deceased? their Lordships held that there was no reliable evidence to prove the purchase of the poison and the dal and that the evidence showed that there was poison in the urad dal or in the food which was given to the deceased on the night of Sunday, 7-7-1947. The judgment then continued thus :]

[36] Aconite may have been administered otherwise than through the urad dal or the food which was served on the night of Sunday, 7-7-1947. There is no legal evidence as to the circumstances in which aconite was administered to Gajraj and by whom.

[37] We accordingly hold that the conviction of Bhukin under S. 302, Penal Code, is not justified on the evidence on record. Criminal Appeal No. 94 of 1947 is accordingly allowed and we set aside the conviction of Bhukin under S. 302, Penal Code, and the sentence of death passed on her, and direct that she be set at liberty forthwith. The reference for confirmation of the death sentence automatically fails and is filed. The conviction of Bulthu under S. 302, read with S. 109, Penal Code, is not sustainable; and we allow Criminal Appeal No. 146 of 1947 and set aside his conviction under that section and the sentence of transportation for life passed on him. Bulthu shall be released forthwith.

[38] There is no legal evidence to justify a conviction of Malikram under S. 302, Penal Code, or under S. 302 read with S. 109, Penal Code. The order of acquittal passed by the learned Sessions Judge was proper and is upheld. Criminal Appeal No. 145 of 1947 filed by the Provincial Government fails and is dismissed.

Judgment.—This appeal has been preferred by the judgment-debtor against the order of the lower Court rejecting his second application for instalments, under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. It is admitted that the judgment-debtor had previously filed an application, under S. 11 of the Act, for instalments on 12-12-1941, in respect of a certain money decree that was passed on 28-8-1933, that application is to be found typed at p. 1 of the paper book. That application was dismissed for default of the judgment-debtor, on 14-4-1942. On 14-7-1942 the judgment-debtor presented a second application, out of which this appeal arises, for instalments under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act, and it was this application that was rejected by the learned Judge in the Court below, on the ground that it was not maintainable, as the first application, on the same allegations, was dismissed under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C.

[2] The crucial point in the case, which calls for decision, is whether the provisions of O. 9, Civil P. C., apply to the case at all. It is not disputed that the provisions of O. 9 of the Act do not apply to the application for execution; nor is it disputed that the said provisions do apply to an application, under S. 47, Civil P. C. It is, therefore, necessary in the first place to decide the nature of the proceedings, under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. It is significant to note that, under these provisions, an order that is passed on the application is to be deemed to have been passed under S. 47, Civil P. C. It, therefore, follows that although the proceedings under S. 11, Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, are not, strictly speaking, proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., still by fiction of law, the former proceedings have got to be treated on the same footing as the proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., and that an order passed in these proceedings has to be treated as an order passed under that section for the purpose of an appeal. If this fiction of law is to be adhered to, it follows as an inevitable corollary, that the proceedings under S. 11, Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, are not mere proceedings in execution. I am fortified in my view by the observations of the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 1[1]. At pages 12 and 13 the learned Judges have observed :

"If the executing Court directs stay of execution of the decree it is, in reality, an order under S. 47. It cannot be deemed to be an order under that section. The use of the expression "shall be deemed to have been" involves a fiction. It is not in reality an order under the section but is treated as one passed under that section. As observed in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 468[2] at p. 482, the provision is merely a compendious way of providing the various rights given where an order is made under S. 47, e. g., a right of appeal... If the order is passed by the executing Court in execution, it will be an order under S. 47. If however, the order is passed by the Court which passed the decree it would not be an order in execution and would not be an order under S. 47. The Legislature intended that an order granting instalments by the Court should be appealable and therefore it was necessary to introduce a statutory fiction and to treat it as an order under S. 47, Civil P. C. This makes it clear that the order contemplated under S. 11, is an order passed by the Court which passed the decree and not by the executing Court in execution."

It seems clear to my mind from the observations cited above that the proceedings under S. 11, Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, are not, strictly speaking, execution proceedings, but as they have to be treated as proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., and as the order passed therein is to be deemed as an order under S. 47 of the Code and appealable as such, the provisions of O. 9 of the Code must, therefore, come into play.

[3] It is admitted that the first application filed on 12th December was dismissed for default on 14th April and that the judgment-debtor did not take any step to have the order set aside, under the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. Instead, he preferred a second application on 14-7-1942, which was manifestly barred by the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, of the Code. It is not disputed that the second application of the judgment-debtor was based on the same identical allegations, on which his first application was based and when the first application was thrown out for default, the only remedy that was then open to him was, to apply for setting aside the dismissal, under the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., read with S. 141 of the Code. I think that the proceedings, which are initiated under the provisions of S. 11, Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, are, undoubtedly, in the nature of original proceedings, which must attract the provisions of S. 141, Civil P. C. A Court executing the decree has no power to alter or vary the terms of the decree. The order directing payment of the decretal amount by instalments is an order which varies the decree. It is not within the competence of the Court executing the decree to alter or vary it. The proceedings under S. 11, Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, are always initiated with a view to alter or vary the terms of the decree, so that a decree for payment of money in a lump is sought to be converted into a decree for payment of money by instalments. In this view of the case, it can safely be stated that an application by the judgment-debtor, under S. 11, Central Provinces Money-lenders Act, for instalments, can be regarded in the nature of an original proceeding, within the meaning of S. 141, Civil P. C. I, therefore, agree with the learned Judge in the Court below in holding that the judgment-debtor's second application dated 14-7-1942, is barred by the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C.

[4] For the reasons stated above I affirm the order of the lower Court. The appeal before me is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 50.

First Appeal No. 13 of 1943, Decided on 21-7-1947, from decree of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 17-8-1942.

Hindu law—Adoption—Rights of adopted son—Joint family of two brothers P and K — K dying without issue—Subsequent mortgage by P and his son S—After institution of suit on mortgage widow of K adopting D as son to K—D cannot challenge mortgage.

Two brothers P and K were joint. K died without issue in 1906. Subsequently P and his son S executed a mortgage in 1929. After the institution of the suit on the mortgage, the widow of K adopted D as a son to the deceased K in 1939. D contended that his adoption dated back to the death of K in 1906 and that he was therefore entitled to challenge the mortgage executed by P and S in 1929.

Held, that D as a subsequently adopted son could not challenge the mortgage executed by P and S who were the only coparceners in existence at the time : 29 A. I. R. 1942 Nag. 19 ; 14 A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 139 ; 16 A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 296 and 26 A. I. R. 1939 Bom. 178, Ref. [Para 6]

Judgment.—This judgment will also dispose of First Appeal No. 24 of 1943. These are cross-appeals arising out of a suit on foot of a mortgage. The mortgage-deed (Ex. P-1) was executed by Pralhad Ramchandra Deshpande, defendant 1 and his son Shankar Pralhad Deshpande, defendant 2 on 7-4-1929 as security for a sum of 1,10,000 which, according to the recitals in the deed, consisted of Rs. 68,800 paid by the mortgagee to various creditors of the mortgagors, Rs. 35,681 found due on a bond for Rs. 30,000 (Ex. P-3) executed by defendant 1 in favour of the mortgagees on 27-4-1927, and Rs. 5519-0-0 paid in cash at the time of registration. The debt was to carry compound interest at 9 per cent. per annum and was repayable in annual instalments varying in amount from Rs. 5500 for the first payable on 31-3-1930 to Rs. 12,000-0-0 for the last payable on 28-3-1941. Defaulted instalments were to carry compound interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum, and in case of two defaults the entire amount was to become exigible. The security consisted of 13 villages in the Nagpur, Wardha and Chanda districts and a house in Nagpur town.

[2] Defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 are the natural sons of Shankar, defendant 2 and grandsons of Pralhad, defendant 1, and it is not now disputed that they were not in existence when the mortgage was executed and cannot challenge it. Prabhakar, defendant 4, however, stands in a different position. After the suit had been instituted, the widow of Kesheorao, brother of Pralhad, defendant 1 adopted Prabhakar, defendant 4 as a son to Kesheorao on 28-10-1939. It seems highly probable that the motive for this adoption was to protect part of the property against the claim of the mortgagee, but the validity of that adoption is not now challenged. The contention is that Prabhakar, as the nephew of defendant 1 and the cousin of defendant 2 by adoption, is not bound by the mortgage executed by them. The other defendants are transferees of small portions of the mortgaged property, and as regards them there is now no dispute.

* * * *

[3] We now turn to the question whether Prabhakar, defendant 4, as the adopted son of Pralhad's brother Kesheorao, can challenge the alienation. Kesheorao was joint with his brother Pralhad when he died without issue in 1906. His widow adopted Prabhakar as a son to Kesheorao in 1939 after the suit had been instituted, as we have said. The contention is that his adoption dates back to the date of Kesheorao's death in 1906 and that he is, therefore, entitled to challenge the alienation which was made in 1929. Reliance has been placed on the decision of this Court in I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 707.[1] There, there was a joint Hindu family consisting of two branches, one of which contained coparceners and the other only a widow with power to adopt. After the coparceners who belonged to the first branch had effected a partition between themselves the widow in the other branch adopted a son to her late husband, and it was held that there was no break in the continuity of the line into which the adopted son was introduced and that he was entitled to a share as a son representing his father's line. Stone C. J., however, went on to remark at p. 715:

"We need not stay to examine the very considerable number of cases, of which we may refer to 52 Mad. 398[2] as an example, which seeks to minimise the serious practical inconveniences which might follow from allowing that fiction to be entirely untrammelled. It is, we think, plain sense that can be reconciled with the above principle that persons in the position of the present 1st defendant—who between the years 1918 and 1936, was the manager of an undivided joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his two sons and a widow (at all material times, i. e., between those years, a mere maintenance-holder though potentially the mother of a son)—are not accountable in any way to any son that is brought on the scene after the act for which he seeks to make them accountable. So also it may well be that when one is considering the position of alienees they would be able to raise a defence on the ground that such a son brought into the family after the transaction impugned (that is to say, alienation) had been perfected cannot challenge such an act."

This of course was obiter, but there are other decisions to the same effect, and no decision to the contrary has been cited. In 50 Mad. 508[3] where it was held that a will by which a testator gave part of his property to his intended adopted son and part to others was not binding upon the adopted son, their Lordships appear to have considered the general question of the rights of an adopted son and to lay down the general principle:

"When a disposition is made inter vivos by one who has full power over property under which a portion of that property is carried away it is clear that no rights of a son who is subsequently adopted can affect that portion which is disposed of."

[4] The learned counsel for the defendants has attempted to distinguish that decision on the grounds that here defendant 4 was adopted as a son to Kesheorao who took no part in the alienation and that Pralhad and Shankar were not the full owners of the property when they made the alienation; it appears to us, however, that their Lordships intended to lay down a general principle which covers the present case.

[5] Another case in point is 52 Mad. 398.[2] There again the facts were not the same as in the present case, for the adopted son was challenging an alienation made by his adoptive grandfather, but there are relevant remarks, and it was said at page 414:

"It seems to me that a sole surviving coparcener has always been regarded as the owner of the coparcenary property. The theory of relation back has only to do with establishing a line of succession to the adoptive father and in order to establish that line, it is necessary that certain intermediate holders should give way to the adopted son's superior claims as that of a natural born son of his adoptive father; there are limits."

A case directly in point is I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 245[4] where it was said (page 252):

"Now an adopted son becomes a member of the coparcenary only from the moment of his adoption. He is still then a stranger to the family and has no kind of interest in the family property. If there was prior to the adoption a sole surviving male member in the family, the question is simplified, for as full and sole owner he is competent to deal with the entire property as he likes and the subsequently adopted coparcener could not question the alienations whether valid or otherwise. That is because the rights of an adopted son do not relate back to a period earlier than the date of his adoption."

This is the view taken by Mayne, at page 278 (Edn. 10) of his work on Hindu law and Usage:

"Where an adoption defeats the estate of a person who is lawfully in possession, such holder if a male has the ordinary powers of alienation of a Hindu proprietor. No doubt he is liable to be superseded; but on the other hand, he never may be superseded. It would be intolerable that he should be prevented from dealing with his own, on account of a contingency which may never happen. When the contingency has happened, it would be most inequitable that the purchaser should be deprived of rights which he obtained from one who, at the time, was perfectly competent to grant them.

Mulla at page 580 of Edn. 10 of his work on Hindu Law says :

"The rights of an adopted son arise for the first time on his adoption. Even where the adoption is made by a widow, his rights do not relate back (as it was supposed at one time) to the date of the death of the adoptive father."

Similarly in Edn. 8 of Sarkar's Hindu Law at page 217 it is stated :

"So, if the sole coparcener, in spite of the authority to adopt given by his deceased coparcener to his widow, alienates all or any of the family properties absolutely, even by gift, the son adopted after the alienation cannot question it and the ordinary doctrine, that adoption relates back to the date of the adoptive father's death, does not apply to such cases."

[6] There seems to be no authority whatever for the view that a subsequently adopted son can challenge an alienation made by coparceners who were the only coparceners in existence at the time, and the incovenience of taking that view is very clear. We therefore agree with the lower Court that it is not open to defendant 4 to challenge the mortgage.

* * * * *

[7] The other contention put forward by the plaintiff in his appeal is that about 165 acres which were khudkasht at the time of the mortgage and also at the time when the suit was instituted have since been recorded as sir, and that the lower Court has held that the defendants are entitled to retain cultivating rights in these lands and that only the proprietary rights can be put to sale under the mortgage. That view was based on the decisions in 17 N. L. J. 100[5] and A. I. R 1939 Nag. 287.[6] Those were decisions under the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 before it was amended by Act 10 [X] of 1940 which came into force on 1st May 1941. Under S. 49 (1), Tenancy Act, as it stood before the Amending Act of 1940, a proprietor who loses his right to occupy any portion of his sir land as a proprietor shall, at the date of such loss, become an occupancy tenant of such sir land Since the suit was instituted that section has been amended by Act 10 [X] of 1940. Under the section as amended a proprietor who loses his right to occupy his sir land as a proprietor shall, at the date of such loss, become an occupancy tenant of such sir land except when a transfer of such sir land is made by him expressly agreeing to transfer his right to cultivate such sir land. It has been disputed before us whether the unamended section or the amended section applies. It seems to us that this point does not arise for decision at this stage and that it will arise only when the defendants lose their right to occupy their sir land as proprietors. That may never happen, or the law may be further amended in the meanwhile. It would, in our opinion, be premature to decide the point at this stage, and if it becomes necessary to decide the point it should be decided in execution proceedings as was done in A. I. R. 1939 Nag. 287.[6]

[8] The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 830 of 1944, Decided on 31-10-1947, from appellate decree of Addl. District Judge, Buldana, D/- 15-8-1944.

Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 41 — Alienation of minor's property by mother acting as de facto guardian — Suit by minor for possession on ground that mother had no power to alienate his share — Plaintiff can be required to refund so much of consideration as has benefited his estate.

One S who was a Mahomedan executed a deed of transfer of a field in favour of his wife D in the hope of defeating the claims of his creditors. The deed was however merely a nominal transaction and the title in the field did not pass to D Subsequently S died and his creditors obtained a decree against his legal representatives and attached the field. In order to pay off these debts D purporting to act on behalf of herself and as de facto guardian of her minor children executed a sale deed of the field. The minor children brought a suit for possession of their share in the field on the ground that D had no power to sell their share in the field :

Judgment. — The field in suit, survey No. 29 in mauza Palaskhed Nago in the Buldana district, with an area of 25 acres, 11 gunthas and an assessment of Rs. 31-2-0, was given by Government to Shaikh Hyder in 1927-28 as a reward for military service. Shaikh Hyder became indebted and on 9th September 1931 he executed a document, Ex. D-1, called a mehrnama by which he purported to transfer this field to his wife Dulanbi for a consideration of Rs 600 made up of Rs. 125 said to be due to her on account of mehr and Rs. 475 said to have been borrowed from her and spent on improving the field. Shortly afterwards Shaikh Hyder died. His creditors, who had obtained decrees either against him or against his legal representatives, attached the field, and eventually on 24th February 1937 Dulanbi, purporting to act on behalf of herself and as guardian of the minor children of Shaikh Hyder and herself, executed a sale deed of this field in favour of the defendant Gondulal for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 1500. Gondulal, defendant 1 was placed in possession, and he transferred a life interest in this field to his wife Godavaribai, defendant 2. The present suit was brought by the surviving son and daughter of Shaikh Hyder for possession of their share in this field on the contention that Dulanbi had no power to sell their share in the field and that they were not bound by the sale. The lower Courts held that the plaintiffs were not bound by the sale and were entitled to a decree for possession of their share.

[2] The first question is whether Dulanbi became the sole owner of the field by virtue of the document executed in her favour on 9-9-1931. It is not disputed that this document was executed by Shaikh Hyder in the hope of defeating or delaying the claims of his creditors, but the question is whether he intended to transfer the field to his wife or whether it was a purely nominal transaction intended to transfer no title but merely to deceive his creditors. Such a transaction may be nominal and fraudulent or it may be fraudulent only. Both the lower Courts have held that this transaction was a merely nominal transaction. The only occasion on which it ever appears to have been acted on was on 1-3-1933 when Dulanbi executed a mortgage deed (Ex. D-2) in favour of Vithal for an ostensible consideration of Rs. 300, of which Rs 200 was required to repay a taccavi loan to Government. In that document she stated that this property had been given to her in mehr on 9-9-1931. On no other occasion, however, was it acted on. When the field was attached in execution against the legal representatives of Shaikh Hyder no objection was ever preferred by Dulanbi that the field was hers alone, and when she executed the sale deed of 24-2-1937 in order to pay off these debts she executed it on behalf of herself and the minor children. In these circumstances the lower Courts were justified in holding that the transaction of 9-9-1931 was a merely nominal transaction and that the title in the field did not thereby pass to Dulanbi.

[3] It is admitted that Dulanbi was merely a de facto guardian of the minor children and had no right to sell their share in the field. It therefore follows that the minors are not bound by the sale. It is admitted that plaintiff 1, Abdul Sattar, is entitled to 0-8-6 (2/3 share) and plaintiff 2 Hafizabi to 0-4-3 (1/3 share), and a decree for possession of these shares, totalling 0-12-10, was therefore rightly passed in their favour.

[4] The question remains, however, whether the plaintiff should be required to refund so much of the consideration as has benefited their estate. That the Court has power to order this was so held in A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 722,[1] A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 468[2] and 7 Lah. 35.[3] The learned Additional District Judge doubted whether the law was correctly laid down in these cases and referred to the decision in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 553.[4] That, however, was an entirely different case. There the suit was brought by a mortgagee to recover the money due on an invalid mortgage, and it was held that the Court had no power to order persons not bound by the mortgage to make a refund. Here the plaintiffs are suing in effect for a declaration that the sale deed is not binding on them, and in such cases there is the above authority for holding that the Court has power to order that they should refund so much of the consideration that has benefited their estate.

[5] The ostensible consideration of Rs. 1,500 consisted, according to the recitals in the sale deed dated 23-2-1937, of Rs. 1,000 payable to Vithal, Rs. 180 payable to Shaikh Kalu, Rs. 240 previously advanced in cash, and Rs. 80 paid in cash at the time of registration. The mortgage of 1-3-1933 for Rs. 300 had been executed in favour of this Vithal, and there is an endorsement on the mortgage deed that Rs. 710 was paid by Gondulal in full satisfaction of this mortgage on 1-3-1937 and that a further sum of Rs. 290 was paid by him in satisfaction of some promissory note. The mortgage carried interest at 2 p. c. p. m., but on 1-3-1937 the Central Provinces Reduction of Interest Act was in force, though it was ignored. The lower appellate Court held that it was very doubtful whether anything like Rs. 1,000 was in fact paid to Vithal, who is a nephew of Gondulal, or whether Rs. 240 said to have been paid in cash before the registration was actually paid to Dulanbi. It is agreed that the debts binding on the estate which were paid off by means of this sale deed amounted to about Rs. 500 and the share of these debts for which the plaintiffs would have been liable was about Rs. 400. As against this the defendants have been in possession of the field for 10 years and they probably obtained the field fairly cheaply. They will continue to be entitled to Dulanbi's 0-3-2 share, and taking all these circumstances into consideration I do not think that equity requires that the plaintiffs should be ordered to make any refund.

[6] The appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 139 of 1944, Decided on 15-12-1947, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Saugor, D/- 24-4-1944.

(a) C. P. & Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 11 (1)—Mortgage-debt—Final decree for sale — 'Debt' does not cease to exist — Debt Relief Court has jurisdiction to prepare scheme for payment even after such decree.

A mortrage-debt does not cease to be a debt within the meaning of S. 2 (d) merely by reason of a final decree for sale. The Debt Relief Court, therefore, has jurisdiction to conciliate the mortgage-debt even after a final decree for sale has been passed and prepare a scheme for its repayment under S. 11 (1 : Misc. S. A. No. 155 of 1943, Foll. ; 31 A. I. R. 1944 Nag. 289, Ref. [Para 3]

(b) C. P. & Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 11 (1) — Conditional scheme for repayment — Debt Relief Court is competent to prepare such scheme.

There is nothing in the provisions of the Act to prohibit the Debt Relief Court from preparing a conditional scheme of repayment of the debt. [Para 4]

(c) C. P. & Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 13 (1) and (2)—Conditional scheme for repayment — Breach of condition — Scheme ceases to exist — Creditor need not apply under S. 13 (1)—Certificate under S. 13 (2) is not required

The provisions of S. 13 (1) would come into operation only on the basis of a subsisting scheme of payment, made by the Debt Relief Court ; but if the scheme ceases to have any legal effect by reason of a breach of the condition precedent attached to the scheme, the scheme no longer exists and in such a case it would not be neceesary for the creditor to apply to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13 (1) of the Act. It is, therefore, quite competent for the creditor to directly approach the civil Court and ask it to carry on the proceedings from the stage at which they were stayed, at the instance of the Debt Relief Court, to their legal termination. A certificate under S. 13 (2) is not required. [Para 6]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 — Mortgage decree for sale — Minor sons of mortgagor not parties to those proceedings — Omission to make sons parties to execution proceedings held, in the absence of prejudice not sufficent to challenge execution proceedings.

In a mortgage suit, the mortgagor's two minor sons were not made parties. After a final decree for sale was passed, the judgment-debtor took proceedings before the Debt Relief Court. To these proceedings, he joined his sons as parties. A conditional scheme for payment of the martgage debt was drawn. The judgment-debtor having broken the condition attached to the scheme, the decree-bolder applied to the civil Court for execution and the property was sold. The sons were not joined as parties in the execution proceedings :

Held, that in the absence of any prejudice to the merits of the case or to the interests of the sons, they had no legal right to challege the execution proceedings and auction sale simply on the ground that they were not joined as parties in the execution proceedigs. [Para 7]

R. J. Bhave — for Appellants.

A. R. Halwe; and P. R. Padhye — for Respondents No. 4 ; and Nos. 1 to 3 respectively.

Judgment. — Respondents 1 and 2, Laxmichand and Dulichand, are the decree-holders. They obtained a final decree for sale against respondent 4, Govind Rao Harshey, in Civil Suit No. 3A of 1937, in respect of the mortgaged property in suit and they started execution of the final decree for sale. In the meantime respondent 4 and his two infant sons Sadashiv Rao and Ramchandra Rao, now appellants, applied to the Debt Relief Court for settlement of the debts under the final decree for sale under S. 6 (1), C. P. & Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1939 (14 [XIV] of 1939). The decree-holders were joined as parties. The scheme for payment of the mortgage-debt that was ultimately prepared by the Debt Relief Court was subject to a certain condition and it was laid down that in case of breach of that condition the scheme should cease to have effect and the whcle claim would become recoverable. The decree-holders thereafter applied to the civil Court for sale of the mortgaged property on the ground that the judgment-debtors had broken the condition that was attached to the scheme and that they were, therefore, entitled to recover the whole amount by way of execution. The final decree for sale was, therefore, executed, the property was put to sale and it was bought by the auction-purchaser, Mahila Vidyalaya, Saugor, which is represented by respondent 3, Gopal Rao Mutatkar.

[2] Thereafter the appellants came forward and applied to the civil Court on 28-9-1943 for setting aside the execution proceedings, including the auction sale, on the ground that they were illegal and without jurisdiction. Their application was dismissed by the execution Court on 13-12-1943. On appeal by the appellants, the learned First Additional District Judge of Saugor dismissed the appeal and upheld the order of the execution Court. The appellants have, therefore, preferred this miscellaneous (second) appeal.

[3] The first appellate Court held on the authority of the ruling reported in I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 357[1] that the Debt Relief Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the debtor's application for conciliation of the mortgage debt on the ground that it had ceased to be a debt by reason of the final decree for sale. That finding is now untenable, for the simple reason that the case relied upon, has since been overruled by the Full Bench case in I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 568.[2] I have already held in Misc. S. A. No. 155 of 1943[3] that the mortgage debt does not cease to be a debt within the meaning of S. 2 (d), C. P. & Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act 1939, merely by reason of a final decree for sale. I have already stated my reasons in that case as to why a final decree for sale cannot be treated on the same footing as a final decree for foreclosure. For the reasons given in that decision I hold that the Debt Relief Court had jurisdiction to conciliate the mortgage debt and prepare a scheme for its repayment under S. 11 (1), C. P. & Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act 1939.

[4] The next question that calls for decision is whether it was competent for the Debt Relief Court to attach any condition to the scheme, that it was called upon to prepare for payment of debts under S. 11 (1) of the Act. So far as I can see, there is nothing in the provisions of the C P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1939 (14 of 1939) to prohibit the Debt Relief Court from preparing a conditional scheme of repayment of the debt. I, therefore, agree with the lower Courts in holding that the Debt Relief Court was quite competent to attach the condition.

[5] It was found by the execution Court that the judgment debtor Govind Rao Harshey had committed defaults in respect of the condition attached to the scheme prepared by the Debt Relief Court, and this finding was not presumably challenged by the appellants before the first appellate Court. Since the judgment-debtor Govind Rao Harshey failed to carry out the condition precedent, there is no doubt in my mind that the scheme prepared by the Debt Relief Court ceased to have effect and that the whole claim became recoverable.

[6] In the circumstances of the case I do not think that the provisions of S 13 (1), C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1939, would come into operation I think that these provisions would come into operation only on the basis of a subsisting scheme of payment, made by the Debt Relief Court; but if the scheme ceases to have any legal effect by reason of a breach of the condition precedent, the scheme no longer exists and in such a case it would not be necessary for the creditor to apply to the Deputy Commissioner, under S. 13 (1) of the Act. I, therefore, agree with the learned Judge in the Court below in holding that it was quite competent for the creditor to directly approach the civil Court and ask it to carry on the proceedings from the stage, at which they were stayed, at the instance of the Debt Relief Court, to their legal termination. The contention of the appellants that the civil Court could not execute the decree, in the absence of a certificate under S. 13 (2) of the Act, from the Deputy Commissioner concerned has, therefore, no force.

[7] It has been strenuously contended by the learned counsel for the appellants that the civil Court could not execute the final decree for sale as the appellants (the minor sons of the judgment-debtor Govind Rao Harshey) were not joined in the execution proceedings. It has been argued that they were parties in the proceedings before the Debt Relief Court and also parties to the conditional scheme that was prepared by that Court under S. 11 (1), C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1939. It has been urged that that scheme having superseded the decree of the civil Court, the minor appellants were necessary parties to the execution proceedings and inasmuch as they were not made so by the decree-holders, all the execution proceedings, including the auction-sale, were illegal and without jurisdiction. I do not think that there is any force in this contention also. It is admitted that the appellants were not parties to the mortgage suit, nor were they parties either to the preliminary decree or the final decree for sale. It cannot be disputed that they were fully represented by their father (the judgment-debtor Govind Rao Harshey) in the suit before the civil Court. It has not been alleged much less proved that the father had any interest adverse to that of his two infant sons and that he could not, therefore, represent them properly in the civil suit. As a matter of fact the sons-appellants had no locus standi in the execution proceedings, for the simple reason that they were not parties anywhere in the suit itself, out of which the execution proceedings arose. I really fail to understand why the father chose to join them as parties in his application made to the Debt Relief Court under S. 6 (1), C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1939. I do not know whether that was accidental or deliberate. It was obviously pointless to join the two minor sons in that application as the judgment-debtor Govind Rao Harshey was their father and manager of the family and in that capacity Govind Rao Harshey did and could represent them effectively in all the proceedings before the Court. It is, therefore, idle to contend that they have any legal right to challenge the execution proceedings and the auction-sale simply on the ground that they were not joined as parties in the execution proceedings. The learned counsel for the appellants has not been able to point out to me how their non-joinder has prejudiced the merits of the case or their own interest. It seems clear to my mind that this technical objection is absolutely flimsy and it has been deliberately put forward, evidently at the instance of the father, with a view to set aside the auction-sale and recover back the mortgaged property if possible.

[8] In the result the appeal before me, fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 75.

Judgment. – This is a first appeal against the judgment and decree passed by Mr. W. S. Tak, Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore, in Civil Suit NO. 6A of 1939, decided on 27 3-1941.

[2] This was a suit under S. 92/93, Civil P. C., inter alia for the removal of the appellant from the trusteeship of a public temple Shri Jagannathji of mouza Kailwara Khurd, S. NO. 312, Tahsil Murwara, district Jubbulpore.

[3] The suit was brought by the plaintiffs (respondents) after obtaining the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner, Jubbulpore, on 9 9-1938 (Case NO. 4/9 of 1937-38 XXXIII VII). The claim of the plaintiffs was decreed.

[4] The case must fail on a preliminary point viz., that the previous sanction of the Provincial Government was not taken by the learned Deputy Commissioner as required by S. 93 of the Code. In 53 ALL. 910[1] at p. 913 their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the words "previous sanction of the Local Government" (now Provincial Government) meant that there must be a previous sanction by the Local Government in every suit. This means that a general sanction is not sufficient and previous sanction must be obtained for each case. Commenting on this decision Mulla in his Civil Procedure Code (Edn. 1941) p. 347 says :

"The effect of this decision is that the Collector or other officer appointed must in every case obtain the sanction of the Local Government before instituting a suit or giving his consent to the institution of a suit. The previous practice of Local Governments had been to give previous sanction generally and not in respect of each particular case and, therefore, the Public Suits Validation Act, 1932 (11 [XI] of 1932) was passed to validate pending suits filed under the previous practice. The Act also provides for the restoration of suits and appeals dismissed after 30-11-1931 (the date of the Privy Council decision) for want of sanction of the Local Government, on application made within six months of the commencement of the Act, i. e. 8 4-1932. In the case of suits already filed under the previous practice, it is not necessary to obtain the sanction of the Local Government."

The suit was filed in 1939 long after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council and therefore the validating Act does not apply to the present case. No such sanction by the Provincial Government has been brought to our notice and it is obvious that none had been obtained. A sanction of this type has to be strictly proved because in the absence of a proper sanction the suit is without jurisdiction. We are not prepared to draw a presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, that all due formalities of law must have been complied with. The case reported in 15 Lah. 836[2] does not apply in this context. In that case presumption was drawn about some procedure in the matter of posting of notices. The case is easily distinguishable because a sanction must be strictly proved.

[5] Learned counsel for the respondents relied on I.L.R. (1943) ALL. 112.[3] In that case, the question whether the Legal Remembrancer was a person appointed under S. 93, Civil P. C., was not gone into because there was no plea. It was presumed therein that the law had been complied with and the matter was treated as concluded on the decree being passed without objection. With all due respect we do not consider the matter concluded in the present case. Though there is no plea the plaintiffs can at any time be challenged to prove the sanction and it is not open to us to act on presumptions when patently there is no previous sanction. In 58 Cal. 301[4] it was held that there can be no investigation in execution proceedings into title on which the decree was based. This case is not in point. In 17 N.L.R. 37[5] one of the persons in whose favour sanction was given died, as also the trustee against whom the sanction had been obtained. It was held that the sanction was not exhausted. In 55 Cal. 519[6] compromises in S. 92 cases were discussed and in 42 Cal. 914[7] an omission to appeal from a preliminary decree was held fatal to an appeal from the final decree. These three cases are not relevant.

[6] In A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 28[8] Staples A. J. C. held that a previous suit, concluded without objection in respect of sanction, could not be said to be without jurisdiction and the bar of res judicata applied. We do not propose to examine the case because here an appeal is pending which is a continuation of the suit and the objection as to jurisdiction must be given its full effect. There is no question of res judicata.

[7] We accordingly hold that the suit was without jurisdiction and dismiss it. The appeal succeeds and is allowed. Since this objection was not taken by the appellant either in this Court or in the Court below, we make no order as to costs in this appeal and parties will bear their own costs. For the same reason we do not see any reason to alter the order regarding costs in the lower Court. Ordinarily costs should follow the event but in the special circumstances of this case we decline to interfere with the order of the lower Court.

Second Appeal No. 366 of 1943, Decided on 6-10-1947, from Appellate Decree of Addl, Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 16-4-1943.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Bar of res judicata extends to facts and grounds for decision.

The doctrine of res judicata applies not only to the actual decision in the case but also to the facts and grounds for that judgment pleaded by the parties. Anything which is admitted and which is fundamental to the decision of the earlier suit is also part of the res judicata created by the judgment : (1926) A. C. 155, Ref. [Para 18]

Annotation : ('44 Com.) Civil P. C., S. 11, N. 1, Pt. 13.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11—Plea of res judicata — Pleadings in earlier suit need not be set out at length — It is permissible to Court to look into pleadings in former suit.

In pleading res judicata it is not necessary to set out the pleadings in the earlier suit at length. In determining the question whether the issue which it is sought to raise now was fairly raised between the parties in the former suit, it is permissible to look to the pleadings : (1885) 29 Ch. D. 448; 8 A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 699 and 5 Mad. 239, Rel. on. [Para 21]

For this purpose, the proper course is to produce the written statements in the earlier suit : 29 A. I. R. 1942 All. 122, Rel. on. [Para 22]

Annotation : ('44 Com.) Civil P. C., S. 11, N. 6.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6 Rr. 2 and 17—Estoppel by judgment — Plea of, should not be ruled out when there is material on record to sustain it — Suit based on plea of estoppel by judgment — Amendment into plea of estoppel in pais should be allowed.

A plea of estoppel should not ordinarily be ruled out if there is material on the record sufficient to sustain the plea. A liberal view of pleadings on such points should be taken. It is true that personal estoppel is not necessarily a question of policy but it is largely so and if the estoppel is apparent, Courts should be reluctant to disallow the plea so that a party may be allowed conveniently to change his ground. A plea of estoppel if it is warranted by the facts proved and admitted, can always be taken even if those facts have not been specifically pleaded : 17 A. I. R. 1930 Rang. 265, Ref. [Para 23]

A plea of estoppel in pais based on pleadings is merely ancillary to the main allegation of estoppel by judgment. In such a case it is the duty of the Court to allow plaintiff to amplify his pleadings so as to embrace all aspects of estoppel especially where the estoppel by judgment is pleaded before the period of limitation had run out and the grounds on which the earlier judgment proceeded was mentioned. To do otherwise would be to allow the defendant to take undue advantage of the technicalities of law to perpetrate an abuse of the process of Court. [Para 24]

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. M. B. Paranjpe, Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 3-A of 1943, decided on 16-4-1943.

[2] The plaintiffs Kheoraj and his two brothers are the appellants in this appeal and their suit has been ordered to be dismissed by the trial Judge which decision has been upheld by the appellate Judge.

[3] The facts are that field survey NO. 45, area 9 .acres 25 gunthas in mouza Mangruli, pargane Varud, taluq Morsi, was gifted to Kheoraj (appellant 3) by Zingu and Pandu (appellants 1 and 2) on 11-6-1938. This gift deed is EX. P-11. The field being in possession of Champat (respondent 2) the suit was for possession. With Champat, was joined one Mahadeo s/o Parasramji who sold the said field by a registered sale deed on 7-1-1939, to Champat. This Champat pleaded that Mahadeo's father Parasramji had bought this field from one Mt. Bahena widow of Sakharam by a registered sale deed dated 15-3-1909.

[4] To understand further facts it is necessary to give the genealogical tree of the family of Sakharam. According to the plaintiffs it is as follows:

JANAJI

Krishnaji — Gundaji

Rajmal (d.1893) — Sakharam (d.1901) — Dcorao

=1. Mt. Sayatri (d.1929) — =Mt. Bahena (d. 1925) — Jhingoo (plff. 1) — Pandoo (plff. 2)

=2. Mt. Rayaja (1896)

Kaushalya (1926)

Vinayak — Mahadeo — Shanti — Mani.

Sakharam had a daughter by name Kaushalya. On 2-8-1933, Kheoraj (respondent 1) and another (Madanlal) had taken a gift of the field from the children of Kaushalya and had brought a Suit NO. 139-A of 1937, decided on 10-3-1938, but the suit was dismissed. That suit was against Mahadeo (respondent 1 here).

[5] The plaintiffs in that suit pleaded that Rajmal and Sakharam were real brothers and formed a joint Hindu family. After Rajmal's death in 1893 Sakharam succeeded to the whole of the property including the field in this suit. After Sakharam's death his widow Bahena succeeded to the property though both Sayatri and she remained in possession of the field. Bahena died about the year 1925 and Sayatri in 1929. Bahena's daughter Kaushalya died also in 1926. After Bahena's death, Kaushalya, it was alleged, succeeded to the estate as the daughter of the last male holder. After Kaushalya's death the field was gifted by the children of Kaushalya (through guardian father) to Kheoraj and Madanlal on 2-8-1933. Kheoraj (and Madanlal), therefore, claimed possession of the field from Mahadeo (respondent 1) who founded his claim to the field upon a sale deed in favour of his father Parashramji by Sayatri and Bahena. The plaintiffs in that suit alleged that the two widows had only a life interest and could not therefore transfer any interest beyond their lives.

[6] Mahadeo while admitting the relationship denied that Rajmal and Sakharam were joint and averred that the field belonged to Rajmal alone and after the co-widow Rayaja's death the surviving widow Sayatri sold the field to Parashramji, the father of the defendant, on 15-3-1909. It was further alleged that the signatures of Bahena and of one Udebhan (father-in-law and guardian of Kaushalya who was then a minor) were obtained in token of their consent though only by way of caution.

[7] Civil Suit NO. 139-A of 1937 was decreed in favour of Mahadeo and against Kheoraj and Madanlal, and it was held that the suit field belonged to Rajmal absolutely and on his death it passed into the possession of his widows Rayaja and Mt. Sayatri and that on the death of these widows the reversioner was Jhingoo (plaintiff 1). The judgment in Civil Suit NO. 139-A of 1937 is EX. P-1.

[8] Kheoraj, the unsuccessful plaintiff, did not stop there. He took a gift deed from Jhingoo and Pandu (EX. P-11) on 11-6-1938, and brought the present suit. Along with him he joined Jhingoo and Pandu who claimed in the alternative that possession be ordered to be given to them in case the gift deed for some reason was found defective.

[9] On this claim being put forward Champat as the vendee from Mahadeo took up the position, contrary to the pleas of Mahadeo in the first suit and the decision therein, that Rajmal and Sakharam formed a joint Hindu family and the revresioners after Bahena's death were her children and not Jhingoo and Pandu. In effect he took exactly the stand which had been successfully denied by his predecessor-in-title in the earlier suit.

[10] Kheoraj was naturally taken aback and asked for amendment of his pleadings by an application dated 26-11-1940. He set out the history of the earlier suit and stated as follows :

"It has been decided therein on 10-3-1938, A. D. that the field in suit belonged to Rajmal exclusively and on his death (it) passed into the possession of his widows, Mt. Rayaji and Mt. Sawitri as heirs and that the plaintiff 1, Jhingu son of Deo Rao was proper and legal next heir, i. e. a reversioner, of the deceased Rajmal on the death of his widows. The grounds on which the decision was given are all binding on the defendants in this suit. Sakharam's right, if any, has also come to an end also because of the adverse possession of Mt. Rayaji and Mt. Sawitri for over 12 years.

The plaintiff through his apprehension did not take these pleas in the original plaint as this suit was first brought against defendant 1 only who was a party to Suit No. 139-A/37 and plaintiffs thought that defendant 1 would not take the same pleas against this suit, which were already decided in the previous litigation."

[11] He also produced certified copies of the judgment in the previous suit, EX. P-1, two written statements EX. P-2, dated 10th March 1938 and EX. P 4, dated 27th November 1937, and an oral statement dated 2nd December 1937, the last three being made by Mahadeo. This amendment was allowed by the trial Judge. Defendant 2 Champat on 24th January 1941 made an oral statement wherein he admitted that these statements were made but he denied their truth. On these amendments the Court framed three specific issues which may be quoted here.

"Issues	Finding
1. Did defendant 1 Mahadeo plead in the former Suit No. 139-A/37, exactly as pleaded by plaintiffs in this suit?	Yes.
2 If so, is it not an admission binding against defendant 2 Champat, his successor-in-title after such admission?	Yes.
3. If so, is defendant 2 not estopped by such admissions from denying the allegations in the plaint. and the reversionary title of plaintiffs 1, 2 to the suit field?"	Estopped."

[12] Parties led evidence and the trial Judge decreed the plaintiffs' case. An appeal was filed against this judgment and decree (Civil Appeal NO. 9-A of 1942) and the Additional District Judge (Mr. G. L. Yadu) by his judgment dated 31st October 1942, set aside the decree and remanded the case. His finding was that the plea of estoppel was not raised by the plaintiff and hence no decision could be given. His reasons can best be stated in his own words:

"Paragraph 4 of the judgment of the lower Court is reproduced below:

'In this suit the plaintiffs had pleaded facts exactly as pleaded by defendant 1 Mahadeo, in the former Suit No. 139-A of 1937. Defendant 2 denied this allegation as not being a party to that suit, and he also denied that such 'admission' could operate either as res judicata or could create estoppel against him.'

This observation of the lower Court is not borne out by the record inasmuch as no such plea was raised by the plaintiffs, much less was it denied by defendant 2. The plea referred to in the first sentence of the passage quoted above was put into the mouth of the plaintiffs by the lower Court evidently from a mere perusal of the certified copies (Ex. P-2 and Ex. P-4) of defendant 1's written statement in the previous suit. It is not for the Court to assume a pleading which has not been raised by the party concerned."

[13] The remand order appears to fall within O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., because no questions on the merits of the claim were gone into, the decision being based on the plea of res judicata. No appeal was filed against the order of remand under O. 43, R. 1 (u), Civil P. C., and therefore the order of remand cannot be questioned because of the bar contained in S. 105(2), Civil P. C.

[14] While remanding the case the learned Additional District Judge observed as follows:

"The findings, judgment and decree of the lower Court are therefore hereby set aside and the suit remanded to the lower Court for a fresh decision according to law, with advertence to the above remarks, after framing fresh and proper issues and recording further evidence, if adduced. In case the plaintiffs apply for amendment of pleadings so as to raise a plea of estoppel now, it would be for the lower Court to decide whether it should be allowed with due regard to the law of limitation."

[15] On the re-opening of the case the plaintiff filed on 20th July 1942 an application praying for the amendment of his pleadings. This application was opposed by the defendants. The learned trial Judge (Mr. L. N. Pathak) by an order dated 4th September 1942 dismissed this application. The reason given by the learned Judge was that the plea of estoppel was not raised to start with, though it could have been raised and as the plea of estoppel raised by way of an amendment was made after the limitation for the suit had run out it could not be allowed to be raised. In support of this order reliance was placed upon two passages in Sir Gilbert Stone's 'Pleadings' at pp. 213 and 216.

[16] On 8th December 1942 the learned Judge passed a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The findings in this suit were exactly the reverse of those given in the earlier suit though the matter related to the same field and the parties were the same.

[17] The plaintiffs appealed against this judgment and decree but the lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal confirming the judgment and the decree of the trial Judge. Against this decree the present appeal has been filed.

[18] The most important question is one of amendment. The learned trial Judge held that the amendment if allowed would alter the nature of the pleadings and this could not be allowed after the period of limitation had run out. The learned Judge said:

"I may at once say that the plaintiffs had never taken the plea of estoppel nor did they allege facts which constitute estoppel in the plaint. The remand order also confirms this finding. Thus I find that the plea now raised is a new plea which was not raised in the plaint, though it could have been raised."

Commenting thereafter on the delay that had taken place the learned Judge went on to say:

"The plaintiffs have pleaded res judicata (estoppel by record) and they cannot be allowed to plead estoppel in pais after the period of limitation"

There seems to have been a misapprehension on the part of the plaintiffs that they could only found their case on the plea of estoppel in pais. The doctrine of res judicata applies not only to the actual decision in the case but also to the facts and grounds for that judgment pleaded by the parties. Anything which is admitted and which is fundamental to the decision of the earlier suit is also part of the res judicata created by the judgment. In 1926 A. C. 155,[1] at p.

165, Lord Shaw delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in an appeal from Australia stated the principle in these words:

"Very numerous authorities were referred to. In the opinion of the Lordships it is settled, first, that the admission of a fact fundamental to the decision arrived at cannot be withdrawn and a fresh litigation started, with a view of obtaining another judgment upon a different assumption of fact; secondly, the same principle applies not only to an erroneous admission of a fundamental fact, but to an erroneous assumption as to the legal quality of that fact. Parties are not permitted to begin fresh litigations because of new views they may entertain of the law of the case, or new versions which they present as to what should be a proper apprehension by the Court of the legal result either of the construction of the documents or the weight of certain circumstances. If this were permitted litigation would have no end, except when legal ingenuity is exhausted. It is a principle of law that this cannot be permitted, and there is abundant authority reiterating that principle. Thirdly, the same principle — namely, that of setting to rest rights of litigants, applies to the case where a point, fundamental to the decision, taken or assumed by the plaintiff and traversable by the defendant, has not been traversed. In that case also a defendant is bound by the judgment although it may be true enough that subsequent light or ingenuity might suggest some traverse which had not been taken. The same principle of setting parties' rights to rest applies and estoppel occurs."

[19] In this case their Lordships cited with approval the observations of Lord Ellenborough C. J. in (1803) 3 East 346.[2]

"A finding upon title in trespass not only operates as a bar to the future recovery of damages for a trespass founded on the same injury, but also operates by way of estoppel to any action for an injury to the same supposed right of possession .... And it is not the recovery, but the matter alleged by the party, and upon which the recovery proceeds, which creates the estoppel. The recovery of itself in an action of trespass is only a bar to the future recovery of damages for the same injury; but the estoppel precludes parties and privies from contending to the contrary of that point, or matter of fact, which having been once distinctly put in issue by them, or by those to whom they are privy in estate or law, has been, on such issue joined, solemnly found against them."

[20] In summing up the law on the subject it was said by Lord Shaw:

"It is seen from this citation of authority that if in any Court of competent jurisdiction a decision is reached, a party is estopped from questioning it in a new legal proceeding. But the principle also extends to any point, whether of assumption or admission, which was in substance the ratio of and fundamental to the decision. The rule on this subject was set forth in the leading case in (1843) 3 Hare 100[3] at p. 114 by Wigram V. C. as follows: 'I believe I state the rule of the Court correctly when I say, that where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward, only because they have, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time.' This authority has been frequently referred to and followed, and is settled law".

[21] In pleading res judicata it is not necessary to set out the pleadings in the earlier suit at length. The leading authority on the subject is (1885) 29 Ch. D. 448.[4] In that case Pearson J. said that in determining the question whether the issue which it is sought to raise now was fairly raised between the parties in the former suit, it is permissible to look to the pleadings. This case has been applied in India in A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 699[5] at p. 701 and in that case it was held that it is permissible to look to the pleadings in the case. To the same effect is the ruling in 5 Mad. 229.[6] In that suit the facts were as follows:

"In 1870 the plaintiffs sued to redeem a mortgage of certain lands from the defendant's predecessors-in-title. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs' equity of redemption had been sold in execution of a decree to A. B. The plaintiffs having repurchased the equity of redemption from A. B. brought a second suit to redeem the lands in the defendant's possession."

It was held that the question whether the equity of redemption of the lands in suit had been sold to A. B. was res judicata and could not be reagitated by the defendant on the ground that the plaintiffs were litigating under a different title in the former suit This was a case of res judicata on the facts pleaded being applied to a defendant. This case has never been doubted.

[22] In the present case the plaintiff Kheoraj after his first amendment pleaded not only the bar of res judicata by the earlier judgment but has also produced the written pleadings of Mahadeo. He must therefore be held to have relied upon the admissions in those pleadings and also to plead estoppel. Though in some cases the statement as to the pleadings of the parties, contained in the judgment of the Court is considered sufficient (see the authorities cited by me before) the proper course is to produce the written statements: see A. I. R. 1942 ALL. 122.[7] Since this was done in this case and the defendant Champat admitted that such statements were in fact made by Mahadeo, his predecessor-in-title, nothing more need be said as to the correct procedure. I am, therefore, satisfied that the plaintiff had relied on these pleadings in the first suit as a bar.

[23] Now a plea of estoppel should not ordinarily be ruled out if there is material on the record sufficient to sustain the plea. A liberal view of pleadings on such points should be taken. It is true that personal estoppel is not necessarily a question of policy but it is largely so and if the estoppel is apparent, Courts should be reluctant to disallow the plea so that a party may be allowed conveniently to change his ground. A plea of estoppel if it is warranted by the facts proved and admitted, can always be taken even if those facts have not been specifically pleaded: see 8 Rang. 223.[8]

[24] In the present case estoppel was pleaded by way of res judicata but stress was laid on the ground on which the earlier decision proceeded. This was understood to be a plea of estoppel. The remand order may have meant that an estoppel in pais was not specifically pleaded. Whether that decision was right or wrong is not now open but the essence of the new plea was present in the first amendment. In my opinion, the two Courts below have taken a very narrow view of the law of pleadings and their amendment. The structure of pleadings should not be stressed too strictly as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1934 P. C. 130[9] at p. 132 where sufficient notice has been given to the other side. In my opinion there was fair notice to the defendant when the judgment and pleadings in the earlier suit were filed and were specifically relied on. A plea of estoppel in pais based on pleadings is merely ancillary to the main allegation of estoppel by judgment. In such a case it was the duty of the Court to allow plaintiff to amplify his pleadings so as to embrace all aspects of estoppel especially as the estoppel by judgment was pleaded before the period of limitation had run out and mentioned the grounds on which the earlier judgment proceeded. To do otherwise, in this case, would be to allow the defendant to take undue advantage of the technicalities of law to perpetrate an abuse of the process of Court.

[25] In my opinion, therefore, the amendment was wrongly disallowed. I set aside the decrees of the two Courts below and remand the case for further trial. The plaintiff-appellant will be allowed to amend his pleadings suitably. The trial Court will limit such pleadings to a plea of estoppel based on facts pleaded in the earlier suit and no more. The trial Court will write a fresh judgment and dispose of the case according to law.

[26] Costs of this appeal will be the costs in the suit and will abide the event.

Kashirao Panduji—Defendant — Applicant v. Ramchandra Balaji — Plaintiff — Non-applicant.

Civil Revn. No. 313 of 1945, Decided on 2-9-1946, from order of 2nd Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 5-4-1945.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 7 —Good cause—It is not same thing as sufficient cause — Illness established by doctor's certificate is good cause.

There is a distinction between 'good cause' required under O. 9, R. 7 and 'sufficient cause' required by O. 9, R. 13. There may be a good cause for the non-appearance though not sufficient cause. The applicant's illness as prima facie established by the doctor's certificate is a 'good cause' for setting aside the ex parte order, subject to such terms as the Court may think fit to impose. Rejection of such an application on the ground of absence of affidavit in support of applicant's illness is not sound and judicial exercise of discretion vested in Court inasmuch as the doctor's certificate is much better evidence than an affidavit: Case law referred. [Para 11]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 13—Scope—Application under O. 9, R. 7 rejected — Court can still set aside ex parte decree.

The Court has jurisdiction under O. 9, R. 13 to set aside an ex parte decree notwithstanding the fact that under O. 9, R. 7 it had refused to hear the defendant: 8 Cal. 272, Followed. [Para 15]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—Other remedy open —Rule as to non-interference is not rigid.

The rule as to non-interference in revisions when another remedy is open is not rigid. Each case must be considered on its own merits: 33 A. I. R. 1946 Nag. 393, Rel. on. [Para 16]

Order. — This is a revision by the defendant (applicant) from an appellate order upholding the order of the 1st Court refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him on 26-10-1944 in Civil Suit No. 265 of 1944. The relevant facts are these :

[2] The first hearing of Civil Suit No. 265 of 1944 was on 11-9-1944 and the summons was served on the defendant (applicant) on 21-5-1944. The defendant was absent at the hearing and the Court deciding to proceed ex parte against him fixed the case for ex parte evidence on 26-10-1944.

[3] On 18-9 1944 the defendant was granted a certificate by the doctor under whose treatment he then was that the defendant was suffering for the last two months from bleeding piles and being very anaemic on that account was unable to move about. The defendant resides in the interior of the tahsil some miles away from Daryapur. On 22-9-1944 he applied to the Court for setting aside the ex parte order passed against him and produced the doctor's certificate in support of the application. The application was rejected summarily the same day and the order of rejection runs as follows :

"....Application is not supported by affidavit. It does not disclose reason sufficient to set aside ex parte order. Defendant was served in last May and with little diligence he could have obtained adjournment. Application is summarily rejected with costs."

[4] On 26-10-1944, ex parte evidence of the plaintiff was recorded in the absence of the defendant and ex parte decree was passed. The plaintiff had summoned three witnesses for the hearing but he examined none but himself and closed his case.

[5] On 7th November 1944 the defendant filed his application to set aside the ex parte decree passed against him supported by an affidavit and the doctor's certificate (the same which was produced before). This application was opposed by the plaintiff (non-applicant). It was dismissed on 20th January 1945 summarily and the operative part of the order runs as under :

"On 22nd September 1944 an application to set aside the ex parte proceedings had been filed. The case came up for final disposal on 26th October 1944. No appearance was put on 26th October 1944 and claim was decreed after ex parte evidence. The application to set aside the decree is within time. The same is opposed by Mr. Vaidya.

I am not satisfied that defendant exercised vigilance expected of him. He allowed the case to proceed ex parte pugnaciously. The application is dismissed as there is lack of bona fides."

[6] This order was upheld in appeal and the operative part of the appellate order runs thus :

"The summons was duly served on the defendant appellant on 21st May 1944. The second ground was urged in the previous application dated 22nd September 1941 and was rejected. He has not appealed against that order and so he cannot now say that that order is wrong. His remedy thus in this case is barred by way of application. He could appeal against the ex parte decree not the order. The previous application for absence of appearance was not supported by any affidavit for the Court to act upon. Under the added proviso to R. 13 by our High Court, the Court should not set aside the ex parte decree if the defendant had sufficient time after service to come and put in his defence. The defendant was served on 21st May 1944 and had 4 months time to come and put in his defence. He could instruct his pleader through some one else as he did for the application dated 22nd September 1944. The lower Court was thus justified in coming to the conclusion that the defendant was guilty of negligence and allowed the ex parte order to be passed deliberately."

[7] The plaintiff (non-applicant) is the holder of survey No. 30/1 area 11.35 acres and the defendant is the holder of survey No. 30/2 area 4.22 acres. The plaintiff's case was that in June 1943 the defendant had taken wrongful possession of 14 gunthas with trees out of his field No. 30/1 and that he should be restored to the possession of the same. The claim is such as is either correct or not correct to the defendant's knowledge. If it is correct then I do not see the point in the defendant's spending his money and time in having the ex parte order and the ex parte decree set aside. If on the other hand it is not correct then I do not understand why he would deliberately allow the plaintiff to have an easy victory by permitting an ex parte order or an ex parte decree passed against him. The land in dispute is nearly 1/3 of an acre with trees thereon and is not thus negligible.

[8] It is clear from the doctor's certificate, the correctness of which is not disputed, and I have no reason to doubt, that the defendant was ill during the relevant period and was not able to move about. It is not unlikely that he may have expected to recover sufficiently to move about so that he may be able to go to Daryapur to enage and instruct a counsel for defending the suit. In the absence of any oral evidence on record the exact reason why he was not able to send some one to Daryapur on 11th September 1944 with an application praying for adjournment is not known.

[9] The applicant's application under O. 9, R. 7, Civil P. C., was dismissed, as it appears from the order dated 22nd September 1944, on the ground that he failed to show sufficient reason to set aside the ex parte order and that he was guilty of want of due diligence in applying for an adjournment. The application for setting aside the ex parte decree was rejected merely as a necessary corollary of the order passed on 22nd September 1944. It is thus evident that if the order dated 22nd September 1944 is set aside, the subsequent order dated 20th January 1945 and the appellate order should be set aside.

[10] As already said above, I do not find any motive for the applicant in allowing the ex parte order and decree being passed against him and the learned counsel for the non-applicant was not able to suggest any quite satisfactorily. The applicant even assuming that there was to some extent want of diligence on his part in not applying for an adjournment on 11th September 1944, did come to the Court on 22nd September 1944 i.e. long before the date 26th October 1944, for which the case was adjourned. It was quite possible for him, if the Court had permitted him, to put in his defence and to be ready with his evidence on 26th October 1944. The Court did not permit him to put in his defence and it was naturally thought inadvisable to take part in the trial on 26th October 1944 which would deprive him of the opportunity to have the decree passed set aside under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C.

[11] The order dated 11-9-1944 was, in my opinion, passed under a total misapprehension of law. The Court misdirected itself into thinking that the order could be set aside only on sufficient cause being shown. The distinction between 'good cause' required under O. 9, R. 7 and 'sufficient cause' required by O. 9, R. 13 was completely overlooked. There may be a good cause for the non-appearance though not a sufficient cause, and, in my opinion, the applicant's illness as prima facie established by the doctor's certificate was at any events a 'good cause' for setting aside the ex parte order, subject to such terms as the Court may have thought fit to impose The learned Judge was obviously under a mistake in the exercise of jurisdiction and in my opinion the rejection of the defendant's prayer on 11-9 1944 was not also a sound and judicial exercise of discretion vested in him. The learned Judge has not in his order made a reference to the doctor's certificate and failed to see that it was a much better evidence than an affidavit in support of the applicant's illness.

[12] The suit was just in its initial stage. In A. I. R 1922 Bom. 345[1] it is held that if a party appears before the case is actually heard, he has a right to be heard. The provisions of O. 9 are never meant to be penal provisions, and it is only in clear cases of gross negligence and misconduct that a party should be deprived of the opportunity of having a satisfactory disposal of the case which evidently can only be done when both parties have full opportunity of placing their case and their evidence before the Court.

[13] In 56 ALL 578[2] it is observed that in the absence of any clear motive for the defendant to have deliberately absented himself from the Court on the date fixed for hearing of the case, the Court should hold that the defendant made out sufficient cause for his non-appearance on the date fixed for hearing. The rules of procedure should not be so strictly applied as to deny justice to the party unless the Court is satisfied that the party had a clear motive for his non-appearance and he deliberatey remained absent to achieve that motive. This is also the view taken in 46 Mad. 60[3] and I. L. R. (1938) Bom. 829.[4]

[14] On rejection of his application to set aside the ex parte order, it was open for the applicant to wait till ex parte decree was passed and then to take advantage of the remedy provided by O 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. The applicant is no doubt required at this stage to show 'sufficient cause' and what is a sufficient cause is often held to be a question of fact. The learned Judge did not however proceed regularly in disposing of the application as he did in the summary manner, without giving an opportunity to the parties to adduce evidence. In the present case, the evidence of the applicant and of the doctor would, in my opinion, have been of much value in deciding the application to set aside the ex parte decree. The learned Judge had in fact no basis in support of his observations that the case was allowed to proceed ex parte pugnaciously and that there was lack of bona fides on the applicant's part.

[15] The appellate Court, as also the first Court, have not kept in view the distinction between mere want of required degree of diligence and misconduct involved in the defendant's absenting himself deliberately. It is this which vitiates the order passed against the applicant. The appellate Court has even gone further and observed that the applicant should have appealed against the order dated 22-9-1944 and as he has not appealed he cannot now urge that the order was wrong. According to the learned Judge the remedy under O. 9, R. 13, was barred on account of the rejection of his application to set aside the ex parte order. That this is not the correct view of law is clear from the decisions in 10 C. P. L. R. 45[5] following 8 Cal. 272.[6] The learned Judicial Commissioner in that case held that the Court has jurisdiction under S. 108 (O. 9, R. 13) to set aside an ex parte decree notwithstanding the fact that under S 101, Civil P. C. (O. 9, R. 7) the Court had refused to hear the defendant.

[16] The learned counsel for the non-applicant supported the appellate order and further urged that this Court cannot and at least should not, interfere in revision as the Courts below have come to a conclusion that no sufficient cause was established by the defendant-applicant and also as the defendant had another remedy open viz., by way of an appeal against the ex parte decree, and did not avail himself of the same. I have already observed above that there is in fact no definite and judicial finding of want of sufficient cause and that such a finding has not been reached after due inquiry. The rule as to non-interference in revisions when another remedy is open is not rigid, as observed by Sen J. in I. L. R (1946) Nag. 586.[7] Each case must be considered on merits.

[17] I am not satisfied in this case that the Courts below have applied their judicial mind to the disposal of the applications. It may be that with proper vigilance the defendant-applicant could have avoided the ex parte order and consequently the ex parte decree being passed against him and for this reason the Court could have duly compensated the plaintiff (non-applicant) and mulcted the defendant-applicant in costs.

[18] I hereby set aside the ex parte order and the ex parte decree but award no costs to the applicant in this Court. The applicant would also pay Rs. 25 to the plaintiff (non-applicant) as a condition precedent to his putting in his defence in the first Court.

[19] The revision is allowed without costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

Judgment.—This second appeal has been preferred by the defendants against the decree of the learned Additional District Judge, Balaghat, modifying the decree of the Court of the first instance for joint possession in the plaintiffs' favour.

[2] The plaintiffs brought this suit for possession of the land in suit, which originally belonged to one Suku Gond, an occupancy tenant, and who surrendered it to plaintiff 1, Nathulal, by a registered deed of surrender, dated 15th May 1940; that surrender deed is Ex. P-32. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that there was a private partition between their ancestors Dinaji on the one hand and Dinaji's brother Domaji, defendants 1 and 2's father on the other, some time in 1905 A. D., under which the tenants were divided and allotted to the share of each party. The land in suit is situate in patti No. 2 of mouza Catapaili, in the Waraseoni tahsil of the Balaghat district, of which defendant 1, Premlal, is the recorded lambardar. Suku Gond was an occupancy tenant of the land in suit in patti No. 2, and it was alleged by the plaintiffs that this tenant had been allotted to the share of the plaintiffs' ancestor, Dinaji, at the partition mentioned above. It was further alleged that this Suku Gond's brother Pusya Gond had also surrendered his part of the occupancy holding to the plaintiffs by a registered deed of surrender dated 19th May 1931 (vide Ex. P 34). The plaintiffs' case was that as they were landlords of the occupancy land in suit, the surrender in their favour was valid under the provisions of S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act, and that they alone were entitled to the exclusive possession of the land now in dispute. Defendant 1, however, applied to the revenue Court in his capacity as lambardar for setting aside the surrender and for being put in possession of the disputed occupancy land, and that Court, having set aside the surrender, put him in possession. The plaintiffs respondents commenced this suit for a declaration that the decision of the Revenue Court was wrong and for the recovery of possession of the disputed occupancy land. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim for joint possession. The plaintiffs filed an appeal before the Additional District Judge, Balaghat, who modified the decree of the first Court and allowed the plaintiffs' full claim for possession. The defendants have, therefore, preferred this second appeal.

[3] It has been concurrently found by both the lower Courts that there was a partition in or about 1905 or 1906 and that in that partition the tenants of the patti were divided. It has also been found that since then the plaintiffs have been making separate realisations of rents from the tenants, who were allotted to their share at the partition. It is, therefore obvious that this private partition between the parties has been acted upon, since the time of their ancestors, continuously and uninterruptedly, for the last 35 or 36 years. These findings of fact are, therefore, conclusive in second appeal.

[4] It has been contended by the learned counsel, who appeared in support of this appeal, that even on these findings defendant 1, Premlal, is entitled to challenge the validity of the surrender by Suku Gond in favour of plaintiff 1, Nathulal, as he is the recorded lambardar of the patti, in which the land in suit is situate. The main point for determination in this appeal, therefore, is whether the surrender of the occupancy land in suit by Suku Gond in plaintiffs' favour is valid, under the provisions of S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act, even as against the lambardar. It has been argued by the learned Advocate on behalf of the appellants, on the authority of the Full Bench ruling in 31 N. L. R. Sup. 132[1] that defendant 1, Premlal, who is the recorded lambardar of patti No. 2 does not cease to be a lambardar when the patti is partitioned, but remains the lambardar, until he is removed under S. 189, C. P. Land Revenue Act. It has, therefore, been urged that although there was a private partition in 1905 or 1906 and although that partition has been consistently acted upon by the parties concerned for the last 35 years, still that partition does not, in any way, stand on a higher footing than an imperfect partition, effected by a revenue Court and that defendant 1 still remains the lambardar of the patti. As lambardar of the patti, defendant 1 alone is competent to take a valid surrender from Suku Gond, even though the latter was the tenant of the plaintiffs. The surrender by Suku Gond in favour of the plaintiffs, Nathulal, is no better than one in favour of a co-sharer. In support of this contention the learned Advocate, who appeared in support of this appeal, has drawn my attention to the decision of Niyogi A. J. C. (as he then was) in the case in 31 N.L.R. Sup. 96[2] which lays down that a surrender by an occupancy tenant to a co-sharer, who is not the lambardar, is a transfer, and the lambardar's only remedy is by an application under S. 13, C. P. Tenancy Act, and not by a suit in the civil Court. It is, therefore, next contended that the surrender in question was rightly set aside by the Revenue Court and the lambardar (i. e., defendant 1) was put into possession of the occupancy land in suit.

[5] The contention of the learned counsel for the appellants is quite all right, so far as it goes, but the principle of law, on which he has relied, is not applicable to the facts of this case. In the present case it has been found as a fact that there was a complete partition between the parties in the year 1905 or 1906 and that by virtue of that partition Suku Gond was the tenant of the plaintiffs to the exclusion of the lambardar or the members of his family, and consequently the plaintiffs were not merely co-sharers, in whose favour the surrender was executed, but they were in fact and in law the landlords of Suku Gond, in whose favour a valid surrender could be made under S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act.

[6] It has been laid down by the Full Bench in I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 1[3] at p. 3 that a surrender under S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act, is not a transfer within S. 12 of the Act and as S. 13 of the Act does not apply, the jurisdiction of a civil Court to set it aside is not ousted. The crucial point, on which the decision of the whole case turns, therefore, is whether the surrender in favour of plaintiff 1 as landlord, can be challenged by the lambardar, even though he is admittedly not the landlord. To put briefly, the contest lies between the landlord on the one hand and the lambardar on the other, who is only deemed to be a landlord, under the provisions of S. 188 (2), C. P. Land Revenue Act. I do not think that the two terms, namely, 'landlord' and 'lambardar' are interchangeable or synonymous for all purposes. In the case of a mahal or a patti, which is held jointly by a body of co-proprietors, it can safely be said that it is the lambardar, who is the landlord of the mahal or patti, as the case may be, on behalf of the proprietary body and in that case, it is the lambardar alone, who is competent to take a valid surrender, under S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act, from a person who is a tenant of the proprietary body as a whole; but in the present case it is no longer disputed that there was a full partition between the parties to this litigation and defendant 1, as lambarbar, had had no concern whatsoever, as landlord, with the tenancy land of Suku Gond and others who were specifically allotted to the share of the plaintiffs. In these circumstances it is certainly inappropriate to hold that the lambardar can be regarded as the landlord of Suku Gond in preference to the plaintiffs who were admittedly the landlords.

[7] It has been held by the Bench of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court in 23 N. L. R. 160[4] that a co-proprietor of a village selling his share to a third party and becoming an occupancy tenant of sir land held by him in severalty is the tenant of his vendee and the vendee is entitled to claim from him the rent of the holding and not the lambardar. The same principle was again laid down by Findlay J. C., in A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 325[5] where the learned Judge has observed as follows:

"Where sir land has been distributed and has been held in severalty, each proprietor is the landlord of the land so held by him. Where co-sharers, holding sir land in severalty sell their share to a stranger and then surrender their ex-proprietary rights to him, the lambardar is not entitled to apply under S. 13 to set aside the transaction and the revenue Court has no jurisdiction to put the lambardar in possession."

[8] It is clear to my mind that it is by virtue of partition amongst the co-sharers in respect of sir land that it comes to be held in severalty and each proprietor becomes the landlord of the land so held by him. Both those cases have been approved of and relied upon by the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 54.[6] The majority view in that case is:

"When a cosharer who holds sir land in exclusive ownership transfers his share in the village without cultivating rights in the sir land and becomes thereupon an exproprietary tenant of the land, his transferee and not the lambardar of the village is entitled to collect from him the rent of the land."

If the transferee of a proprietary share becomes the landlord of the transferor in respect of sir land held by him in his exclusive possession, there is no valid reason for not extending the same principle to the case of an occupancy land held by a co-proprietor by virtue of a partition. Mr. P. R. Padhye, the learned counsel for the respondents, has relied upon the ruling in the published case, namely, A. I. R. 1939 Nag. 287[7] in support of his contention that the lambardar is not the landlord vis-a-vis his co-proprietor. The learned Judges have laid down the following proposition :

"In so far as the lambardar is deemed to be the landlord he is so vis-a-vis tenants only in so far as they hold land of him. This does not make the lambardar the landlord vis-a-vis his co-proprietors, except in so far as one or more of them may happen to be a tenant of the whole proprietary body and hold land of them."

This proposition of law seems to indicate that the lambardar can claim to be the landlord only in respect of that land, which has been held by a person as a tenant from him and in any case he cannot claim to be the landlord vis-a-vis his co-proprietors for all purposes.

[9] I think that the case in A. I. R. 1924 Nag. 383[8] is more in point. It lays down that:

"There is no distinction between a private partition and a partition effected under the Land Revenue Act. If the proprietors elect to partition the village and if they agree that each proprietor shall collect the rents from those tenants whose lands fall within his share, and if the tenants in their turn make attornment, then each proprietor becomes the landlord of his patti within the meaning of the Tenancy Act, and, therefore, if a tenant in one patti surrenders land to the owner of another patti, the surrender is not binding on the proprietor of the first patti who is consequently entitled to possession."

The principle laid down in this case exactly covers the point at issue in the present case. It has been found, as stated above, that by virtue of partition in 1905 or 1906, the occupancy tenant (Suku Gond) was allotted to the share of the first plaintiff, Nathulal. It, therefore, follows that the plaintiff was the landlord of Suku Gond's land and as the surrender by the latter was in favour of the former, i. e., plaintiff-landlord, it was perfectly valid under the provisions of S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act, and that it could not be challenged by the first defendant-lambardar, under the provisions of S. 13 of the Act. The revenue Court had, in my opinion, no jurisdiction to set it aside and put the first defendant-lambardar in possession of the land in suit.

[10] Section 2 (7), C. P. Tenancy Act 1920, lays down that :

"'Landlord' means the person of whom a tenant holds land, and to whom the tenant is, or but for a contract would be, liable to pay rent for such land."

According to the plain meaning of this section, it is quite clear to my mind that the plaintiff I alone was the landlord of Suku Gond, in respect of the occupancy land in suit, by virtue of the partition made in 1905 or 1906. So far as the lambardar is deemed to be the landlord, he is so vis-a-vis his tenant only. It is admitted that Suku Gond never held the occupancy land in suit as a tenant from the lambardar. In these circumstances it is idle to contend that the lambardar should be deemed to be the landlord of Suku Gond's land, within the meaning of S. 89, C. P. Tenancy Act. For the reasons stated above I concur with the first appellate Court in holding that the surrender of the occupancy land by Suku Gond in favour of plaintiff-respondent 1 was a valid surrender, that the revenue Court had no jurisdiction to set it aside under S. 13, C. P. Tenancy Act, and that the civil Court has jurisdiction to restore the plaintiffs-respondents to possession of the land in suit.

[11] The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 4—Title not extinguished by adverse possession — Insolvency Court is not prevented by Art. 181, Limitation Act, from deciding question of title.

Under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, the insolvency Court has power to decide all questions of title. The insolvency Court has no exclusive jurisdiction, and the question can be decided by the regular civil Courts. The question of limitation does not depend on whether the title is decided in the insolvency Court or by the regular civil Courts. If the title has not been extinguished by adverse possession, then the insolvency Court has power to decide the question of title, and Art. 181, Limitation Act, will not prevent it from so deciding. Judgment. — On 2-4-1930 Damodhar Muley in execution of a decree against Wasudeo Prasad purchased six fields for Rs. 920, which was apparently set off against the decretal claim for Rs. 2000. On 7-7-1930 the sale was confirmed. On 14-12-1931 Wasudeo Prasad applied to be adjudged insolvent, and he was so adjudged on 3 2 1933. In the meantime Muley had executed a sale deed by which he purported to sell the above six fields to Wasudeo Prasad's wife Damayanti Bai for Rs. 1500. Damayanti Bai died at the end of 1932, and on 22-12-1938 and 8 2 1939 Wasudeo's mother Rukhmabai, purporting to act as guardian of Wasudeo Prasad's daughter Shakuntala, executed three sale deeds of these fields in favour of Sadasheo, Ambabai, and the minor sons of Dinanath (Kunjbihari and Shambihari) for ostensible considerations of Rs. 250, Rs. 850 and Rs. 375 respectively. In February 1942 the receiver put in applications under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act to be put in possession of these fields. Those applications succeeded in the insolvency Court, and an appeal to the District Judge was dismissed. The transferees have preferred this second appeal.

[2] The first question is one of limitation. The two fields sold to Sadasheo were malik-makbuza fields, which were sold on 22-12-1938. The receiver's application under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, was made on 10-2-1942. The other two sales were of absolute occupancy fields made on 8-2-1939, and the receiver's applications under S. 4 were made on 7 2-1942. It is contended that Art. 181, Limitation Act applies and that the application should have been made within three years from the date of the appointment of the receiver, or at least from the date of the sales. The general view is that this Article does not apply to applications under the Provincial Insolvency Act. That view has been taken in A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 172,[1] A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 553,[2] 47 Mad. 673[3] and 5 Rang. 384.[4] The decisions in 1940 N. L. J. 505[5] and 1946 N. L. J. 597[6] do not support the contrary view, for it was merely remarked there that if Art. 181 applied then the application was still within time. Under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act the insolvency Court has power to decide all questions of title. Here the question is one of title. The insolvency Court has no exclusive jurisdiction, and the question could be decided by the regular civil Courts. The question of limitation does not depend, in my opinion, on whether the title is decided in the insolvency Court or by the regular civil Courts. If the title has not been extinguished by adverse possession, then in my opinion the insolvency Court has power to decide the question of title, and Art. 181, Limitation Act will not prevent it from so deciding.

[3] It has been argued that an application under S. 4 might be made after the lapse of many years, but it would fail if the title had been extinguished by adverse possession, just as a suit would fail. It has not been contended here that the title had been extinguished by adverse possession, and therefore I agree with the lower Courts that the applications of the receiver to be put in possession were not barred by limitation.

[4] The lower Courts have held that the sale by Muley ostensibly in favour of Damayantibai was a benami transaction and that the real transferee was her husband Wasudeo Prasad. It has been suggested that the question is a mixed question of law and fact, and I have been referred to the decision in 38 ALL. 122.[7] It is possible that in the peculiar circumstances of that case the question whether the ostensible mortgagee was the real mortgagee was a mixed question of law and fact, though the grounds on which it was so held are not altogether clear. In the present case, however, I think it is clear that the question whether the real transferee was Damayantibai or Muley (Wasudeo Prasad ?) is a pure question of fact. The evidence of Muley shows that Wasudeo Prasad approached him about a resale even before the confirmation of the sale in execution and that he agreed to re-transfer the fields to Wasudeo if he paid Rs 2 000 in full satisfaction of the decretal claim, and that Wasudeo Prasad accordingly paid Rs. 500 at the time and Rs. 1,500 4 months later and t ok a sale deed in the name of his wife Damayantibai because he said that he was heavily indebted. That evidence is corroborated by the non-applicant's witness Sadasheo. It has been suggested that the statement made by Wasudeo Prasad, who died in 1939, is inadmissible in evidence The evidence of Muley and Sadasheo is inadmissible to prove the truth of any statement made by Wasudeo Prasad, but it is admissible to prove that Wasudeo Prasad made such a statement. The burden of proof is no doubt on the receiver to show that the ostensible transferee Damayantibai was not the real transferee, but all the circumstances of the case leave, I think, no doubt that Wasudeo Prasad was the real transferee, and the concurrent findings of the lower Courts on this point must be accepted.

[5] The third question is whether the transferees are protected by S. 41, T. P. Act. They pleaded that they were bona fide transferees for value. They did not specifically plead that they took reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, and there is very little evidence of any such inquiry. Here again there are concurrent findings of the lower Courts that the transferees did not act in good faith, and that finding must be accepted here. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

In a mortgage suit the person claiming paramount title is not a necessary party. M. R. Bobde and V. V. Kelkar—for Appellant.

C. K. Ghadge—for Respondents.

Grille C. J.—The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the property mentioned in his plaint, namely 0-8-0 village share and sir and khudkast fields in Mouza Kusumbi, was his and that the defendant had no right or title to any interest in this property. The suit was occasioned by the fact that the defendant Nimba was in the process of executing a mortgage decree which he held over these fields and the village share which the plaintiff had already acquired by an auction-purchase in execution of his own decree for money.

[2] The plaintiff's decree is dated 16-10-1929 and is Ex. P-3. In December 1929, as will be seen from Ex. P-2, he attached the property and on 23-7-1930 he put in a sale statement in which the defendant Nimba's mortgage is mentioned but is stated to be of no effect since it was without consideration. The vital document is

Ex. P-10 which is an application by Nimba and the question for decision is whether it is governed by O. 21, R. 58 or O. 21, R. 66 asking that the property in question be put up to sale subject to the encumbrance of his own mortgage. This was rejected on 26-1-1931 as having been made too late : Ex. P-2.

[3] The sale was held on 16-12-1931 and the auction-purchaser was one Arjun who deposited 1/4 of the sale price. In subsequent proceedings the Sub-Divisional Officer acting as Collector made a report on 18-1-1932 (Ex. D-3) stating that the decree-holder Narayan was willing to purchase the property "for the price paid by the purchaser" and recommending that he should be allowed to do so. It is also recorded in the same order sheet that Arjun was withdrawing his claim in respect of the sale. The plaintiff Narayan was in possession of the other half of the village and consequently under S. 151, Land Revenue Act, he was entitled to pre-emption. On 4-3-1932 Arjun was allowed to withdraw the deposit money which he had paid and on 16th April 1932 (Ex. P-5) the civil Court in a considered order allowed Narayan to pre-empt. The sale was confirmed on 19-5-1932 and the sale certificate issued on 24-5-1932. Then for some reason the confirmation was cancelled on 23rd July 1932 (Ex. D-5) but the sale was finally confirmed on 22-12-1933 (Ex. P-6).

[4] After this, in the year 1934, Nimba brought a suit on his own mortgage in respect of this property, against Mahadeo, the mortgagor and the judgment-debtor in the plaintiff's decree of 1929. The mortgage as appears from a copy of the judgment which Nimba obtained was executed in 1928, which would be before the plaintiff brought his suit. Nimba did not join Narayan as a party to the suit contending then that he only joined such persons as had title and that Narayan in spite of his purchase in the previous year had in fact no title to the property. On 30-3-1936 Nimba obtained a judgment in that suit but apparently he did not proceed to execution at once.

[5] It will be seen that after the 0-8-0 share of Mahadeo was sold, which as we know was purchased in the auction sale by the plaintiff, Mahadeo had become the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant of that field. In 1936 the plaintiff brought a suit against Mahadeo for arrears of rent and obtained a decree against him in September 1937 as a result of which Mahadeo was ejected from these fields by the revenue Courts in 1938.

[6] It also appears that during the year 1931 negotiations were going on between Nimba and Mahadeo and it was agreed that Nimba should purchase this share in order to satisfy his (Nimba's) mortgage and also to pay off some decrees outstanding against Mahadeo including that of Narayan. In pursuance of this agreement Mahadeo approached the revenue authorities for permission to sell, in addition to his village share, his cultivating rights in sir, pointing out that he had other property which would enable him to maintain his family, and necessary sanction was accorded towards the end of 1931. Nothing, however, came out of it as no sale deed was executed and it is Nimba's contention that Mahadeo resiled from the agreement. No further action appears to have been taken by Nimba after this, and it is to be noted that the sale of the property to Arjun was not held until December 1931 and the sale was not confirmed in Narayan's favour as a result of his claim to pre-emption until two years later.

[7] The plaintiff succeeded in the lower Court in obtaining the declaration he sought and in appeal by the defendant it is urged that as the suit was one under S. 42, Specific Relief Act, it was the plaintiff's duty to establish his title since the grant of relief was in the discretion of the Court and that he had failed to do so. In the lower Court reliance was placed on the fact that the objection application put in by the defendant during the execution proceedings, which he described as one falling under O. 21, R. 58, was rejected and that as no suit had been brought within twelve months, that order became conclusive against him and that therefore he was not entitled to advance his mortgage against any acquisition by the plaintiff.

[8] In the first place, it is contended that in fact there was no sale to Arjun at all inasmuch as the vital conditions laid down in O. 21 had not been fulfilled. Admittedly, Arjun after depositing 1/4 purchase-money on 16-12-1931 did not pay the balance and it is contended that under the provisions of O. 21, Rr. 85 and 86, as the balance had not been paid by the purchaser within fifteen days, the Court was bound to order a fresh sale. Three cases are cited in support of this proposition, viz., 15 C. W. N. 350,[1] A. I R. 1941 Cal. 85[2] and I. L. R. (1943) ALL. 580.[3] In the first two of these cases, the balance of the purchase-money had not been paid at all and we entirely agree with the decision there that there could be no sale to a person who had not paid the purchase price. In the Allahabad case it was held that the sale was automatically cancelled inasmuch as the purchase-money had been paid sixteen days late. It must be noted of course that in these three cases no question of any rights of pre-emption arose. It is contended that that is immaterial and that S. 151, Land Revenue Act, only gives a right of pre-emption in respect of a sale which had been concluded and that no claim for pre-emption can take effect until that has been done. That, however, is directly opposed to the language of the section which states that certain persons can claim to take the property at the sum last bid if, in the course of a sale of an estate or mahal or share therein, in execution of a decree of a civil Court, the property is knocked down to a stranger. It is perfectly clear that the pre-emptor can come in as early as he likes after the bid has been accepted. He can come in in the course of the sale and not merely at the conclusion of the sale. It is contended, however, that in any case any appearance made by the plaintiff Narayan was more than fifteen days after the property had been knocked down in favour of Arjun and reliance for this is placed on Exhibit D-3, which is an extract from the order-sheets of the revenue officer conducting the sale. The sale was held on 16-12-1931. This order sheet is dated 18-1-1932. It is stated there:

"Decree-holder is willing to purchase the property for the price paid by the purchaser Rs. 1,305 and I recommend that it should be allowed and sale confirmed in his favour."

[9] Now the purchase-money of Rs. 1,305 had been actually paid at the time when Arjun was allowed to withdraw his deposit of 1/4th of this amount. This is clear from the order sheet dated 4-3-1932. But it cannot be argued with certainty that this was the first appearance of the decree-holder on the scene. The fact that he expressed his willingness to purchase is no foundation for the contention that this was his first appearance, and indeed the normal inference to be drawn is that the Court was dealing with an application that had been put in previously. The trial Court held that it has not been established that the decree-holder Narayan was late in making his application for pre-emption and, as we have said, the reasonable inference is that Narayan's application had been put in earlier.

[10] Next it is urged with respect to the same order-sheet, from which we have just quoted the passages above, that the revenue authorities had absolutely no right to substitute one purchaser for another and to make the decree-holder's name appear instead of the auction-purchaser. Moreover, the decree-holder had asked no permission to bid. This is easily answered. The decree-holder did not express his willingness as a decree-holder but as a person entitled to pre-empt under the provisions of S. 151, Land Revenue Act. Moreover, the Court did not grant permission but only recommended that his application should be allowed and the sale confirmed in his favour. Then again it is urged that applications to pre empt are not made to the revenue authorities but only to the civil Courts. There are undoubtedly several authorities for this proposition. But in this case the application for pre-emption was in fact made to the civil Court. A recommendation to the Deputy Commissioner was not made in relation to this application. In Ex. p-5, which is a copy of the order passed by the civil Court, this application under S. 151, Land Revenue Act, has been dealt with and it was laid down therein that on the applicant fulfilling all the conditions binding on the auction-purchaser, he shall be entitled to have the sale of the property confirmed in his favour at the sum for which it was sold and purchased by Arjun. This order is dated 16-4-1932. In the order dated 4-3-1932 Ex. D-3 allowing Arjun to withdraw his deposit money there is an assumption, which in strict law should not have been made, that the sale was going to be confirmed in the name of Narayan and consequently Arjun was allowed to withdraw his money. It was obviously a suggestion that Narayan's application was bound to succeed, and the only thing that could be said against the order of the Collector is that his action as the agent of the civil Court was premature and an example of intelligent anticipation.

[11] The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit both because of the failure on the part of the defendant to bring a suit under the provisions of O. 21, R. 63, after the failure of his application under R. 58 and also because Nimba had failed to join the plaintiff in his mortgage suit. In this latter point, which was not strongly pressed before us, we are satisfied that the lower Court is wrong. In a mortgage suit the person claiming paramount title is not a necessary party. He has no interest in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption (vide O. 34, R. 1) and the only occasion on which a judgment-creditor could rightly be made a party to a mortgage suit is when he is in the position described in S. 91, T. P. Act.

[12] As for the other reason that the order passed on 26-1-1931 rejecting Nimba's application, filed under Order 21, Rule 58 and not under rule 66, was conclusive against him, we are of opinion that the lower Court is perfectly right and that the appeal must fail. Ever since the decision in 22 N. L. R. 94[4] was overruled by a Full Bench in 26 N. L. R. 135[5] it has been the view of this Court that O. 21, R. 58, contemplates a claim that attached property should be sold subject to a mortgage or lease and that the provisions of R. 63 apply to the order allowing or disallowing such a claim. This view has been upheld by one of us in I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 665,[6] by Niyogi J. in I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 166[7] and by Puranik J. in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 571[8] where the case-law on the subject is reviewed. The cases which have been cited by the learned counsel for the appellant, and which at first sight seem to support his contention, have been dealt with in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 571[8] and are shown to have been superseded. For instance, the Full Bench decision in 16 Pat. 54[9] which is based on 1 Pat. 159[10] has been disapproved by the Patna High Court itself in 21 Pat. 300.[11] In the earlier cases it was decided that a usufructuary mortgagee was not entitled to make an application under O. 21, R. 58, at all in respect of an attachment by a third person. This principle in itself was questioned by the Divisional Bench in 16 Pat. 54,[9] who referred the matter to a Full Bench but the decision went against them. That decision is not now approved. Similarly the decision in A. I. R. 1941 Mad. 77[12] which has been urged for our acceptance was overruled in I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 336[13] by a Full Bench. A mortgagee, in the view of both the Madras and Patna High Courts, in opposition to the cases which have been cited on behalf of the appellant, is entitled to approach the executing Court with a request under R. 58.

[13] It is not disputed that an order passed under O. 21, R. 58, in default is as conclusive against the person making the objection as a decision on the merits, and the dictum in 11 Lah. 369[14] which is based on the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 15 Cal. 521[15] has, so far as we know, never been contested.

[14] Not only in our own Court has it been held that an application asking that the proclamation of sale should be notified subject to the applicant's own mortgage, is one falling under R. 58 and not under R. 66. Other High Courts also have held the same view. I. L. R. (1939) 2 Cal. 291[16] is a case exactly parallel. In a single Judge decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in A. I. R. 1939 ALL. 657[17] it was decided that where the application asks for a notification of an encumbrance only, then the matter is not one to be decided under R. 62, read with Rr. 58 and 63, but under R. 66. If, on the other hand, the claim is that the sale is subject to the applicant's mortgage, it was held that the matter would fall under R. 58 and not under R. 66. In 49 ALL. 903[18] the applicability of Rr. 58 and 63 and Art. 11, Limitation Act, was stated in emphatic terms, with which we are in full and respectful agreement. Again, in 9 Rang. 367[19] it was stated that an application by a person that the sale of the property attached should be subject to his mortgage was a claim under R. 58.

[15] The reason for the distinction between Rr. 62 and 66 is clear and has been explained in I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 665[6] where it is said that "a distinction is made between an express order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage and cases where notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the sale proclamation. In the former case a prospective purchaser is told exactly what he is buying; in the latter he takes a chance that the mortgage which is alleged to exist may prove unenforceable either from inherent defects or possibly because it may have been satisfied by the time of the sale . . ."

[16] Order 21, R. 66, sets out what has to be done when a sale by public auction is proclaimed. In sub-r. 2 (c) it is stated that such proclamation must specify as fairly and accurately as possible "any incumbrance to which the property is liable." In sub-r. 2 (e) it is stated that the proclamation must specify every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property. It is plain that the existence of a mortgage to be notified would fall under (e) and the request that the sale be proclaimed subject to the applicant's mortgage would come under sub-r. (c). Any investigation into the claims falling under sub-r. (e) falls to be dealt with under sub-r. (4) of R. 66, whereas any claim which would fall under (c) would be dealt with under R. 62. Nothing can be entered in respect of sub-r. (c) unless the Court is satisfied that the property is in fact subject to a mortgage or charge and thinks fit to continue the attachment subject to such mortgage or charge.

[17] Now EX. P-10 from its very wording falls definitely under R. 58 and the decision dismissing the application as having been made too late is as effective as a decision under R. 62 would have been declaring that the Court was not satisfied as to the existence of the mortgage. The application was drawn up by an experienced pleader and bears the heading "Under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. The applicant above-named begs to submit as under," and the final clause runs :

"This act of the decree-holder shall invite needless and unnecessary litigations afterwards and hence it is most humbly prayed that the Court be pleased to order the sale of the property subject to the applicant's mortgage incumbrance."

There could not, on the authorities, be a clearer case of a prayer asking that the matter be decided under the provisions of R. 62 with the result that if the application were successful, the property would be put up to sale subject to the mortgage being a definitely existing incumbrance to which the property would be liable under sub-r. 2 (c) of R. 66.

[18] There remains the argument that in any case Nimba should have been allowed his claim in respect of the occupancy fields, from which Mahadeo had been ejected subsequent to the decree obtained by Nimba on his mortgage suit. The contention is, and 28 N. L. R. 166[20] is cited in support of it, that although the proprietary right in the sir lands might have passed to Narayan, nevertheless Nimba was still entitled to enforce his mortgage in respect of the ex-proprietary occupancy holding of which Mahadeo had become an occupancy tenant. This of course pre-supposes that the mortgage covered cultivating rights in sir as well as proprietary and that the sanction of the revenue authorities had been obtained for the mortgaging of those cultivating rights. The mortgage is not on the record and there is no evidence to show that such an extensive and somewhat unusual permission was given. The only mention of this anywhere is in the copy of the application filed by Mahadeo during the year 1931 asking for permission to sell his village share with 48 acres of sir land attached to it. It is stated there :

"In the year 1928 the applicant's proprietary share and sir fields were mortgaged with Nimbha Patel in lieu of Rs. 7500."

That in itself is not clear whether the cultivating rights were also mortgaged along with the proprietary rights and there is no guarantee that the statement in that application is true. Objection was also taken to the fact that Narayan did not attach in pursuance of his decree the sir fields of Mahadeo. It is perfectly clear, however, that Narayan attached the whole village share which included proprietary rights and Mahadeo became an occupancy tenant of these fields from which he was subsequently ejected. Even if the appellant's contentions were established, they would be of no avail in view of the conclusive decision against him passed in 1931 that his mortgage was of no effect.

[19] Finally, we may add that no case has been cited before us for the proposition that an order passed under Rr. 58 and 63 is conclusive (unless a suit is brought within one year) applies only when the person concluded is the plaintiff and not the defendant. We see no reason for holding that the conclusiveness of a decision where the applicant makes use of the summary remedies provided and fails to abide by the conditions thereby imposed should be waived in favour of the defendant against whom a declaratory suit is necessary.

[20] The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 531 of 1947, Decided on 30-10-1947, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Basim, D/- 3-7-1947.

(a) Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law (1921), S. 48 (1) — Hindu widow succeeding to permanent tenancy of husband — Surrender of tenancy by widow to landlord — No legal necessity or benefit to estate—Reversioner is not bound.

A surrender in favour of the landlord by a Hindu widow succeeding to the permanent tenancy holding as heir to her deceased husband and getting the property as widow's estate, cannot bind the reversioner where it is neither for legal necessity nor for benefit of the estate : 17 A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 65, Rel. on. [Para 6]

(b) Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law (1921), Ss. 48 (4) and 49 (1) — Transfer in favour of landlord is not covered by S. 48 (4) — Jurisdiction of civil Court is not ousted.

The transfer that is contemplated by the provisions of S. 48 (4) is a transfer in favour of a person othe than the landlord and it is only the transfer in favour of another person which attracts the provisions of S. 49 (1). Hence, a surrender of permanent tenancy holdin by a widow in favour of the landlord under S. 36 does not fall within the purview of S. 48 (4), even assuming that the surrender was in the nature of a transfer. The jurisdiction of the civil Court therefore to entertain a claim to set aside the surrender is not barred under S. 49 (1). [Para 7]

V. V. Kekre — for Appellant.

Judgment. — This second appeal has been preferred by defendant 1 Rodya, against the decree of the lower appellate Court confirming the decree of the Court of first instance in plaintiff's favour.

[2] It is admitted that the plaint-mentioned survey number 65/1 was held by one Hari as a permament tenant of mauza Fulambari Izara, in the Mangrulpir taluq of the Akola district. This Hari died some time in 1938, leaving behind two married daughters by name Limba Bai and Saru, who is now respondent 1 and a widow Bhagi. The survey number was inherited by Mt. Bhagi and she surrendered it to the izardar landlord by a registered deed of surrender dated 24th October 1941 ; that deed is EX. D 1. The landlord let it out to defendant 1 now appellant, as a permenant lessee on the same day.

[3] Saru as a reversioner commenced this suit for immediate possession of the survey number, on the ground that the alleged surrender was neither for legal necessity, nor for the benefit of the estate and was not binding on her. She claimed immediate possession of the survey number, because her mother Bhagi re-married soon after the surrender, and the inheritance had opened. She claimed a preferential right of inheritance, as against her sister Limba Bai, on the ground that the latter was provided for, while she herself was not.

[4] The appellant contested the suit on various grounds, but the learned trial Judge overruled the defence and decreed the plaintiff's claim for possession of the plaint-holding and that decree was upheld by the first appellate Court. Defendant 1 has now preferred this second appeal.

[5] The appellant has raised certain points of law, based upon the provisions of Ss. 48 and 49, Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law. So far as other questions are concerned, they are questions of fact and the concurrent findings of the two Courts below thereon are conclusive in second appeal. The points of law raised are absolutely new pleas, which were never raised any time in the lower Courts. In the first instance, it is not open to the appellant to raise these new pleas, for the first time, in second appeal, and thus expose the successful party to the brunt of a new attack, but since they have been raised as points of law, I am inclined to entertain them and point out that there is no force in those contentions.

[6] It has been laid down under S. 48 (1), Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law (hereinafter mentioned as the B. A. V. T. Law) that on the death of a permanent tenant, the succession to his holding shall be regulated by the personal law of the deceased. In this litigation the parties are admittedly governed by Hindu law. Hari's widow Bhagi (also called Bhimi) succeeded to the permanent tenancy holding, as heir to her deceased husband, and got the plaint property as widow's estate. It cannot, therefore, be contended that the alleged surrender by Bhagi in favour of the landlord could bind the reversioner, under Hindu law, if it was neither for legal necessity nor for benefit of the estate. It, therefore, follows that the plaintiff, as a reversioner, is entitled to challenge the surrender successfully and claim possession of the holding now in dispute.

[7] It has been contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that the surrender in question amounts to a transfer within the meaning of S. 48 (4) of the B. A. V T. Law and hence the civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiff's claim for setting aside the transfer under S. 49 (1) of the B. A. V. T. Law. I do not think that the surrender in favour of the landlord falls within the purview of S. 48 (4) of the B. A. V. T. Law. It was a surrender by the widow Bhagi in favour of the landlord under S. 36 of the B. A. V. T. Law. Even assuming for the sake of argument that the surrender was in the nature of a transfer still that transfer was undoubtedly in favour of the landlord. The transfer that is contemplated by the provisions of S. 48 (4) of the B A. V. T. Law is a transfer in favour of a person other than the landlord, and it is only the transfer in favour of another person which attracts the provisions of S. 49 (1) of the B. A. V. T. Law. The provisions of S. 49 (1) of the B. A. V. T. Law run thus :

"If a permanent tenant parts with any portion of his right in any land in contravention of S. 48, any such person as would be entitled to inherit his right in the holding in the event of his death without nearer heirs, or, failing such person, the landlord from whom the permanent tenant held the land, may appiy to a Revenue-officer, within two years from the date on which, in pursuance of the transfer the tenant parted with possession of the land, to be placed in possession . . . . ."

It is quite clear to my mind that the remedy, provided for, by the provisions of S. 49 (1) of the B. A. V. T. Law of seeking the aid of Revenue-officer, for setting aside the transfer and to recover possession of the tenancy land relates only to a transfer in favour of a person other than the landlord. Under the said provisions the primary right for setting aside the transfer under S. 48 (4) of the B. A. V. T. Law and claiming possession, vests in the heirs of the transferor, and failing such heirs, the right vests in the landlord. In other words, the right of setting aside the transfer and claiming possession through the medium of the Revenue Courts is conferred upon the heirs and, failing such heirs, on the landlord. Both have been placed on the same footing for the purpose of obtaining the necessary redress. It is, therefore, beyond question that the transfer covered by the provisions of S. 48 (4) of the B. A. V. T. Law cannot be, in the nature of things, a transfer or a surrender in favour of the landlord. Therefore, in my opinion, the surrender by the widow Bhagi in favour of the landlord, not being a transfer, within the meaning of S. 48 (4) of the B. A. V. T. Law, the jurisdiction of the civil Court is not barred at all.

[8] The surrender by the widow Bhagi was an act of alienation on her part without legal necessity or benefit to the estate and consequently it was not binding upon the plaintiff reversioner, on the principles laid down in 26 N. L. R. 1.[1] The decision of both the Courts below decreeing the plaintiff's claim for possession of the plaint field is perfectly correct, and the appeal before me fails and is dismissed summarily without notice to the respondents under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C.

Judgment.—The respondents obtained a decree against the appellants to eject them from certain land. When the decree-holders sought to execute the decree the judgment-debtors contended that there had been a subsequent agreement by which the judgment-debtors were to be allowed to continue in possession. The lower Courts held that the judgment-debtors were trying to plead an adjustment that had not been certified and that it was not open to them to do so.

[2] The question is whether O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C. applies to a decree for ejectment. The rule runs as follows:

"Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court. . ."

The Madras High Court has always taken the view that this rule applies only to a decree under which money is payable: see 49 Mad. 716.[1] The contrary view has been taken in 6 Cal. 786,[2] A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 715,[3] 46 Bom. 226,[4] 14 Pat. 488[5] and A. I. R. 1936 Lah. 842[6] As the rule originally stood it ran: 'Where any money payable under a decree is paid out of Court, etc.' The words 'of any kind' appear to have been inserted in order to establish the view taken by the Calcutta High Court as opposed to that of Madras, and with all respect to the decision in 49 Mad. 716,[1] it appears to me that the words 'the decree' refer to a decree of any kind. The lower Court's decision must accordingly be upheld, and the appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondents.

M. R. Bobde and R. S. Dabir—for Appellant.

V. R. Sen and P. R. Padhye—for Respondents.

Grille C. J.—This is an appeal by an unsuccessful plaintiff who sued for a declaration that a house situated in Khandwa was not liable for attachment and sale in execution of a decree by defendant 1 Seth Kanhaiyalal against the three remaining defendants. In appeal the only respondent is Kanhaiyalal and the decree has proceeded ex parte against his judgment-debtors.

[2] Kanhaiyalal, who is the managing partner of the firm Balmukand Hanumanbax of Khandwa, had obtained a decree in Suit No. 818 of 1935 on 16th October 1937 against the three defendants who are brothers and a fourth brother Narshidas, who is now dead, for some Rs. 14,000 and in execution of that decree on 1st February 1938 he attached the house now in dispute. On 12th January 1940, that is to say nearly two years later, the plaintiff-appellant Mt. Raliyatbai launched an objection in the executing Court under the provisions of O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. The objection was dismissed on the ground that there had been undue delay, and the suit out of which this appeal arises was filed 5 months later on 30th August 1940.

[3] The plaintiff's contention was that in the year 1933 defendant 2 Jiwandas, who is her son-in-law, and his brothers approached her for a loan of Rs. 8000 in order to pay off a pressing claim by some Bombay creditors who had a charge decree over their house. She advanced the money on the house being mortgaged to her. The mortgage was repayable on 7th December 1938, but shortly before this, as nothing had been paid on the mortgage, she and the mortgagors agreed to refer the matter to arbitration and an award was given by the arbitrator Mr. V. R. Joshi, a pleader of Khandwa, on 10th November 1938 on applications made to him by both parties on the previous 13th October. The award was then filed in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nimar, who passed a decree in terms of the award whereby the house was to be transferred to her and a sale-deed executed. She contended that the attachment by Kanhaiyalal was subsequent to her mortgage, and the sale, although subsequent to the attachment, was not a private sale but one in pursuance of the order of the Court and therefore the transaction was not hit by S. 64, Civil P. C. The defendant Kanhaiyalal (the other defendants making no appearance) contended that the whole transaction, both of the sale and of the mortgage, was fictitious; that she lent no money in 1933 as she was not in a position to lend any money and the fictitious mortgage was arranged in order to save the property from the hands of Kanhaiyalal who even at that time was a creditor of the four brothers. After the attachment an unnecessary reference to arbitration was made resulting in a decree in a civil Court in order to avoid the effect of S. 64, Civil P. C., and consideration for the sale-deed subsequently executed in May 1939 was not the satisfaction of the mortgage since no mortgage really existed. The trial Court found in the defendant's favour, holding that the plaintiff had failed to establish that the transaction was in good faith and finding that the proceedings were the result of collusion between the plaintiff and her mortgagors with the intention of shielding the property from the long established creditor Kanhaiyalal.

[4] In appeal it was contended that the burden lay not on the plaintiff but on the defendant to establish that the sale-deed consequent on the mortgage and the mortgage were without consideration and that in any case the plaintiff has, by her evidence in opening the case, discharged the necessary primary burden and that the burden shifted to the defendants.

[5] The contention that the burden throughout lay on the defendants is based on the Privy Council decision in 5 Rang. 852,[1] where, according to the headnote, it would appear that their Lordships had laid down that when a suit is instituted under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. and the plaintiff is an ostensible owner of the property under a registered sale-deed the burden to show that the transaction was a fraudulent one lies on the defendant. It is contended that this was followed by Stone C. J. in A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 9,[2] and also in 7 Pat. 777.[3] The brevity of their Lordships' judgment and the further compression in the headnote have led to an erroneous interpretation of their Lordships' view. The matter was fully examined in 8 Pat. 890,[4] where the learned Judges had the advantage of seeing the judgment of the Rangoon High Court appealed from in 5 Rang. 852,[1] and it was shown that it was established—and their Lordships of the Privy Council relied on the fact that it was established— that by far the greater part of the consideration had actually passed and that there was no other evidence in the case. One of the Judges in 8 Pat. 890,[4] was also a member of the Bench which decided 7 Pat. 777,[3] and there is an express recantation in 8 Pat. 890,[4] of the view taken in 7 Pat. 777.[3] The question was also considered by Gruer A. J. C. in A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 253,[5] who found himself in agreement with the Patna view and also that expressed in similar terms in 55 Mad. 748.[6] A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 253[5] was considered by Stone C. J. in A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 9,[2] but the learned Chief Justice held that although in essence Gruer A. J. C.'s view that the burden shifted because the plaintiff had succeeded in proving the passing of consideration was correct he nevertheless preferred to say that he thought that their Lordships of the Privy Council in 5 Rang. 852,[1] held that the burden shifted earlier when the plaintiff proved a duly registered sale deed containing recitals showing consideration. The opinion, however, is actually obiter because the learned Chief Justice proceeded to find that there was no difficulty in the case before him since, even on the assumption that the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff in the matter of proving the passing of consideration the plaintiff had discharged it, and we would note that in I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 291[7] a case decided by a Divisional Bench to which Stone C. J. was a party, three weeks after A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 9[2] the Court took the view that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff to show that the transaction was for consideration and was a real transaction and that in the event the plaintiff had successfully discharged it.

[6] The learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has also contended that in the latest decision of the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1947 P. C. 98[8] the matter has been finally decided in his favour. In our opinion this is not so. What was held was that when the plaintiff had established by prima facie evidence that the consideration for the sale deed in respect of the property in suit had really passed as stated in that deed the burden would be on the objector, that is to say the attaching decree-holder, to repudiate the proposition that the sale was genuine. Their Lordships' judgment does not state that a recital is sufficient, but that proof is necessary on the part of the plaintiff to show that the consideration as stated in the deed had really passed, that is to say there must be evidence supporting the recitals in the deed which in themselves are not enough. This in effect was held in this Court as long ago as 1920 by Drake-Brockman J. C. in A.I.R. 1920 Nag. 93.[9] In 15 N. L. R. 68[10] their Lordships of the Privy Council held that when a suit is instituted after the summary rejection of a claim under S. 278, Civil P. C., now O. 21, R. 58, the onus of establishing that the transaction on which the suit is based was entered into in good faith lies on the plaintiff and that decision of their Lordships still holds good, and there is nothing in the Privy Council cases which have been cited on behalf of the appellant which would go to negative that proposition. There is one case which was cited not on behalf of the appellant but by the respondents, A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 290[11] wherein it was stated in passing that:

"Apparently it has been the settled practice of the Indian Courts, when objections to an attachment in execution have been disallowed, and a suit has been filed by the objector under O. 21, R. 63 of the Code, to put the onus of proving the bona fides of any transaction upon which the objector relies upon him in his capacity of plaintiff. This is a matter which may possibly require further consideration when the question of onus is really material."

[7] The question was not pursued as in the case before their Lordships the facts were fully established and the inferences from them were clear. That indicates clearly what the law at present is, and we have not been shown any decision which modifies the law, and if this expression of opinion is to be analysed closely it may be considered that the words "the onus of proving the bona fides of any transaction upon which the objector relies" may well be considered to be in contradistinction of the necessity of proving the bona fides of the particular transaction on which the objector relies. It follows then that the burden of proof was rightly cast upon the plaintiff.

[8] The question then arises whether that burden has been discharged. The plaintiff has succeeded in establishing that the mortgage deed of 1933 was duly executed and registered as was the sale deed of 1939, and it is not in dispute that an award was made on a submission to private arbitration in 1938 and that a decree was passed in terms of the award. No evidence was afforded in respect of the proof of passing of consideration for the mortgage except the statement of Phulchand, one of the attesting witnesses, who stated that the executants admitted to have received consideration. Neither the plaintiff mortgagee nor any of the three surviving mortgagors (Narshidas is dead) has appeared to give evidence, and they would certainly be the best persons to do so. The circumstances were known to them and if the burden of proving the non-passing of consideration were placed on the defendant he would be, as has been observed in several cases, in the difficult position of attempting to prove a negative. There are circumstances attending both the execution of the mortgage and the eventual sale of the house —which latter event is the legal ground for the defendant's attack although it is impossible to consider the question of the passing of consideration for the sale deed without reference to the earlier transaction—which are highly suspicious, and the trial Court has commented on them. In A. I. R. 1943 Cal. 534[12] it was held by a Divisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court that "in a suit under O. 21, R. 63 where the circumstances surrounding the execution of the document from which the plaintiff's title is said to be derived are not free from suspicion the burden of proving that the transaction evidenced by the document was a bona fide transaction for valuable consideration lies heavily upon the plaintiff."

[9] There are such circumstances here, and we agree with the learned Judge of the trial Court that the plaintiff has not succeeded in dissipating them. (Their Lordships after discussing the evidence proceeded.) We hold that there was no consideration by the cancellation of the mortgage as the mortgage in fact had never existed. Admittedly Kanhaiyalal was a creditor even before 1933, and documents have been filed showing that he was pressing for money in 1932. An attempt has been made to save the consequences of an attachment and subsequent sale by this fictitious sale of the house for which we consider the consideration was non-existent as the mortgage of 1933 was equally fictitious.

[10] The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Chandiprasad Deokeran — Defendant 2 —Appellant v. Jugulkishore Dixit and others, Plaintiffs and others, Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 69 of 1940, Decided on 16-12-1947, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Hoshangabad, D-/ 23-1-1940.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 60 — 'Banker' meaning of — It does not necessarily mean professional banker — Person acting as banker in relation to particular customer or customers is banker.

The word 'banker' as used in Art. 60 does not necessarily mean a 'professional' banker. It applies equally to a trader who acts as a banker in relation to a particular customer or customers. It is not necessary that the person with whom the amounts are credited should necessarily be a banker in general, or that he should carry on business as a banker exclusively. A man might become a banker or place himself in the position of a banker with regard to a particular customer, and if the dealings between the lender and the borrower are such that the Court is satisfied that it could be said that the borrower was in the position of a banker to the lender, then the money so lent could be considered as a deposit: 4 A. I. R. 1917 Mad. 916 and 13 A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 168, Rel. on. [Para 9]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 60, 57 and 59 — Deposit or loan—Advance of money to another on term that it should be kept till asked for—Transaction is deposit and not loan.

The word 'deposit' has not been used in a technical sense, that is, the return of the goods or money in specie. [Para 12]

Where a Court finds that plaintiff advanced money to another person and the intention of the parties was that that person should keep the money till asked for by the person advancing it, the transaction is a deposit and not a loan, and a suit for recovery of the same would be governed by Art. 60 and not by Art. 57 or Art. 59. [Paras 13, 14]

Annotation: ('42-Com.) Lim. Act, Art. 60 N. 2 Pt. 2.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 22 — Cross-objection against whom may be filed — Cross-objection against co-respondent can be allowed only if it involves questions common to both appellant and co-respondent — Cross-objection solely directed against co-respondent is not maintainable.

The right of the respondent to urge a cross-objection should be limited to his urging it against the appellant and it is only by way of an exception to the general rule that one respondent may urge cross-objections as against other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal by some of the parties opens out questions, which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents; in other words, only such questions can be raised by way of cross-objections as are common both to the appellant and the co-respondents.

Hence a cross-objection not directed against the appellant solely or against the appellant and co-respondent is not maintainable: Case law referred. [Para 21]

G. R. Mudholkar — for Appellant.

J. K. Dixit, Respondent No. 1 in person, J. P. Dwivedi (for Nos. 4 and 5) and R. J. Bhave for (Nos. 9 (a) and 9(b)) — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a first appeal by Chandiprasad, defendant 2, against whom and other defendants in the suit the plaintiffs' claim is decreed by the trial Court. None of the other defendants has preferred an appeal against the decree but defendants 4, 5 and 6 (who are respondents 8, 9 and 10 in this appeal) have filed a cross-objection praying that as they were not personally liable for the plaintiffs' claim the decree passed against them personally should be set aside.

[2] The plaintiffs' case is that defendant 1, the firm 'Harcharan Ram Gulam' at Itarsi, was a partnership firm of which defendants 2, 3 and Sitaram Rawat were partners and after the death of Sitaram in 1932 defendants 2 to 6 were the partners. This firm carried on business at Itarsi as commission agents and bankers. It used to receive deposits from persons who were on terms of intimacy with the partners. Plaintiff 1, who was one of such persons and who had full trust in the partners of the firm, began depositing his savings with the firm in the name of his deceased brother and brother's son from sambat 1979 (1923 A.D.) under condition that deposits should carry interest at 9 P.C.P.A. and the amounts should remain in deposit until the plaintiffs wanted to withdraw them.

[3] On 20-10-1937, when the present suit was filed, Rs. 9948-4-6 (including interest) was the amount in deposit with the defendant-firm. It was alleged that the defendants did not return the deposits in spite of demands from about six months before the institution of the suit, and that the cause of action for the suit accrued on 10-10-1937, the date of last demand.

[4] We are concerned in this appeal only with the defence of defendant 2, the appellant. His main defence was that on 22-10-1934 the defendant-firm was dissolved with the consent of all partners and it was settled that defendants 4 to 6 should take over all assets and liabilities of the firm and absolve defendants 2 and 3 from all liabilities to the creditors of the firm, and that plaintiff 1, who was one of the creditors of the firm, was aware of the fact of dissolution and the terms thereof and accepted defendants 4 to 6 as his sole debtors and took promissory note from them for the amount due from the firm on 22-10 1934. Defendants 2 and 3 were absolved by plaintiffs from liability. Defendant 2 further contended that the transactions between the plaintiffs and defendant-firm were in the nature of loans and not of deposits. The firm used to receive deposits only from family members of defendants 2, 4, 5 and 6 and from no others. After 22-10-1934, defendants 4, 5 and 6 assumed management of the firm as its sole proprietors and they alone were liable to the plaintiffs for such amounts as might be found due to them. In the additional written statement, dated 25-2-1938, he pleaded that the plaintiffs advanced by way of loans to the firm Rs. 11,863-12-3 up to 22-10-1934, and they received repayments amounting to Rs. 11,231-7-3, including repayment of Rs. 3240-8-9 made by Kanhaiyalal after 22-10-1934, with the result that Rs. 632-5-0 only was due to the plaintiffs on 22-10 1934 and the plaintiffs could therefore claim nothing in excess of damduppat of that amount, that is, Rs. 1264-10-0. In a further statement, dated 21-3-1938, defendant 2 pleaded that the plaintiffs advanced after 22-10-1934, that is, between 20-2-1935 and 10-12-1935, Rs. 3850; that these were debts borrowed by Kanhaiyalal Rawat, defendant 4, on his own account after the dissolution of the firm; and that defendant 2 was not liable for the same, as Kanhaiyalal Rawat had no authority to borrow loans on behalf of defendants 2 and 3. It was further pleaded that the plaintiffs' claim was wholly, or, at any rate, substantially barred by limitation as the amount due was not acknowledged by a duly authorised agent of the firm at any time within three years of the date of suit. He asserted that in January or February 1935 he started partnership business with Rajaram as his partner at Itarsi and cut off all connections with the defendant firm. The plaintiffs advanced amounts to this new firm.

[5] It is, as stated above, not necessary to take into account the statements of the other defendants. It is merely sufficient to note that defendant 3 supported in general the pleadings of defendant 2 (the appellant); while defendants 4, 5 and 6, contrary to the stand taken by defendants 2 and 3, contended that the partnership was dissolved on 23-1-1932 on the death of their father Sitaram and that they demanded from the surviving partners of the firm, namely defendants 2 and 3, accounts of the dissolved firm. It was only in answer to these demands that on 22-10-1934 defendants 2 and 3 handed over all the account-books of the firm to defendant 4. They did not dispute plaintiffs' claim except for the amount of interest claimed in excess of 6 P. C. P. A. They also contended that they were not personally liable for the plaintiffs' claim.

[6] On these pleadings and on the evidence on record the learned Judge of the lower Court held that the firm was not dissolved either on the death of Sitaram on 23-1-1932 as alleged by defendants 4 to 6, or on 22-10-1934 as alleged by defendants 2 and 3. He also held it not proved that as a term of dissolution defendants 4 to 6 undertook to satisfy all the liabilities of the firm and to absolve defendants 2 and 3 from the same, or that the plaintiffs knew of the alleged dissolution on 22-1 1934 and of the alleged agreement between the partners whereunder defendants 2 and 3 were absolved by defendants 4 to 6 from all liabilities due to the firm and the plaintiffs accepted defendants 4 to 6 as their sole debtors and took promissory notes from them for the amounts due. The lower Court held that under S. 45, Partnership Act, the partners continued to be liable to third persons notwithstanding the alleged dissolution of the firm until public notice was given of the dissolution and that private knowledge or notice, not in compliance with S. 72 of the Act, did not absolve other partners from liability in connection with transactions done in the name of the firm. The learned Judge held on issue No. 6 that the amounts credited by the plaintiffs with defendant 1 were by way of deposits and that no question of limitation therefore arose as the suit was governed by Art. 60, Limitation Act. Defendants 2 and 3 were also held liable for the amounts received from the plaintiffs after 22-10-1934 as Kanhaiyalal received the same as the managing partner of the firm and not in his individual capacity. The Central Provinces Moneylenders Act did not apply to deposits and the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to claim interest at 9 P. C. P. A. as agreed. As a result of all these findings the plaintiffs' claim was decreed in full against the property of the defendant-firm in the hands of the receiver and also against partners, defendants 2 to 6 personally.

[7] The first question argued before us by the learned counsel for the appellant was whether the amounts in suit were advanced as loans or were deposits, in other words, whether the plaintiffs' suit was governed by Art. 57 or Art. 59 or by Art. 60, Limitation Act. Art. 60, as it stands now after the amendment of 1929, applies to money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand, including money of a customer in the hands of his banker so payable. In paras. 1 and 2 of the plaint it was definitely alleged that the defendant-firm carried on business as bankers at Itarsi and it used to receive deposits from persons who were on terms of intimacy with the families of its partners. In para. 1 (a) of the written statement of defendant 2, dated 15-12 1937, Chandiprasad (the appellant) admitted para. 1 of the plaint, and as regards para. 2 (a) he pleaded that the firm did receive deposits but only from the family members of defendants 2, 4, 5 and 6 and from no others.

[8] On 21-9-1938 the plaintiffs served interrogatories to be answered by defendant 2, and interrogatory No. 4 was 'Was the firm carrying on business of bankers and commission agents at Itarsi ?' Defendant 2 replied on 20-10-1938 as under:

"The firm was carrying on business of commission agents and bankers at Itarsi. The firm used to borrow money and give loans. It did not do the business of taking deposits excepting from the relatives of its partners."

The fact remains that it was admitted that the firm was carrying on business as bankers at Itarsi. When examined as a witness on 12-1-1940 Chandiprasad for the first time stated that the firm carried on adat business and never kept any deposits of anybody. In our view the fact that the defendant-firm was carrying on the business of a banker must be taken as admitted under O. 8, R. 5, Civil P. C., and it is no longer open to defendant 2 to deny this fact.

[9] The word 'banker' as used in Art. 60, Limitation Act, does not necessarily mean a 'professional' banker. It applies equally, as held in 39 Mad. 1081,[1] to a trader who acts as a banker in relation to a particular customer or customers. Similarly, in A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 168,[2] it was held that under Art. 60, Limitation Act, it is not necessary that the person with whom the amounts are credited should necessarily be a banker in general, or that he should carry on business as a banker exclusively. A man might become a banker or place himself in the position of a banker with regard to a particular customer, and if the dealings between the lender and the borrower are such that the Court is satisfied that it could be said that the borrower was in the position of a banker to the lender, then the money so lent could be considered as a deposit. These observations apply with full force to the present case. This case is cited with approval in 29 Bom. L. R. 427,[3] which is noted by the learned Judge of the lower Court in para. 27 of his judgment, and on the facts in that case, which were very similar to the facts in the present case, the learned Judge held that that was not a case of loans to the firm but that it fell within Art. 60, Limitation Act, being moneys of a customer in the hands of a banker payable on demand.

[10] In 15 Lah. 242[4] the plaintiff credited certain sums of money with the defendants, a firm of bankers. He withdrew amounts and made further deposits and accounts were made occasionally and balances were struck. It was held that the transactions in question commenced and continued to the end as between 'customer' and 'banker' and that Art. 60, Limitation Act, applied and not Art. 57. It was also held on those facts that the amounts credited were by way of deposits and the agreement to pay on demand, though not express, was implied from the course of dealings between the parties or the other circumstances of the case.

[11] In A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 734[5] where money was deposited with a Nattukottai Chetty and there was no evidence as to the terms upon which the transaction was entered into Stone J. held that there was a presumption that the Chetty was in the position of a banker and the person transacting with him was in a position of a customer and that the account was on the demand basis.

[12] The word 'deposit' is not defined in the Limitation Act and it does not appear that that word has been used in a technical sense, that is the return of the goods or money in specie. Such a meaning would be contrary to the ordinary usage of the language. Therefore, Art. 60 should be deemed to apply to a case where one man places money in the hands of another on the term that an equivalent sum has to be paid back on demand.

[13] In 17 Lab. 557[6] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the terms 'loan' and 'deposit' are not mutually exclusive. A deposit with a banker does not necessarily involve the creation of a trust, but may involve only the creation of the relation of debtor and creditor, a loan under conditions. The distinction, which is perhaps the most obvious, is that a deposit not for a fixed term does not seem to impose an immediate obligation on the depositee to seek out the depositor and repay him. He is to keep the money till asked for it. A demand by the depositor would therefore seem to be a normal condition of the obligation of the depositee to repay. The decision in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 462[7] is also to the same effect. In A. I. R. 1940 P. C. 132[8] their Lordships of the Privy Council reiterated their observations in 17 Lah. 557.[6] The result of all these decisions is that where a Court finds that plaintiff advanced money to another person and the intention of the parties was that that person should keep the money till asked for by the person advancing it, the transaction is a deposit and not a loan. (After discussing the oral evidence with regard to deposits made by plaintiffs their Lordships agreed with the conclusion of the lower Court that the amounts credited by the plaintiffs were by way of deposit. The judgment then proceeds thus):

[14] Plaintiff 1 was originally a resident of Itarsi and he was in 1923 practising as a pleader at Hoshangabad. He had amounts credited in the Central Bank, Hoshangabad, as appears from Ex. P-5. He gradually withdrew those amounts and credited them with the defendant-firm. He also credited his subsequent savings with the firm and from time to time withdrew some amounts as required by him. He was on intimate terms with the partners and particularly with Sitaram, and he was also a legal adviser of the defendant-firm. It is not proved that the firm ever executed documents in favour of the plaintiffs or that it passed from time to time acknowledgments in order to keep the amounts within limitation. On several occasions plaintiff 1 himself, or somebody on his behalf, appears to have gone to Itarsi to credit amounts or to withdraw them. There is no occasion from 1923 to 1934 when the specific amount that was alleged to have been borrowed by defendant 1 was returned to the plaintiffs. Borrowing of a loan postulates that the borrower had an immediate necessity to borrow. The defendants could have established this fact from their account-books. These account-books have not however been produced; nor is any oral evidence adduced to prove that even on a single occasion the partners went to the plaintiffs to request them for an advance of a loan. The learned counsel for the appellant has no doubt contended that the course of dealings between the parties, as reflected in the khata of the plaintiffs, Ex. P-8, show that repayments were voluntary and not because of any demand by the plaintiffs. There is nothing on record to support this. It, however, appears from these extracts, Ex. P-8, pp. 157-A to 157-C of the paper book, that on many occasions amounts were credited by the hand of the plaintiffs or their clerk Murlidhar and the amounts withdrawn were also received personally by them, and this clearly indicates that it was a khata of deposits and withdrawals and not of debts and repayments. It does not appear that the defendant-firm which is said to be carrying on business on a large scale (vide 3 D. W. 1 and 3 D. W. 4) would stand in need of borrowing a petty amount such as Rs. 100 received by the defendant-firm on 11-2-1927. These are circumstances which support the plaintiffs' plea that the transactions between the parties were transactions of deposits and not of loans. If it was merely a case of loan it is difficult to believe that plaintiff 1, who was one of the leading legal practitioners at Hoshangabad, would not insist on defendants executing any document or acknowledgment and would allow his valuable claim to be barred by time. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court in holding that the amounts credited with the defendant-firm from time to time were by way of deposits and that the plaintiffs' suit is governed by Art. 60, Limitation Act.

[15] The next question that was argued was whether the partnership was dissolved on 22-10-1934 on which date, according to the appellant, defendants 2 to 6 were partners of the defendant firm. (After discussing the documentary as well as the oral evidence their Lordships came to the following conclusion:) We therefore confirm the finding of the lower Court that the alleged dissolution of the firm (defendant 1) on 22-10-1934 has not been proved.

[16] In view of the above finding, it is not at all necessary to go into the other questions, namely, the knowledge of the plaintiffs regarding the alleged dissolution of the firm and the acceptance of Kanhaiyalal by the plaintiff as his sole debtor in place of all the partners. The learned Judge of the lower Court has considered both these aspects. On issue 5, the learned Judge has discussed the oral evidence and held, disbelieving the evidence of the defendants and Kashiram (2 D. W. 3) and Amarchand (3 D. W. 5), that the plaintiffs were informed, or that they had knowledge, of the alleged dissolution of the firm, and we have hardly anything to add to the verdict of the learned Judge on this evidence. We further agree with the learned Judge that this issue does not in fact arise as there is no plea by the defendants that they gave any public notice as required by S. 45, Partnership Act.

[17] There is also no reliable evidence that the plaintiffs absolved defendants 2 and 3 from their liability to return the outstanding amounts due from the firm (defendant 1). No sound reason has been given why the plaintiffs should choose to act against their interests in doing so. The learned Judge of the lower Court has not accepted this part of the defendants' case and we entirely agree with him.

[18] In conclusion, we hold that there was no dissolution of the firm (defendant 1) and that in spite of the dissolution, if any, the partners defendants 2 to 6 continued to be liable to the plaintiffs.

[19] It has already been found above that what took place on 22-10-1934 was merely a change in the management of the firm, that is, Kanhaiyalal became the managing partner in place of Chandiprasad. After 22-10-1934 the plaintiffs deposited from time to time Rs. 3850 with the firm and withdrew Rs. 3240-8-0. Kanhaiyalal, as 4 to 6 D. W. 1, deposed that during the time of his management the plaintiffs deposited a few items and he utilized those deposits for meeting pressing demands of other creditors. He deposed that he received those deposits and allowed withdrawals to the plaintiffs in his capacity as the manager of the firm. It is indeed strange that while the defendant-appellant wants to take advantage of the withdrawals or the alleged repayments to the extent of Rs. 3240-8-0, he denies liability for the deposits to the extent of Rs. 3850. If this part of the defence were accepted, the plaintiffs' claim would be reduced at the most by Rs. 609-8-0. In our view the transactions are binding on the defendants, that is the deposits as well as withdrawals after 22-10-1934.

[20] The learned counsel for the appellant did not press the question about reduction of interest; in fact, he abandoned it with the result that on the date of suit Rs. 9948-4-6 was due by defendants 1 to 6 to the plaintiffs and the learned Judge of the lower Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim correctly. We uphold that decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

[21] As to the cross-objection by defendants 4, 5 and 6, it may be noted that it is directed solely against the plaintiffs who are co-respondents in the appeal. No relief is claimed against the appellant, namely, Chandiprasad, and, in fact, he is not in any way interested in the relief which is actually claimed in the cross-objection. The question, therefore, arises whether such a cross-objection can be entertained under O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C.

[22] It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad, Bombay, Calcutta, Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's, Court of the Central Provinces that the right of the respondent to urge a cross-objection should be limited to his urging it against the appellant and that it is only by way of an exception to the general rule that one respondent may urge cross-objections as against other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal by some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents; in other words, only such questions can be raised by way of cross-objections as are common both to the appellant and the co-respondents. The point has been discussed fully in the A. I. R. Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure Vol. III, pp. 3077-3078, and the relevant decisions of different High Courts are also noted therein. The question has been discussed also at length in 20 Luck. 45[9] and A. I. R. 1946 ALL. 395.[10] In 20 Luck. 45[9] it is held :

"Where a cross-objection which has been filed has nothing to do whatever with the appeal of the appellant but is directed solely against the other respondents it cannot be entertained."

In A. I. R. 1946 ALL. 395[10] the Divisional Bench of that High Court held :

"As a general rule a respondent can file a cross-objection only against an appellant and it is only in exceptional cases where the decree proceeds on a common ground or the interest of the appellant is intermixed with that of the respondent that a respondent is allowed to urge a cross-objection against a co-respondent."

The same view was taken by the Judicial Commissioner's Court in cases reported in 9 C.P. L. R. 62[11] and 14 C. P. L. R. 46.[12] It is no doubt true that the Madras High Court and also the Lahore High Court have taken a different view on this point. The Madras view is mainly based on a Full Bench case reported in 38 Mad. 705[13] in which the opinion is based on the practice which appears to have prevailed in that Court for a long time. The view in A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 39[14] is based on the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in 38 Mad. 705[13] already discussed. In view of preponderance of authority in favour of the non-maintainability of cross-objections not directed against the appellant either solely or against the appellant and co-respondent, we hold that the cross-objection filed by defendants 4, 5 and 6 is not maintainable and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 11 of 1941, Decided on 26-2-1946, from appellate decree of Gruer J., D/- 7-11-1940, in S. A. No. 108 of 1938.

(a) Contract Act (1872), Ss. 65 and 2 (j) — 'Becomes void' — Meaning of — Contract of sale ceasing to be enforceable by reason of law of limitation — Contract does not become void within S. 65 — Vendee cannot claim refund of consideration.

A contract becomes void when it ceases to be enforceable by reason of some substantive law and not by reason of some procedural regulation such as the law of limitation. Thus where a vendee of land who has not been given possession under the contract of sale and against whom an order under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C., has been passed fails to sue for possession of the land within 3 years as required by Art. 47, Limitation Act, the contract of sale does not become void within the meaning of S. 65, Contract Aet, so as to entitle him to recover the consideration of the sale deed from the vendor : 26 A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 110, Foll.

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 55 (2) — Clause includes implied covenants for title and for quiet enjoyment but not covenant to deliver possession.

Under S. 55 (2) there is not only an implied covenant for title but also a covenant for quiet enjoyment: 19 A. I. R. 1932 Nag. 5 (F. B.) and 21 A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 16, Rel. on.

The covenant for quiet enjoyment does not include a covenant to deliver possession. Hence where possession is not delivered to vendee under a sale deed no question of breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment can arise in such a case. [Paras 20 and 22]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 28 and Arts. 47 and 116 — Possession not given to vendee under sale deed—Subsequent order under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C. against vendee — Suit by vendee for possession filed after 3 years from order —Suit dismissed as barred by Art. 47 — Subsequent suit by vendee after 6 years from sale deed for compensation for failure to deliver possession held barred—Vendee's right to recover possession is also lost.

A vendee under a sale deed dated 26-6-1929 was not given possession of the land sold. In subsequent proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., an order under S. 145 (6) of that Code was passed against the vendee on 3-11-1930. The vendee sued for possession of the property in 1934 but it was dismissed as barred by time. The vendee thereupon brought a suit for refund of the consideration on 26th September 1936.

Held (1) that the cause of action for enforcement of the statutory obligation under S. 55 (1) (f) to deliver possession arose on the date of the sale and as the suit was filed more than 6 years from the date of the sale the claim for enforcement of that statutory obligation or for compensation for breach thereof was barred by limitation.

(2) that the plaintiff would have been entitled to sue for possession on the basis of title within 12 years from the sale but as there was an order under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C. against the plaintiff he was bound to sue for possession within 3 years and as he failed to do so his right to recover possession was lost. The dismissal of his previous suit for possession did not furnish any cause of action to the plaintiff and he was not entitled to claim any compensation for his failure to obtain possession of the property sold to him.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent appeal by the defendants against the judgment dated 7-11-1940 passed by Gruer J. in Second Appeal No. 108 of 1938.

[2] The case out of which this appeal arises has a chequered history. The claim of the plaintiff was decreed by the trial Court, set aside in first appeal and was again decreed in second appeal.

[3] The relevant facts in the case are as follows: Appellant 1, Vishwanath is the son of appellant 2, Narayan. Vishwanath was the owner of survey No. 142/3 of Mauza Surji alias Peth Mohommad Nagar, Taluq Daryapur which was inherited by him from his mother. His title to the property was not disputed before us. Vishwanath sold the field to Sampatlal, the plaintiff, on 26-6-1929 for Rs. 1000 (Ex. P-3). The sale was one with a condition of repurchase : the vendee was to reconvey the property to Vishwanath if he paid Rs. 1000 to him on 31-1-1930.

[4] On 13-7-1929 Vishwanath executed a deed of relinquishment (Ex. P-4) in favour of his father Narayan under which he relinquished his rights in his property inclusive of the plot in dispute. There was however no formal deed of transfer conveying the property or the field in dispute to Narayan. Under S. 48, T. P. Act, the title of the plaintiff derived under a prior sale deed prevailed over the title of defendant 2 which was based on the relinquishment which was later in point of time.

[5] There were proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., against Narayan, defendant 2 and Sampatlal, the plaintiff (Misc. Criminal Case No. 21 of 1930). The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ellichpur, held that Narayan was all along in possession of the plot in dispute and passed an order in his favour on 3-11-1930 under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C., forbidding all disturbance till he was evicted in due course of law by a civil Court (Ex. P-1). Under Art. 47, Limitation Act, Sampatlal was bound to sue for possession within three years from 3-11-1930 the date of the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against him under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C. This was however not done.

[6] Sampatlal filed Civil Suit No. 70A of 1934 against Narayan in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Daryapur, for possession of the plot and mesne profits for three years. This suit was dismissed as barred by limitation on 21-9-1934: (Exhibit P-2). Thereupon the plaintiff filed Civil Suit No. 130 A of 1936 on 26-9-1936 against Vishwanath and his father in the Court of the 2nd Class, Subordinate Judge, Daryapur, and claimed a decree for Rs. 1000 against them. In para. 2 of the plaint he stated that he had a charge under S. 55 (6) (b), T. P. Act, on the property in suit for Rs. 1000, the amount of consideration paid by him. In the alternative he pleaded in para. 3 that the deed dated 29-6-1929 was a mortgage by conditional sale and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for foreclosure of the property. In para. 4 he stated that defendant 1 was liable for the claim of Rs. 1000 either by way of damages or for failure of consideration because his title was found to be defective and the plaintiff's possession was obstructed. On these allegations he claimed reliefs in the alternative: (1) for a decree for Rs. 1000 in enforcement of the charge under S. 55 (6) (b), T. P. Act, or (2) for a decree for foreclosure in case the amount was not paid, or (3) for a decree for Rs 1000 against defendant 1 if the reliefs (1) and (2) were not granted. The defendants filed separate written statements and denied the claim. It is not necessary for the purpose of the decision of this appeal to set out their defence.

[7] The Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Daryapur, passed a decree on 30 4-1937 for Rs. 1000 with interest at 6 p.c.p.a. from 29-6-1939 till realisation. The Court of the Additional District Judge, Daryapur, in Civil Appeal No. 21-A of 1937 by the decree dated 30-11-1937 allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. This decree was set aside and the decree of the trial Court was restored by Gruer J. in Second Appeal No. 108 of 1938 on 7-11-1940. It is against this decree that the present appeal has been filed. During the pendency of this appeal, Sampatlal died and his daughter, Deokabai, has been brought on the record as his legal representative.

[8] The decision of Gruer J. was based on the view that a fresh cause of action accrued in favour of the plaintiff on 21-9-1934 when his suit for possession was dismissed, that on that date the contract for sale became void and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under S. 65, Contract Act Rs. 1000, the consideration of the sale, as the suit was filed within three years from that date.

[9] The question for decision in this appeal is whether the view is correct.

[10] The decision of the appeal turns on the interpretation of S. 65, Contract Act, which is reproduced below:

"When an agreement is discovered to be void, or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it."

[10a] The claim of the plaintiff was not based on this section but if on the facts found the section applied Gruer J. was justified in granting relief to the plaintiff even though he had not made that a ground for his claim. The point raised before us is that the section had no application to the case and we have to decide whether this contention is sound.

[11] Reference may be made to a few clauses of S. 2, Contract Act:

* * *

(g) An agreement not enforceable by law is said to be void:

(h) An agreement enforceable by law is a contract:

(j) A contract which ceases to be enforceable by law becomes void when it ceases to be enforceable."

[12] Section 65, Contract Act, deals with (a) agreements enforceable by law and (b) with agreements not so enforceable: vide 45 ALL. 179[1] at p. 184.

[13] In 1939 Rang. L. R. 358[2] at p. 370 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed:

"The solution is, in their Lordships' view, to be found in the wording of S. 2 (j) itself. Not every unenforceable contract is declared void, but only those unenforceable by law, and those words mean not unenforceable by reason of some procedural regulation, but unenforceable by the substantive law. For example, a contract which was from its inception illegal, such as a contract with an alien enemy, would be avoided by S. 2 (g), and one which became illegal in the course of its performance, such as a contract with one who had been an alien friend but later became an alien enemy, would be avoided by S. 2 (j). A mere failure to sue within the time specified by the statute of limitations or an inability to sue by reason of the provisions of one of the Orders under the Civil Procedure Code would not cause a contract to become void."

[14] If the above decision had been placed before Gruer J. he would not have reached the conclusion he did.

[15] The contract in favour of the plaintiff became unenforceable not by reason of any substantive law but by reason of the rule of limitation because the plaintiff did not sue for possession within three years under Art. 47, Limitation Act, as he was bound to do, as an order against him had been passed under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C.

[16] Applying the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in the case cited above, we hold that the contract in favour of the plaintiff did not become unenforceable by law, and did not become void within the meaning of S. 65, Contract Act, which had thus no application and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the consideration of the sale deed simply because his suit for possession was dismissed as barred by limitation.

[17] The learned counsel for the respondent however contended that there was a failure of consideration on 21-9-1934 when his suit for possession was dismissed, that the plaintiff was entitled to a refund of the consideration with interest and that his claim was within limitation. Two questions arise out of this contention: (i) whether the plaintiff had any cause of action and (ii) whether the claim was within limitation.

[18] In the sale deed dated 26-6-1929 there is no express covenant either for title or for quiet enjoyment. There is a recital in the deed that the property had not been transferred and that there was a contract of indemnity to the effect that if the vendee were to lose the property by reason of a prior transfer, the vendor would be liable to the vendee to make good his loss. The property had not been transferred by the vendor prior to the sale deed. There was thus no breach of that covenant and the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any damages on that account.

[19] In English law the usual covenants for title are: for right to convey; for quiet enjoyment; for freedom from incumbrances; and for further assurance: vide Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edn.) vol. 29, para. 662, p. 455; 28 N. L. R. 31[3] at p. 40.

[20] Under S. 55 (2), T. P. Act, there is an implied covenant for title. This covenant for title has been interpreted to mean a covenant for quiet enjoyment also: vide 28 N. L. R. 31;[3] 30 N. L. R. 138.[4]

[21] The plaintiff based his cause of action on two grounds (i) that the title of his vendor, Vishwanath, was found defective and (ii) that the possession of the plaintiff was disturbed. The first ground is obviously not tenable, as the suit of the plaintiff for possession was dismissed on the ground of limitation and not on the ground that he or his vendor had no title. The owner of the plot in suit was Vishwanath and he had the right to convey it to the plaintiff. The title of the vendor to convey was not disputed before us, and that being the position, there was no breach of the covenant for title and the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any damages on that account.

[22] The covenant for quiet enjoyment does not include a covenant to deliver possession. In this case possession had not been delivered to the plaintiff under the sale deed dated 26-6-1929 and there was no subsequent disturbance of his possession after it had been delivered. To such a case covenant for quiet enjoyment is not applicable: 25 Bom. 593,[5] 26 Bom. 750.[6] The grounds which the plaintiff urged as the basis of his claim were thus not tenable.

[23] Under S. 55 (1) (f), T. P. Act, the vendor was bound to give, on being so required, the vendee or such person as he directs, such possession of the property as its nature admits. The vendee never asked Vishwanath, the vendor, to deliver possession of the property to him. The cause of action for enforcement of that statutory duty arose on 26-6-1929 the date of the sale and the plaintiff should have sued to enforce that statutory obligation within six years from that date. As the suit was filed on 26-9-1936 more than six years after the sale, the claim for enforcement of that statutory obligation or for compensation for breach thereof was barred by limitation.

[24] The plaintiff would have been entitled to sue for possession on the basis of his title within 12 years from the date of his sale but as there was an order under S. 145 (6), Criminal P. C. against the plaintiff, he was bound to sue for possession within three years, and as he failed to do so he lost the right to recover possession of the field sold to him.

[25] The decisions in 28 N. L. R. 31[3] and 30 N. L. R. 138[4] are not applicable as in each of those cases the cause of action was based on dispossession subsequent to the sale and it was held that there was a failure of consideration and that limitation ran from the date of dispossession. That is not the case here as there was no delivery of possession at all.

[26] The plaintiff had a good title but he lost it as he did not enforce it within three years. The dismissal of his previous suit for possession did not furnish any cause of action to the plaintiff and he was not entitled to claim any compensation for his failure to obtain possession of the property sold to him.

[27] The appeal succeeds, the decree appealed against is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed. The circumstances of the case leave no room for doubt that the defendants who are father and son have been acting in collusion in order to deprive the plaintiff of his claim. The parties to bear costs in all the Courts as incurred.

Misc. Appeal No. 273 of 1945, Decided on 23-9-1947, from order of Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 18-6-1945.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 75—Order setting aside adjudication — No second appeal lies — It may be treated as revision.

Under S. 75, no second appeal lies against an order setting aside an adjudication. Under proviso to the section however, the appeal may be treated as a revision petition. [Para 5]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 9 (1) (c)—Three months' period is not period of limitation but a condition precedent — Delay in filing petition cannot be condoned under Ss. 5 and 14, Limitation Act — S. 78 (1) contemplates application — S. 9 (1) (c) contemplates "petition" and not application — Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 78 (1)—Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 5 and 14.

The period of three months, prescribed under section 9 (1) (c) is not a period of limitation but is a condition precedent to the filing of the insolvency petition itself. The insolvency petition is after all based upon some act of insolvency, on the part of the debtors, and it is that act of insolvency which has been committed within three months before the presentation of the petition, which alone can serve as a valid basis for the insolvency petition and no other: 25 A. I. R. 1938 Mad. 898; 22 A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 857 (F. B.) and 26 A. I. R. 1939 Cal. 313, Rel. on; 29 A. I. R. 1942 All. 429 (F. B.), Dissent. [Para 8]

As the period of three months has not been prescribed as the period of limitation, it follows, as a matter of inevitable corollary, that the provisions of Ss. 5 and 14, Limitation Act, cannot come into play and the delay in filing the insolvency petition in the proper Court cannot be condoned. [Para 9]

Moreover, the provisions of S. 78 (1) relate to applications and not to petitions. Section 9 (1) contemplates a "petition" and not an "application." There is no doubt that a distinction has been made between a "petition" and an "application" in the Provincial Insolvency Act : 29 A. I. R. 1942 All. 429 (F. B.), Rel. on. [Para 9]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 35 — Adjudication based on transfer as act of insolvency — No notice to transferee — Order of adjudication is not conclusive against him—He can apply to set it aside — Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 27 and 75.

The order of adjudication is conclusive proof that any legal character which it confers or takes away accrued or ceased as stated in the order. The order is not conclusive proof of anything more than that the insolvent has been so adjudged. A judgment in rem is conclusive only as regards status but not as regards the grounds on which the order is based.

Where the order of adjudication based upon a certain transfer as an act of insolvency is passed without notice to the transferee, the order is not conclusive against him and he as transferee cannot be considered as person "aggrieved" by the order of adjudication within the meaning of S. 75 and therefore simply because he does not appeal against the order and get it set aside, he cannot be regarded as bound by it. Consequently the transferee is entitled to apply for the annulment of adjudication : 34 A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 161 (F. B.), Foll. [Para 10]

Judgment. — This appeal has been filed by the creditor Chintaman against the order of Mr. H. C. Sen, District Judge, Wardha, who having affirmed the order of the Insolvency Court, set aside the order of adjudication.

[2] The facts of this case briefly are these. Mt. Johra Bai and her husband Sk. Nasir were declared insolvents on the application of the appellant Chintaman. This application was first presented in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Wardha, on 13-1-1941, but it was returned to the appellant for presentation to the proper Court on 20-1-1941. Accordingly it was represented in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Wardha, the same day. It was on the strength of the appellant's application, filed under S. 9, Provincial Insolvency Act, that the debtors were adjudicated insolvents. This was in June 1941. Thereafter the creditor Chintaman put in an application under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, for annulment of the transfer, made by the debtors in favour of the respondents. The said transfer was annulled after enquiry by the Bankruptcy Court, and the order of annulment was upheld both by the first appellate Court as well as by this Court. It is pertinent to note at this stage that the order of adjudication was founded upon this transfer, viz., sale-deed, dated 14-10-1940, which was challenged as an act of bankruptcy on the part of the debtors.

[3] Some time later, the transferees (respondents before me) filed an application under S. 35, Provincial Insolvency Act, for the annulment of the order of adjudication, on the ground that the act of insolvency, on which the creditor's petition was grounded had not occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition, as required by the mandatory provisions of S. 9 (1) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act. It was contended by the respondents that the creditor's petition could be deemed to have been effectively presented, under S. 9 of the Act, only on 20-1-1941, on which day it was actually filed in the proper Court, which was beyond three months from the date of the transfer, dated 14-10-1940, which grounded the act of insolvency, on the part of the debtors. The creditor on the other hand contended that he was entitled to the benefit of Ss. 5 and 14, Limitation Act, under the provisions of S. 78 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, and he was, therefore, entitled to deduct the period that was occupied by the proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Wardha, before whom the petition was lodged on 13-1-1941 within three months.

[4] The Insolvency Court held that the provisions of Ss. 5 and 14, Limitation Act, were not applicable, and annulled the order of adjudication, on the ground that it was without jurisdiction. The creditor preferred an appeal to the District Court, Wardha, which affirmed the order of the first Court and dismissed the appeal. The creditor has now come up in miscellaneous (second) appeal.

[5] The learned advocate for the respondents has raised a preliminary objection that this appeal is incompetent, since there is no provision for second appeal under S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, I think that his contention is correct. But, however, I am inclined to entertain this appeal as a revision petition, under the proviso to S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, and shall decide on that basis.

[6] The main points for determination in this appeal are :

i. Whether the creditor is entitled to the benefit of Ss. 5 and 14, Limitation Act, under the provisions of S. 78, Provincial Insolvency Act, and

ii. Whether the order of adjudication on which the subsequent annulment proceedings were founded is conclusive against the transferees so that they cannot apply for its annulment."

[7] Point 1 : There is no doubt a judicial conflict of opinion, on the question, as to whether the provisions of S. 9 (1) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act, prescribe the period of three months as a period of limitation; or whether the said provisions lay down a condition precedent to the filing of the petition by the creditor. The Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court reported in I. L. R. (1943) ALL. 84[1] no doubt lays down that the period of three months referred to in S. 9 (1) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act, is a period of limitation. It has, however, been observed in that case, that though a period of limitation is in one sense a condition precedent to the enforcing of rights and remedies in a Court of law, yet it does not cease to be a period of limitation. On the other hand, we have got a string of cases of other High Courts, which have taken a contrary view. In I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 24[2] their Lordships have held that the period of three months, fixed by S. 9 (1) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act, is not a period of limitation, but constitutes a condition to an adjudication, and consequently, where the alleged act of insolvency had taken place more than three months prior to the presentation of the petition, it could not be set up as a ground for adjudication. They have also held that S. 35, Provincial Insolvency Act, empowers a Judge sitting in insolvency to annul an adjudication, when it is clear that, on the materials before the Court, at the time the order of adjudication was passed, it had no jurisdiction to pass the order. The section leaves the Court no discretion in the matter. This view was followed by the same High Court in a later Full Bench case reported in 58 Mad. 794[3] at p. 798. Beasley C. J. observed as follows :

"On the other hand, I am of the view that S. 9 (1) (c) is a condition precedent to the filing of the petition, that is to say, the petitioning creditor must, on the day when he presents his petition, have in view some act of insolvency which the debtor has committed within the preceding three months. He has to see on that date, and on that only, what acts of insolvency are available to him; and he cannot make use of any act of insolvency which has been committed outside the period of three months, as that ceased to be an act of insolvency."

A similar view has also been taken by the Calcutta High Court in I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 425.[4]

[8] Apart from the cases cited above, I think that the provisions of S. 9 (1) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act, are absolutely clear on the point. These provisions are :

"9 (1) A creditor shall not be entitled to present an insolvency petition against a debtor unless —

(a) .....

(b) ....., and

(c) the act of insolvency on which the petition is grounded has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition."

It is quite obvious from these provisions that the creditor has no right even to present an insolvency petition, unless the act of insolvency, on which the petition is grounded, has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition. These provisions are absolutely clear and emphatic and they lay down certain conditions, on which the creditor may file his insolvency petition. This is borne out also by the marginal note to S. 9, Provincial Insolvency Act. The period of three months, prescribed under S. 9 (1) (c) is not a period of limitation but is a condition precedent to the filing of the insolvency petition itself. The insolvency petition is after all based upon some act of insolvency, on the part of the debtors, and it is that act of insolvency, which has been committed within three months before the presentation of the petition, which alone can serve as a valid basis for the insolvency petition and no other.

[9] As the period of three months has not been prescribed as the period of limitation, it follows, as a matter of inevitable corollary, that the provisions of Ss. 5 and 14, Limitation Act, cannot come into play. It has been contended by the learned counsel, appearing in support of this appeal, that under S. 78 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, it has been laid down that the provisions of Ss. 5 and 12, Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to appeals and applications under the Act; and it is, therefore, argued that the provisions of S. 5 of the Act must be extended to the facts of this case, for the purpose of condoning the delay in filing the insolvency petition in the proper Court. I have already held that the case cannot attract the provisions of the Limitation Act, as S. 9 (1) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act, does not lay down a period of limitation, but lays down an essential prerequisite for the filing of the insolvency petition. But there is another reason for holding that the provisions of S. 78 (1) of the Act are inapplicable. These provisions relate to applications and not to petitions. Section 9 (1) contemplates a "petition" and not an "application." There is no doubt that a distinction has been made between a "petition" and an "application" in the Provincial Insolvency Act. Their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in a Full Bench case reported in I. L. R. (1943) ALL. 84,[1] have discussed this question as to whether the petition for insolvency is not an "application" within the meaning of that clause. At p. 90 Iqbal Ahmad, C. J. has observed as follows:

"Sections 6 to 28 are under the sub-heading 'Acts of Insolvency,' 'Petition' or 'Order of adjudication,' and Ss. 52 to 54 are preceded by the sub-heading 'Effect of insolvency on antecedent transaction.' The words 'apply' or 'application' have, on the other hand, been used in relation to applications for protection order, for order of discharge, for annulment of adjudication, for reversal of the decisions of a receiver and for other kindred matters. I conclude from this that the Legislature has used the word 'petition' in the Act with reference to matters relating to acts of insolvency, and the word 'application' has been used with respect to motions other than those that have direct reference to acts of insolvency. It follows that petition for insolvency either under S. 9 or S. 13 of the Act is not an 'application'."

I, therefore, agree with the lower Courts in holding that the creditor-appellant was not entitled to exclude the period of time from 14th January 1941 to 20th January 1941, under the provisions of S. 5 or S. 14, Limitation Act, and that the order adjudicating the debtors insolvents, passed on 30th June 1941, by the Bankruptcy Court was illegal and ultra vires.

[10] The other point raised by Mr. D. B. Padhye on behalf of the creditor-appellant has been concluded by the Full Bench ruling of this Court, reported in I. L. R. (1947) Nag. 85.[6] Their Lordships have observed:

"An order of adjudication in an insolvency case is admissible to prove the legal character of the debtor as an insolvent but is inadmissible as against third parties to prove that the act on the basis of which the order was passed was an act of insolvency."

Pollock J. has observed as under:

"The order of adjudication, under that section, is conclusive proof that any legal character which it confers or takes away accrued or ceased as stated in the order. It does not, however, appear to me that the order is conclusive proof of anything more than that the insolvent has been so adjudged. It seems to me that a judgment in rem is conclusive only as regards status but not as regards the grounds on which the order is based."

It is admitted that the order of adjudication was passed by the Bankruptcy Court, without notice to the transferees. It is, therefore, futile to argue that the rights of the transferees could be concluded by any order that was passed in their absence and behind their back. The respondents as transferees could not, therefore, be regarded as persons "aggrieved" by the order of adjudication within the meaning of S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, and it is idle to contend that they are bound by the order of adjudication, simply for the reason, that they failed to appeal against the order of adjudication and get it set aside, before the annulment proceedings were set on foot.

[11] For the foregoing reasons I affirm the order of the lower appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 236 of 1946, Decided on 25-7-1947, from order of District Judge, Nagpur, D/- 27-8-1946.

(a) C. P. and Berar Money-lenders Act (13 [XIII] of 1934), S. 11—Judgment-debtor held, on facts not entitled to instalments under S. 11.

The debt was borrowed more than 12 years before the date of the application for instalments under S. 11 and in spite of the decree being passed on 16th February 1940 nothing was paid till 30th March 1944. Though the decree-holder gave sufficient concessions to the judgment-debtor for payment by easy instalments he did not care to pay even a single instalment in time and defaulted the first two instalments. The last three payments were made to avoid the coercive process:

Held that the circumstances did not speak of the bona fides of the judgment-debtor entitling him to the concession of instalments provided for under S. 11.

[Para 9]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 and O. 23, R. 3—Adjustment decree granting concession to judgment-debtor to pay by instalments—Failure by judgment-debtor to pay instalments regularly—Executing Court cannot give relief against exigibility clause.

Adjustment decrees are always based on a contract between the parties and no Court has power to interfere with the terms of the contract except to the extent permitted by law. Therefore a Court cannot go behind the compromise decree except when there is any term which is either against law or which offends against public policy. [Para 11]

Where the adjusted decree grants a concession to the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal amount by instalments and provides that on default the whole amount shall become exigible, the judgment-debtor can take advantage of the adjusted decree only if he carries out his obligation as per terms of that decree. If he fails to pay any of the instalments the Court has no power to relieve him from the exigibility clause: 21 A. I. R. 1934 Bom. 370 and 28 A. I. R. 1941 Sind 196, Rel. on.

P. P. Deo — for Appellant.

A. V. Khare — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous (second) appeal by the judgment-debtor arising out of Execution Case No. 87B of 1939 decided on 16th February 1940. The appellant borrowed from the respondent a loan in 1934. As he failed to repay the same he was sued in 1939 and a decree for Rs. 4428-3-0 was obtained against him on 16th February 1940. Even after the passing of the decree the appellant failed to pay anything until 22nd November 1943. On that date adjustment of the aforesaid decree was recorded whereby as per agreement between the parties the decree was made payable in eight instalments with interest at 3 per cent. per annum and the judgment-debtor's property was charged. It was also provided that in default of any two instal. ments the whole of the decretal amount would become exigible.

[2] The judgment-debtor made the following payments towards the decree :

Rs. 250 on 30th March 1944 (towards the instalment of Rs. 500 due on 31st March 1944)

Rs. 950 on 25th January 1946 (nothing was paid towards the second instalment which fell due on 31st March 1945)

Rs. 600 on 1st April 1946.
Rs. 581 on 28th March 1947.

It is clear from the aforesaid dates and the amounts paid that the first two instalments due on 31st March 1944 and 31st March 1945 were defaulted by the judgment-debtor, the first partially and the second fully. It was said that in July 1945 that is after the actual amount had become exigible according to the terms of the adjusted decree, the judgment-debtor offered a payment of Rs. 500, but the decree-holder refused the same; subsequent three payments were made in Court.

[3] On 15th January 1946, the judgment-debtor put in an application which purported to be one under O. 21, R. 2 and S. 148, Civil P. C. The judgment-debtor stated in that application that he could not pay the instalments on proper dates on account of his illness and the illness of his daughter. He stated that he intends to satisfy the entire decretal amount but he is not in a position to pay the same at once. He prayed that time for payment be extended as set forth above and the amount paid be adjusted accordingly.

[4] The application was opposed by the decree-holder who contended that according to the exigibility clause he was entitled to realize the entire decretal amount at once, and that the judgment-debtor was not entitled to any more concession.

[5] The executing Court allowed the judgment-debtor's application on the authority of S. 151, Civil P. C. It directed that the decree-holder be paid the amount in deposit, that the amount be adjusted as per terms of the adjustment order dated 22-11-43 and that the payments be made according to the instalments as fixed by that order. In short, the Court cured all the defaults and ordered waiver of the exigibility clause.

[6] The decree-holder appealed to the lower appellate Court and it set aside the order of the executing Court. It held that S. 151, Civil P. C., was wrongly invoked and that on the undisputed facts the judgment-debtor had disentitled himself to the concessions shown to him by the adjustment decree. The judgment-debtor has therefore filed this miscellaneous appeal.

[7] The main argument of the learned counsel for the appellant was that the judgment-debtor's application dated 25-1-46 should have been treated as one under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act, and exercising discretion under that section, the Court should have made the decretal amount payable in such number of instalments as were already fixed by the adjustment decree, or with such variations as the Court may have thought fit. The learned counsel did not support the order of the first Court based on S. 151, Civil P. C.

[8] It is quite clear to my mind that the application dated 25-1-46 was never meant to be one under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act, and was not also pressed as such. If it was so pressed, several questions might have arisen, viz., whether S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act, applied to a decree based on a compromise or only to a decree according to the adjudication by a Court, and further whether the circumstances within the meaning of that section meant financial circumstances or other circumstances as well. These questions were not considered by the Court below as they were not raised and the application was never considered as one under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. I cannot therefore permit the judgment-debtor to treat the application dated 25-1-46 as one under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act.

[9] On the facts and circumstances of this case, no Court would have exercised its discretion in granting instalments under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. The debt was borrowed more than 12 years before and in spite of the decree being passed on 16th February 1940 nothing appears to have been paid till 30th March 1944. Though the decree-holder gave sufficient concessions to the judgment-debtor for payment by easy instalments he did not care to pay even a single instalment in time and defaulted the first two instalments as stated above. The last three payments were, I think, made to avoid the coercive process. These are not the circumstances which speak of the bona fides of the judgment-debtor entitling him to the concessions provided for under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. Even on merits therefore I would (not?) allow the application under S. 11 of the Act.

[10] It was next urged that even apart from S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act, the executing Court should have interfered and relieved the judgment-debtor of the exigibility clause taking into consideration the hard circumstances he had to pass through. In my opinion, neither the circumstances of the case nor the law permitted the executing Court to do so and I am in complete agreement with the lower appellate Court that the first Court was entirely wrong in invoking S. 151, Civil P. C.

[11] Adjustment decrees are always based on a contract between the parties and no Court has power to interfere with the terms of the contract except to the extent permitted by law. It is therefore that a Court cannot go behind the compromise decree except when there is any term which is either against law or which offends against public policy.

[12] The adjusted decree in the present case is what can be termed a concession decree. It was based on a contract between the parties which was entered into in order to give concessions to the judgment-debtor. Such a decree cannot be interfered with by the executing Court and it cannot substitute a new contract for a contract agreed to between the parties and incorporated in the adjustment decree.

[13] A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court observed very aptly in 58 Bom. 610[1] at page 617 thus :

"The law on the subject is not, I think, open to any serious question. If there is an agreement to pay a sum of money by a particular date with a condition that if the money is not paid on that date a larger sum shall be paid, that condition is in the nature of a penalty against which a Court of Equity can grant relief and award to the party seeking payment only such damage as he has suffered by the non-performance of the contract. But if, on the other hand, there is an agreement to pay a particular sum followed by a condition allowing to the debtor a concession, for example, the payment of a lesser sum, or payment by instalments, by a particular date or dates, then the party seeking to take advantage of that concession must carry out strictly the conditions on which it was granted, and there is no power in the Court to relieve him from the obligation of so doing."

These observations were cited with approval in a later case reported in I. L. R. (1941) Kar. 389[2] at page 392. I am in respectful agreement with these observations and therefore hold that in the present case the adjusted decree was a concession decree; concession was given for the satisfaction of the decree in eight instalments. The judgment-debtor could take advantage of it only if he carried out his obligation as per terms of that decree. If, on the other hand, he failed to do it, as the present judgment-debtor has failed, the Court has no power to relieve him from the terms of the adjusted decree.

[14] It is not argued before me that there was any penal clause in the adjusted decree. This appeal is therefore entirely without any substance and the judgment-debtor cannot be helped either in law or in equity. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Chaturbhujlal Kanhayalal and another — Plaintiffs—Applicants v. Girdharilal Kanhayalal—Defendant —Non-Applicant.

Civil Revn. No. 101 of 1946, Decided on 6-3-1947, from decree of Civil Judge, 2nd Class, Malkapur, D/- 18-1-1946.

Contract Act (1872), S. 69—Co-judgment-debtors — Liability, joint and several — One undertaking to satisfy whole decree by agreement inter se, but failing — Others paying decretal amount —Suit for re-imbursement, if lies.

A person who wants to invoke S. 69, Contract Act, need not necessarily be a person who is interested according to a judicial test; it is sufficient if the payment is made under an honest belief that his interest requires that the payment should be made. A person bound by law to pay is always a person interested in payment. So a person who under a decree is compelled to pay money which his co-judgment-debtor is ultimately liable to pay can surely recover the amount paid by him. [Para 10]

A decree was passed against three brothers under which they were jointly and severally liable for the entire decretal amount. One of the judgment-debtors G by an agreement inter se had undertaken the responsibility to satisfy the entire decree. On his failure, the property of others was attached in execution. G applied to the Relief Court and the decretal amount was scaled down and made payable by annual instalments of Rs. 59. As the other judgment-debtors were still liable under the decree they also applied to the Relief Court and the decretal debt was scaled down and made payable by annual instalments of Rs. 220-4-0. They were under the scheme required to pay the first instalment. They sued G for the recovery of this amount :

Held (1) that the plaintiffs' claim for re-imbursement fell within the scope of S. 69 and they had a right to sue G for recovery of Rs. 220-4-0 which they paid towards a decree which he had undertaken to satisfy : 5 A. (2) that the liability of G was not limited only to Rs. 59-0-0 per annum. G was liable to pay the decretal amount. The concessions which were given to him under the scheme were only as against the creditor (decree-holder) but they were of no avail as against the plaintiffs who were not parties to the scheme in the debt relief proceedings. V. L. Prabhune —for Applicants.

N. B. Chandukar —for Non-Applicant.

Order. — The parties to this revision are brothers. They constituted a joint Hindu family until a few years before the death of their father in 1916. Even though a bulk of the joint family property was then divided between them, the money-lending business and some other immovable property mostly forming the assets of that business was left undivided. This property was however partitioned between the brothers as per partition deed dated 15-6-1937 (Ex. P-3.) At this partition the non-applicant, Girdharilal, was allotted to his share the entire money-lending business and some immovable property, total value of the property so allotted was estimated at Rs. 23,383-4-0. As incidental to the money-lending business a decree was passed against all the brothers in Civil Suit No. 94 of 1931 and the liability to satisfy this decree was undertaken exclusively by the non-applicant.

[2] The decree-holder in the decree passed in Civil Suit No. 94 of 1931 had sued out execution against all the brothers on 4-3-1936 and had attached property, which at the partition of 1937 was allotted to the shares of the applicants. The non-applicant had undertaken to get this property released from attachment by satisfying the decree. He did not however satisfy the decree and the property of the applicants is still under attachment.

[3] The non-applicant Girdharilal, applied to the Relief Court for scaling down the decretal debts and for framing a scheme making it payable by instalments. In this case (Revenue Case No. 129 of 1941) a scheme was actually framed and the decretal amount which was scaled down to Rs. 2059-10-0 was made payable by annual instalments of Rs. 59-0-0.

[4] As the applicants (the co-judgment-debtors) were still liable under the decree and their property was under attachment, they too applied for the scaling down of the decretal debt and for framing a scheme. In Revenue Case No. 153 of 1942 the Relief Court framed the scheme and the decretal debt as scaled down was made payable by annual instalment of Rs. 220-4-0. Under the scheme, the applicants were required to pay Rs. 220-4-0 as first instalment and they therefore sued the non-applicant for recovery of that amount.

[5] The learned Judge of the lower Court dismissed the suit mainly on the ground that the applicants were exonerated from their liability under the decree, and that no coercive processes were taken out by the decree-holder against them and therefore their actions in applying to the Debt Relief Court and in paying the instalment were voluntary. It is on this ground that the learned Judge of the lower Court held that the applicants had no right to claim re-imbursement from the non-applicant. It was further held that as the liability of the non-applicant under the scheme framed in his case was only to pay Rs. 59-0-0 p. a. the applicants were at the most liable to pay Rs. 59-0-0 and not more.

[6] In my view the learned Judge entirely failed to comprehend correct legal position and his judgment is therefore not according to law.

[7] The Judge of the lower Court started with a fundamental misconception that the applicants were completely exonerated from liability. All the three judgments-debtors were jointly and severally liable to the decree-holder for the entire decretal amount and that liability stood unaffected by any agreement between the judgment-debtors inter se. The scheme framed on the application of the non-applicant did not moreover affect the liability of the other judgment-debtors and the decree-holder's right to proceed against any one of them and to realize the entire decretal amount. Under the Relief Act the debtor means only the applicant and not his co-debtors. The applicants had thus a decree outstanding against them and a perpetual danger of the decree-holder proceeding to sell their property which was already under attachment. They were therefore the persons interested in seeing that the decretal debt was satisfied and their property was released from attachment. They were equally interested in protecting themselves against the execution of the decree against them by applying to the Relief Court so that in the event of the decree-holder proceeding against them they as agriculturists, should have the advantage of the scaling down of debts and of the payment of decretal debt by instalments.

[8] In the present case the applicants were obliged to take recourse to the Relief Court as a result of failure on the non-applicant's part to satisfy the decree and to have the attached property released. But I do not see how any point can be gained against the applicants even if the application was purely voluntary. Every man has a right to act in his own interest and the applicants were within their rights to do so. It is difficult to understand the learned Judge's view that the applicants should have waited till coersive processes were actually issued against them.

[9] It is difficult to imagine a stronger case for re-imbursement than of the plaintiffs-applicants who as judgment-debtors under an enforceable decree were not only interested but were also legally liable and compellable to pay. The claim for re-imbursement would certainly fall within the scope of S. 69 when by an agreement inter se one of the judgment-debtors was liable exclusively to satisfy the decree. In 45 Cal. 691[1] it is held that such a claim would fall both under Ss. 69 and 70, Contract Act.

[10] A person bound by law to pay is always a person interested in payment though the converse may not necessarily be true. So a person who under a decree is compelled to pay money which his co-judgment-debtor is ultimately liable to pay can surely recover the amount paid by him : vide A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 152.[2] It was held in I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 246[3] that a person can invoke S. 69, Contract Act, if he was interested in making the payment notwithstanding that he was also legally liable to pay. In I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 247[4] Puranik J. held, and I respectfully agree with him, that a person who wants to invoke S. 69, Contract Act, need not necessarily be a person who is interested according to a judicial test; it is sufficient if the payment is made under an honest belief that his interest requires that the payment should be made. In 14 W. R. 458[5] at pp. 460-461 even a debtor who satisfied a common liability was held entitled to sue his co-debtor for re-imbursement even though no suit for the realization of the debt was filed by the creditor. It is needless to discuss the law any further, as in my view, it is beyond doubt that the applicants had a right to sue the non-applicant for recovery of Rs. 220-4-0 which they paid towards a decree which the non-applicant had undertaken to satisfy.

[11] There is equally no force in the observations of the lower Court that the liability of the non-applicant was limited only to Rs. 59-0-0 per annum. The non-applicant was liable to pay the decretal amount. The concessions which are given to him under the scheme are only as against the creditor (decree-holder) but they are of no avail as against the applicants who are not parties to the scheme though they were unnecessarily shown as parties in the relief proceedings.

[12] The decision of the lower Court is clearly wrong and is opposed to law. The applicants' claim should have been decreed.

[13] The learned counsel for the applicants urged that in the event of the claim being decreed against the non-applicant the amount should be made payable by annual instalments of Rs. 59-0-0 or by easy instalments. There are no bona fides in the non-applicant's favour. He undertook to satisfy this decree in 1937 and that too on consideration received. The applicants made a payment of Rs. 220-4-0 on 14-4-1942, i. e. nearly 5 years ago. The non-applicant has not paid a pie to the applicants and has on the other hand involved the applicants in a costly litigation. He had already had sufficient time to discharge his liability and is not entitled to any more concessions.

[14] In the result, the revision is allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs-applicants is decreed with costs in both the Courts. Counsel's fee in this Court Rs. 30-0-0.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (1) (c) — Protection can be waived — Property held did not fall under S. 60 (1) (c) and even if it fell, protection was waived — Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 28 (5).

Section 60 (1) (c) does not impose an absolute prohibition on sale of property. The protection conferred by the section is for the benefit of the agriculturist and can be waived by him.

Where a family consisting of father and son was carrying on a money-lending business and both the father and the son were declared insolvents and the question arose whether the house which was described as money-lending shop and in which the family were allowed to reside, was exempt under S. 60 (1) (c), from sale by the Receiver in insolvency:

Held that from facts that the insolvents (1) had already mortgaged it, (2) laid no claim to it at the date of the vesting, (3) applied for permission to reside either there or elsewhere, (4) allowed the Receiver to spend money over its repairs and pay the nazul rent for 18 years, (5) actually petitioned the Receiver to put in fresh tiles and make a good job of the retiling, (6) omitted to include this item in their petition relating to the sir lands for which they claimed exemption from vesting, (7) omitted to claim it in the annulment proceedings relating to the mortgage upon the house and permitted the Receiver to spend time, energy and money in reclaiming it for the estate and (8) included the 'shop' in the list of assets, it was evident that they could not have regarded this as property falling under S. 60 (1) (c) and so could not themselves have been using the house for agricultural purposes as such. [Para 13]

Held further that even if it were regarded as falling under S. 60 (1) (c), the above facts showed that the insolvents had waived the protection afforded to them by the section. The house was regarded by all concerned as having vested in the Receiver and it was not claimed by the insolvent as property which was exempt: 25 A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 544 and 11 A. I. It is the duty of the Receiver to realize the property of the debtor with all convenient speed. These are matters to be taken up and settled "as speedily as possible." [Para 14]

Bose J. — The only question in revision is whether the house now in question vested in the Receiver when either the applicant Ganpatrao or his father Nagoba were declared insolvent. The applicant contends that it did not because it is exempt under S. 28 (5), Provincial Insolvency Act, read with S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. The lower Court holds it vested.

[2] The applicant's father Nagoba was declared insolvent on 17-4-1926 and the applicant on 28-3-1927. A number of petitions were presented against them. Nagoba admitted acts of insolvency but the son contested hence the difference in the dates of adjudication. When the petitions were made Nagoba and his son both put in written statements on 22-2-1926. Nagoba stated that he and his son had, among other things, a money-lending shop at Nagpur and asked the Court to make arrangements for the maintenance and residence of his family and himself. In the list of property he mentioned a shop at Nagpur. The applicant said in his statement that the information given by his father in his statement regarding their ancestral property and dues and family business was correct, but he contended that debts incurred by his father were not binding on him and so he should not be declared insolvent.

[3] The Court passed the following order on these applications on 27-4-1926:

"An order for the residence and subsistence allowance of the insolvent, his son Ganpat Rao and the members of their family has been prayed for. The family will be allowed to occupy the house which they are occupying at present, until further orders, but they shall always, whenever necessary, allow the Receiver access to their house for seeing and taking possession of the moveables which may be contained therein. The insolvent and his son shall make over every property to the Receiver without the least delay."

[4] It is evident that the Receiver thereupon took possession of the house because the accounts and other documents show that he executed the annual repairs and turned the tiles every year and purchased new tiles. When we say took 'possession' we do not mean "occupation" because of course that remained with Nagoba and his son in accordance with the Court's order. But he took over what is regarded as "possession" in the eye of the law.

[5] Exhibit N. A.-1 are the accounts. They show repairs and so forth from 28-7 1927 down to 7-6-1945, that is to say, for a period of 18 years. Exhibits N. A. 2 to N. A. 13, N. A. 15 to N. A. 17 and N. A. 19 to N. A. 40 are receipts stretching from 1929 to 1945 regarding the same matter. Exhibits N. A. 41 to N. A. 49 show that the nazul rent for the site was paid by the Receiver from 1938 to 1945. Then, what is even more important, is that Nagoba himself wrote to the Receiver at times and requested him to make proper arrangements about turning the tiles and putting in new ones. His letters are Exs. N. A. 14 and N. A. 18. These are written in the years 1936 and 1937. It is evident from these that the Receiver did take over this item of property and manage it, without objection from either of the insolvents. The applicant says he never consented, but the point is that he himself admitted in his statement that his father was the manager of the family and he never objected even after his father's death. He permitted the Receiver to exercise acts of management and spend money over the house. It is true the municipal taxes were paid by the insolvents but that does not mean much in the face of these other facts because, after all, the insolvents were residing in the bungalow and getting the benefit of municipal amenities.

[6] Sixteen and a half years after Nagoba's insolvency, namely in November 1942, the Receiver proposed to sell the house now in dispute and the applicant then claimed it was exempt being a house occupied by an agriculturist, namely himself.

[7] The Insolvency Court rejected this contention on 14-11-1942 and so did the District Judge on appeal. A second appeal followed and this Court remanded the case on 10-11-1944. After remand both the lower Courts have again found against the insolvent. Hence this revision.

[8] Now the question whether the house falls within the provisions of S. 60 (1) (c) is really one of fact in this case. There is no longer any difficulty about the law. That was settled in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 461.[1]

[9] We agree with the learned counsel for the receiver that the crucial date is the date of the adjudication. That is the date on which the property either vests or does not vest in the receiver, and once it has vested no subsequent conduct of the insolvent can alter this fact. We also follow and uphold the decision in 1938 N.L.J. 445[2] given by one of us (Bose J.) to the effect that the protection conferred by S. 60 (1) (c) is for the benefit of the agriculturist and can be waived by him. It was also held in that case, following the Allahabad Full Bench in 46 ALL. 489[3] and decisions in Bombay, Calcutta and Patna, that when an agriculturist mortgages a house which would otherwise be protected by S. 60 (1) (c) the house can be sold in execution. The Calcutta and Patna view was also adopted to the effect that when an agriculturist mortgages such a house he must be taken to have waived the privilege. It is to be observed that the section does not impose an absolute prohibition on sale but merely states that the property shall not be liable to such attachment and sale.

[10] The relevance of these decisions here is that this house was mortgaged by the insolvents and was under mortgage at the dates of both adjudications. The Receiver instituted proceedings to have the mortgage annulled and after protracted proceedings succeeded. The fact of mortgage in itself indicated that the privilege had been waived and as the mortgage was still in being at the dates of adjudications the property vested in the Receiver. But that apart, neither the insolvents, nor the mortgagees appear to have raised the objection that the property did not vest in the Receiver. On the contrary the insolvents lay by and permitted the receiver to proceed and ultimately to succeed. As against this is the fact that the insolvents did object to the Receiver taking over the sir land which the insolvents claimed became their own proprietary occupancy holding by reason of the vesting.

[11] All this reasoning would apply even if there was no doubt about the applicability of S. 60 (1) (c) on the merits — that is to say even if it were beyond dispute that the house was occupied by an agriculturist as such. But on the facts there is considerable doubt.

[12] The family was a money-lending family and though it had some agricultural land the bulk of it was let out. The home cultivation did not require more than 8 pairs of bullocks. The original estate consisted of 120 acres at Paungaon, about 5 to 6 miles outside Nagpur, and some 188 acres at Pullar and Sheloti which are some distance from Nagpur. On 20-3-1925 they purchased the village of Bharatwada for rupees 65,000. This was less than four months from the date when the creditors petitioned for their insolvency. (The petition was presented on 12-6-1925). Within 3 months, namely on 12-6-1925, they mortgaged this village and practically all their transferable property for a lac of rupees. Of that, this village formed the principal item. This was the mortgage which was later annulled.

[13] It can be conceded that after the insolvency the insolvents were agriculturists because the fields were all they had left. Everything else vested in the Receiver. But on the date of the petition it is doubtful whether it could be said that they occupied the house in dispute, which they themselves styled as a money-lending shop, for agricultural purposes as such. Whether they did so or not was a matter which they themselves knew best. If then they (1) had already mortgaged it, (2) laid no claim to it at the date of the vesting, (3) applied for permission to reside either there or elsewhere, (4) allowed the Receiver to spend money over its repairs and pay the nazul rent for 18 years, (5) actually petitioned the Receiver to put in fresh tiles and make a good job of the retiling, (6) omitted to include this item in their petition relating to the sir lands for which they claimed exemption, (7) omitted to claim it in the annulment proceedings relating to the mortgage and permitted the Receiver to spend time, energy and money in reclaiming it for the estate and (8) included the 'shop' in the list of assets, it is evident that they could not have regarded this as property falling under S. 60 (1) (c) and so could not themselves have been using the house for agricultural purposes as such.

[14] There is still another consideration which weighs with us. Section 59, Insolvency Act, prescribes that "the receiver, shall, with all convenient speed, realise the property of the debtor."

Ghosh quotes Ringwood in his Provincial Insolvency Act, Edn. 11, p. 625 and points out that it is the receiver's duty to take over all the bankrupt's property "as soon as possible." So also in Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition) p. 250, para. 324, Edn. 2 it is said that:

"It is the duty of the trustee as soon as possible to take possession of the deeds etc."

and at p. 388, para. 524 (Realisation of estate)

"The estate must be realised as speedily as possible, and if possible distributed when realised in a single dividend."

As we have shown, this urgency is also reflected in the Provincial Insolvency Act. It would be most inconvenient and unjust if neither the creditors nor the receiver knew for 18 years exactly what the insolvent's estate consisted of. These are matters to be taken up and settled "as speedily as possible." We have no doubt that this house was regarded by all concerned as having vested in the Receiver and that it was not claimed by the insolvent as property which was exempt. The "shop" which was listed by Nagoba himself was situate in this building and no attempt was made to separate the "shop" from the rest of the premises.

[15] For all these reasons we confirm the decision of the lower Court and hold that this house was not occupied by an agriculturist as such and that it was not necessary for the enjoyment of the agricultural portion of the insolvent's original estate. The application fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 100.

N. S. Hadas — Appellant v. Banwarilal Shankarlal—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 162 of 1947, Decided on 11-4-1947, from appellate decree of 3rd Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/-10-2-1947.

Limitation Act (1908), S. 12 (1)—Time requisite for obtaining copies—Application for copies defective in information — Information subsequently supplied—Time from date of application to date of supplying information, when can be excluded—Nagpur High Court Rules, R. 532.

No time could be excluded as time requisite for obtaining copies if that time was lost on account of the mistake on the part of the applicant but this cannot be said when with reasonable diligence on the part of the Copying Department which under the High Court Rules it is expected to exercise, the delay could have been avoided. In such cases final cause for the delay is non-exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of the Copying Department, and for that reason therefore time wasted on that account should be excluded under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act. This is the object of the amended R. 532 of the Nagpur High Court Rules, and particularly the distinction that is made therein between the mistakes which could be discovered immediately and those which could not be discovered immediately.

On 7-8-1946, the appellant applied for certified copies of the judgment and decree with the intention of filing an appeal. The appellant was told to appear on 15-8-1946 but he actually appeared on 16-8-1946. On this date he was told that the information supplied by him in the application was insufficient and he supplied the information immediately. The original omission on the part of the applicant was material in that the number of the case and the date of disposal were not given. The question was whether the period between August 7 and August 15 could be excluded as time requisite for obtaining copies:

Held that the case was one where in spite of the omission on the part of the applicant for copies, the mistake could have been discovered by Copying Department immediately on presentation of the application and could have been set right by bringing it to the notice of the applicant. Hence the time from the 7th August to 15th August was the time requisite for obtaining the copies and should be excluded from computation of limitation under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act.

S. P. Kotval—for Appellant.
R. S. Dabir—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The only question which at this stage is to be considered is whether the appeal No. 11-A of 1947 presented in the Court of Mr. S. C. Rai, 3rd Additional District Judge, Nagpur, on 1-11-1946 was within limitation.

[2] This is to be considered independently of S. 5, Limitation Act, as the learned counsel for the appellant made it quite clear that he was not relying on that section and was not praying for extension of time, as according to him, his appeal as presented on 1-11-1946 was well within limitation.

[3] The judgment and decree appealed against in the lower appellate Court was dated 25-7-1946. On 7-8-1946 the appellant through his counsel's clerk applied for certified copies of the judgment and decree obviously with the intention of filing an appeal. The appellant was told to appear on 15-8-1946 but he actually appeared on 16-8-1946. On this date he was told that the information supplied by him in the application was insufficient and he supplied the information immediately. After a few days with which we are not concerned, the appellant was told to appear on 14-10-1946 for receiving the copies. He however actually appeared on 16-10-1946 and the copies were delivered to him. As already stated above, these copies were utilised for filing an appeal in the lower appellate Court on 1-11-1946. It may be mentioned here that the decree was actually signed on 27-7-1946, though according to O. 20, R. 7, Civil P. C. the decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced. The difference between the date of the judgment and the date of the decree is inconsequential in the present case.

[4] According to the appellant, the time requisite for obtaining certified copies under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act, was 69 days and he filed the appeal on the 99th day that means on the last, i. e., the 30th day, and his appeal was within limitation. Of course, this is based on the assumption that the entire period from 7-8-1946 to 14-10-1946, both days inclusive, is time requisite for obtaining certified copies. It is not disputed by the appellant that the application filed by him through the clerk of his counsel Mr. Sathe was incomplete inasmuch as it did not give the case number and the date of disposal of the civil suit. Undoubtedly these were material particulars to be given in an application as in the absence of these details the record could not be traced. It is however contended that this mistake was one which could have been discovered by the Copying Department immediately the application was presented, and it was the duty of the Copying Department to bring that mistake to the notice of the appellant so that he could have supplied that information as he actually did on 16-8-1946 immediately it was brought to his notice. It was contended that the omission to give the number of the suit and the date of disposal were purely accidental and that the appellant could not be penalized for such accidental omission on the part of his counsel's clerk, he having done everything in his power to obtain the copies with a view to file an appeal. I have already stated above that I am not considering the application under S. 5, Limitation Act, and the only question with which I am concerned here is whether the period from 7-8-1946 to 15-8-1946 should be taken as time requisite for obtaining certified copies and that because a certain omission which could have been discovered and brought to the notice of the appellant immediately was not discovered by the Copying Department and consequently the copying work could not be started till that information was supplied on 16-8-1946.

[5] In I. L. R. 1940 Nag. 312[1] which was decided on the strength of the old rules, as they then existed, it was laid down that time during which copying is stopped for want of funds due to miscalculation in the office and not to absence of bona fides and where there is no delay in supplying the extra charges when demanded should be excluded under S. 12, Limitation Act, as time requisite to obtain a copy of a decree. The principle underlying this decision is that where the delay is due to the Copying Department that time should be excluded as time requisite for obtaining copies under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act, but it is not so when the delay is due to the negligence of the appellant. This case however does not consider the position which may arise and which did arise in the present case, where the delay was due to something which the appellant failed to do but which could have been avoided if the Copying Department had done what it was expected to do.

[6] The rules on the subject of grant of certified copies have undergone a radical change and they have in fact been amended from time to time. Under the rules as they existed under notification No. 1989 1206-V, dated 30th October 1924, R. 25 stood as under:

"On receiving an application presented by hand the Head Copyist shall forthwith fix and intimate to the applicant a date within seven working days of the presentation on which he should attend to ascertain whether the copy is ready or whether any further advance was required."

The rule as it stood did not impose upon the Copying Department any duty to check the application for copies immediately to find out if there were any omission and to get them corrected by the applicant for copies. Of course, there were other rules according to which where such omissions were detected in due course, the information was given to the applicant personally or through post and the information required were supplied. According to R. 532, framed and published under notification No. 7781, dated 13th December 1937, the position is somewhat different. That rule runs thus:

"Under no circumstances shall a copy be carried beyond the number of sheets for which charges of copying have been deposited. Whenever copying cannot be taken in hand for want of funds or correct information, the head copyist shall report the matter to the Clerk of Court and shall also inform the applicant when he attends, or send an intimation by a service postcard to the applicant who has asked for the copy to be supplied by post."

This rule was however later on substituted by the new Rule No. 532 which is in fact material for the purpose of this appeal. The relevant portion of that rule runs thus:

"When an application is made by post and it is discovered that copying cannot be taken in hand for want of funds or correct information, a notice shall be posted to the applicant on the day the defect is discovered, with a direction to send the money or the information.

When the defect mentioned in sub-r. (2) above is discovered in an application presented in person, the applicant shall be informed verbally at once if it is discovered on presentation, and if after presentation, then on the next day fixed for him to appear. If he does not appear on the day fixed, notice shall be posted to him that day to the address, if any, given under R. 520."

Sub-rule (3) of this rule therefore contemplates two kinds of defects, (i) that which could be discovered immediately on the presentation of the application itself and (ii) that which could not be discovered then but could be discovered later on. In respect of the first kind of defect, the rule lays down that the copying department should inform verbally the applicant of the defect and get it corrected then and there. In respect of the defects which are discovered subsequently the applicant should be informed of the same on the date fixed for his appearance, or if he does not appear on that date, the notice should be posted to him to the address given under R. 520.

[6] The important question that arises is whether the defect is of the former class namely one which could be discovered immediately on presentation of the application and if this mistake was still not discovered by the Copying Department and was not brought to the notice of the applicant immediately, whether the days between the date of the presentation of the application and the date on which the defect was shown to the applicant at a later stage should be excluded as days requisite for obtaining copies. Here it cannot be disputed that the original omission was on the part of the applicant in so far as he did not give some particulars, i. e. the case number and the date of disposal. This was however a defect which could be discovered immediately on presentation of the application if the officer receiving the application only looked into the application. If under the rule he is expected to look into the application and to discover such defects as could be discovered immediately, it was a failure on his part not to discover that mistake and to bring it to the notice of the applicant. If he had done his part, as he was expected to do under the amended rule, no time could have been lost and the application would have been perfectly in order from the very time of its presentation.

[7] The sole question therefore is whether it is the duty of the officer receiving the application to go through it immediately on receipt and to find out whether necessary particulars are given in that application. It is true that all mistakes would not be detected by him immediately, for instance, if a wrong number of a case is given or a wrong date of disposal is given or a wrong name of the Court is given, and those mistakes would come to light only after a report from the record room. But there are however certain mistakes which are on the face of the application detected immediately, for instance, the one in the present case or supposing rather than giving 1946 as the date of disposal the applicant were to write in the application 1956, surely the officer would at once detect the mistake on going through the application and get it corrected. The present case, therefore, is a case in my view, where in spite of the omission on the part of the applicant for copies the mistake could have been discovered by the Copying Department immediately on presentation of the application and could have been set right by bringing it to the notice of the applicant.

[8] Sen J. in Misc. Second Appeal No. 90 of 1943 decided on 29th November 1944, pointed out that I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 312,[1] was a decision based on the old table. It is on account of that decision changes have been effected in the new table and there are new number of columns. The learned Judge thereafter referred also to the amended rule already stated above and observed, and with those observations I fully associate myself, that the former rules cast the almost impossible burden on the applicant and did not throw any responsibility on the office. This was changed by reason of the decision in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 312.[1]

[9] In my view, no time could be excluded as time requisite for obtaining copies if that time was lost on account of the mistake on the part of the applicant, but this cannot be said when with reasonable diligence on the part of the Copying Department which under the rules it is expected to exercise, that delay could have been avoided. In such cases final cause for the delay is non-exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of the Copying Department, and for that reason therefore time wasted on that account should be excluded under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act. This is how I understand the object of the amended rule and particularly the distinction that is made therein between the mistakes which could be discovered immediately and those which could not be discovered immediately. It is in this light that I hold that the time from 7th August 1946 to 15th August 1946 is the time requisite for obtaining the copies and should be excluded from computation of limitation under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act.

[10] In conclusion I set aside the order of the lower appellate Court dismissing the appeal as barred by time and remand the case to the lower Court for being heard and disposed of on merits. Costs would abide the result.

Second Appeal No. 693 of 1943, Decided on 23-12-1947, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 26-7-1943.

Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 62, 120 and 131—Applicability —Suit for recovery of plaintiff's share of lawajama — No dispute as to plaintiff's right to share but only with regard to amount payable to him—Article 62 or Art. 120 applies and not Art. 131.

The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of his share of lawajama which the defendant had received each year from Government for and on behalf of himself and other sharers in the grant. The plaintiffs' right to share or the extent thereof was not denied but the extent of the amount payable to plaintiff was disputed.

Held that the suit must be regarded as one for money had and received to the plaintiff's use to the extent of the plaintiff's share and therefore it was governed by Art. 62 or Art. 120 and not by Art. 131 : Case law referred. [Paras 3, 5]

Judgment.— Limitation is the only question involved in the appeal.

[2] The suit is for arrears of lawajama payable to the plaintiff by the defendant. The plaintiff's right to his share is not denied nor is the extent of his share in question. The plaint itself makes that plain. What the plaintiff says is that the amount due on the basis of these facts is a certain figure. The defendant says that it is considerably less because the defendant is entitled to certain deductions.

[3] Both the lower Courts have applied Art. 131, Limitation Act, and have held the whole of the claim to be within time. This, in my opinion, is wrong. I consider that either Art. 62, or Art. 120 will apply but not Art. 131.

[4] Article 131 applies when the suit is to enforce a right. Here the right is not denied but only the extent of the amount payable under that right. It is similar to a suit by a cosharer against the lambardar when there is no dispute about the right or the extent of the share but only as regards the amount payable because of deductions which are claimed by one side and denied by the other.

[5] The defendant received a certain sum of money each year from Government for and on behalf of himself and the other sharers in the grant. That accordingly is money had and received to the plaintiff's use to the extent of the plaintiff's share and either Art. 62 or Art. 120 will apply.

[6] In 11 N.L.J. 62[1] on which the lower Courts have relied the right was denied and not merely the amount payable. That case is therefore not in point. As regards the Madras Full Bench in 38 Mad. 916[2] I prefer the opinion of Tyabji J. in his referring order to that of the Full Bench and Ayling J. to the extent that Art. 131 is inappropriate. The view of the Full Bench has not been accepted in other High Courts and Bombay, Allahabad and Patna apply Art. 62 : see 55 Bom. 193;[3] I.L.R. (1937) ALL. 140[4] at p. 146; 5 Pat. 249[5] and 34 ALL. 246.[6]

[7] I need not decide here whether Art. 120 applies or Art. 62, because the appellant has confined his claim in appeal to Rs. 458-8-0 and whichever Article applies the reduction in the decree will be covered by that figure.

[8] The appeal is allowed with costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court. The decrees of the lower Courts are modified by reducing the claim dismissed by Rs. 458-8-0. The plaintiff will get proportionate costs in the first Court.

Govindram Hardattarai — Defendant — Appellant v. Sheoprasad Sagarmal — Plaintiff — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 92 of 1942, Decided on 28-8-1947, from decree of Additional District Judge, Wardha, D/- 23-9-1942.

(a) Will — Testator appointing wahiwatdars to protect property during his son's minority and not directing them to perform specifically duties of executor — Estate does not vest in wahiwatdars.

Where a testator has appointed certain persons as wahiwatdars to protect his estate during the minority of his son and has not directed them to perform specifically the duties of an executor or to administer the estate, the estate cannot be said to have vested in the wahiwatdars (executors) and the testator's son can bring a suit for partition in respect of that estate : 20 Mad. 467 and 33 Cal. 657, Ref. [Para 4]

(b) Hindu law — Adoption — Formal act of taking in adoption can be delegated by adoptive father.

If the adoptive father has reached the decision to adopt and the contract of gift and acceptance is concluded between the principals competent to give and take, then the adoptive father, if unable through illness or otherwise to perform the formal act of taking in adoption, can delegate the performance of that act to a suitable person such as his wife. [Para 5]

(c) Hindu law — Adoption — Custom — Agarwals from Marwad — Widow can adopt without husband's permission — She can adopt her husband's younger brother.

Among Agarwals from Marwad there is a custom which permits a widow to adopt without her husband's permission. There is also a custom among them which permits a widow to adopt her husband's younger brother. There is nothing unreasonable in such a custom particularly amongst a caste such as Agarwals from Marwad, that regards adoption as a purely secular affair. [Paras 6, 7, 8]

Judgment. — The defendant-appellant Govindram and his uncle Bissesarlal formed at one time a joint Hindu family owning a considerable estate. They separated in estate in 1934, and between 2nd July and 23rd September in that year much of the joint property was divided between them, though some was left undivided for the time being. On 20th January 1910 Bissesarlal adopted as a son Shriram, the natural son of his first cousin Sagarmal. On 28th November 1923, Shriram died, and on 23rd November 1924 his widow Badamibai adopted to her husband as a son the plaintiff-respondent Sheoprasad, who also is the natural son of Sagarmal and the younger brother of his adoptive father Shriram. On 23rd September 1934, when the partitioning of the estate ceased, Bissesarlal made a will (Ex. P-331) in which after making some provision for Badamibai for her lifetime he left the residue of his estate to Sheoprasad. Bissesarlal died on 23rd October 1934. All these facts are admitted, except that the validity of the two adoptions is denied.

[2] On 16th September 1937, Sheoprasad, then a minor, represented by his adoptive mother Badamibai as his next friend, brought the present suit for partition and possession of a half share in the property that remained undivided at the partition between Govindram and Bissesarlal in 1934. In 1940, after Sheoprasad had come of age, he was shown as a major, and his next friend, Badamibai was struck off. Sheoprasad based his claim to Bissesarlal's estate on the will (EX.P-331) if the adoptions were held invalid, or as the surviving coparcener if they were held valid. That claim succeeded in the lower Court, and against that decision Govindram has preferred this appeal.

[3] It is admitted in this Court that if the adoptions are held invalid the plaintiff is entitled to the estate of Bissessarlal under the will (EX. P-331), but it is contended that by that will the estate vested in the executors, who have not yet applied for probate, and that therefore Sheoprasad is not competent to bring this suit. The will contains the following directions :

"Sheoprasad is a minor. Until he attains majority, he should be brought up by his adoptive mother Mt. Badami Bai. But she being a lady, the property, dealings and shop cannot be managed by her well. I am, therefore, appointing my next heirs mentioned below to act as wahiwatdars (executors) until Sheoprasad attains majority."

and then follow five names. The will goes on:

"The wadiwatdars (executors) mentioned above should manage the property on my death."

[4] It appears to us that in this case, as in 20 Mad. 467[1] and 33 Cal. 657,[2] the persons described as wahiwatdars or executors were not directed to perform specifically the duties of an executor or to administer the estate but were appointed to protect the property during Sheoprasad's minority, and that therefore the estate did not vest in them, and that it is open to Sheoprasad to bring this suit. If the two adoptions therefore are held invalid Sheoprasad is entitled to succeed on the strength of the will.

[5] It is not now disputed that Bissessarlal arranged with his cousin Sagarmal that he (Bissessarlal) should adopt Sagarmal's son Shriram as a son at Bilaspur, where a family wedding was to take place. Bissessarlal's branch of the family lives in Wardha, while Sagarmal's branch lives in Bilaspur. Bissessarlal, however, owing to illness was unable to go to Bilaspur and he directed his wife Tulsabai to take Shriram in adoption on his behalf. This is not now disputed. It is, however, contended that during Bissessarlal's lifetime no one except Bissessarlal could perform the actual ceremony of taking in adoption. The question whether the performance of the formal act of physical delivery may be delegated by the natural parents was considered at length by the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 30 N. L. R. 62,[3] and the conclusion reached was that the performance of the formal act of physical delivery may be delegated by his parents to suitable persons, but not the power or decision to give away the boy in adoption. With that decision we respectfully agree, and we can see no reason why similarly the formal act of taking in adoption should not be delegated to a suitable person by the adoptive father after he has reached the decision to adopt. As Sir Hari Singh Gour puts it in his Hindu Code, quoted at p. 69 of the above case :

"...If the contract of gift and acceptance is concluded between the principals competent to give and take, and either of them is through illness or otherwise unable to perform the only indispensable ceremony of corporal giving and taking or of the Datta Homa, if necessary, its performance may be delegated to be performed by the wife, or another son on the part of the giver and any relation, such as the uncle of the receiver."

In our opinion, therefore, Shriram was validly adopted as a son of Bissessarlal in 1910.

[6] The validity of the adoption of Sheoprasad in 1924 is challenged on two grounds, (1) that Badamibai had no authority from her husband to adopt, and (2) that she could not validly adopt her husband's younger brother. The family, which is a family of Agarwals from Marwad, is governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law modified, according to the plaintiff's pleadings, by certain customs recognized and followed amongst Agarwals in Lachmangarh State in Marwad, and there is a considerable body of evidence to show that amongst them a widow can adopt a son without her husband's permission and that it is permissible to adopt a husband's younger brother. On the question whether Badamibai had authority from her husband to adopt Sheoprasad, there is the evidence of Badamibai herself (P. W. 19) and the family cook, Narsingh Das (P. W. 10), who are corroborated to a certain extent by Zabarmal (P. W. 16), Sagarmal's wife Jadaobai (P. W. 27) and Sagarmal's brother Gurumukhrai (P. W. 33). There was never any protest against the adoption, and on the death of Bissessarlal the defendant Govindram made a present to the plaintiff Sheoprasad. Govindram did not oppose Sheoprasad's application to have his name mutated in certain property and to obtain a succession certificate to recover certain debts after the death of Bissessarlal. In the will Bissessarlal described Sheoprasad as his adoptive grandson. We agree with the lower Court that in these circumstances there is no adequate reason for disbelieving the evidence of Badamibai and Narsinghdas that Badamibai had her husband's permission to adopt Sheoprasad.

[7] In support of the plaintiff's contention that no authority is required, there is the evidence of Hariram (P. W. 1), who quoted an instance of such an adoption in 1923 in his own family, Hanumanbux (P. W. 8), Nagarmal (P. W. 12), Jamanlal (P. W. 17), Gowardhandas (P. W. 20), Hariram (P. W. 22), Shriniwas (P. W. 23) a pundit of Lachmangarh, Sheokarandas (P. W. 25), Kanhaiyalal (P. W. 26), Govindram (P. W. 31), and Rameshwarlal (P. W. 34). There is practically no rebutting evidence. In 21 N. L. R. 50[4] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee re-affirmed their previous statement in 10 Bom. H. C. R. 241[5] that Agarwals generally adhere to Jainism and do not believe that a son, either by birth or adoption, confers spiritual benefit on the father, and that there appears to be no difference in the rules relating to adoption between the various sub-sects of Agarwalas. In 1 ALL. 688[6] they held that in Delhi and other towns in the North-Western Provinces among the sect of Jains known Saraogi Agarwalas a sonless widow has a right to adopt without permission from her husband or consent of his kinsmen. Lala Chiranjilal Agarwal in an article entitled. 'Adoption among Marwari Agarwals', which appears at p. 80 of the journal in A. I. R. 1937 Journal has considered this question, and come to the conclusion that amongst Agarwals and other trading Vaishnawa communities adoption is a purely secular affair, that no ceremony is necessary except the tying of a turban on the head of the adoptee, that there is no effective difference between Vaishnawas and Jains, that a widow of a separated brother can make a valid adoption without any authority from her husband or his kinsmen, and that a brother can be validly adopted. He states in conclusion :

"In Rajputana and among Agarwals who have migrated and are residing outside, the custom is so common that it has never been challenged."

We agree with the lower Court that a custom that permits a widow amongst these Agarwals to adopt without her husband's permission has been proved.

[8] Assuming that under the ordinary Hindu law, it is not permissible for a widow to adopt her husband's younger brother, though a contrary view has been taken in 49 Bom. 615,[7] there is ample evidence in this case to show that such a custom exists amongst these Agarwals. Evidence has been given of a large number of examples, and though the evidence of some of these examples is somewhat slender others have been clearly established. Hariram (P. W. 1) says that he was adopted by the widow of his elder brother, and we see no reason to doubt this statement. Two examples have been given in the family of the parties to this suit. Harnarayan, the uncle of Bissesarlal and Sagarmal, had Jankilal and Jorimal amongst other sons, and after the death of Jankilal his widow adopted Jorimal. On this point we have the evidence of Ghisulal (P. W. 3), Hariram (P. W. 22) and Gurumukhrai (P. W. 33). The other example in this family is the defendant's own sister Laxmibai, who adopted her husband's younger brother Bajrang. On this point we have the evidence of Rukhmanand (P.W. 2) and Govindram (P.W. 31). The defendant Govindram (D.W. 1) himself professes ignorance of whom his sister had adopted. We have therefore no hesitation in accepting this story that she adopted her husband's younger brother. Another example was given by Ghisulal (P. W. 3), who attended the adoption by Laduram's widow Chandribai of her husband's younger brother Chhotelal; this was corroborated by Gowardhandas (P. W. 20), uncle of Chandribai. Kisanlal (P. W. 7) said that his uncle's widow Sukhdeobai adopted her husband's younger brother Bhuramal, though this is perhaps not clearly established. Shriniwas (P. W. 23), a pundit from Lachmangarh, quoted four examples, and we see no reason why he should be disbelieved. On the question of the adoption by Murlidhar Ganeriwala of his younger brother Laxminiwas, he was corroborated by Hariram (P. W. 22). Other examples have been given by Hariram (P.W. 22) and his son Motilal (P.W. 24), Sheokaran Das (P. W. 25), Kanhaiyalal (P.W. 26), whose brother's widow Jankibai adopted him, Jagat Narain (P. W. 32), who quoted four examples, and Rameshwarlal (P. W. 34). We consider that the custom has been conclusively established. It has been suggested that the custom should be rejected as unreasonable, but we see nothing unreasonable in such a custom, particularly amongst a caste that regards adoption as a purely secular affair.

[9] That concludes the appeal except as regards three minor items of accounting. The first item relates to a deposit made by Tulsabai. The accounts show that Rs. 1454-9-6 was due to her and that Rs. 1354-9-8 was paid on 21-9-1934. It is suggested that there was a mistake in the accounts and that the whole deposit was repaid, but there is no evidence of any mistake or of full repayment, and we agree with the lower Court that the defendant is therefore liable to pay Rs. 50 on this account to the plaintiff.

[10] The second item relates to certain premia paid for an insurance policy on the life of Govindram, the defendant. It is admitted that this insurance was for the benefit of Govindram himself and not for the benefit of the joint family, and we therefore agree with the lower Court that the plaintiff is entitled to get half the amount paid as premia up to the time of the partition.

[11] The third item relates to Rs. 1898-1-6 claimed by the defendant as his half share of the value of certain ornaments in gold given to Bissesarlal for the plaintiff's bride. This was a counter-claim to a claim made by the plaintiff. On an objection by the defendant the plaintiff had to pay ad valorem court-fees on the amount that he claimed on this account, and it is clear that the defendant should have paid ad valorem court-fees on his counter-claim. As he failed to do so it was properly rejected.

[12] For the above reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 116 of 1940, Decided on 12-12-1947, from decree of Dist. Judge, Chhindwara, D/- 7-9-1940.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 83 — Sale of part of immovable property — Purchase-money kept with vendee to pay off existing mortgage — Failure to pay—Suit for damages—Limitation runs from date of loss to vendor — Loss occurs either when final foreclosure decree is passed or when vendor loses his possession.

The covenant by the vendee of a part of mortgaged property to pay off the incumbrance on the property out of the purchase-money, is nothing more than a contract of indemnity. The damages to which the vendor is entitled on a breach of that contract must be measured by the loss that he has suffered, and limitation will run from the date when the loss was suffered. It may be that it would be open to the purchaser to sue for breach of contract before he has actually suffered loss, but where loss has actually been suffered, that gives rise to a cause of action : 31 All. 583 (P. C.); 26 Cal. 241 ; 20 A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 424;20 A.I.R. 1933 All. 386; 13 A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 429 and 22 A I.R. 1935 Nag. 135, Rel. on; 18 A.I.R. 1931 All. 754 and 34 All. 429, Ref. [Para 10]

Where the vendee does not pay off the encumbrance, and the final foreclosure decree is passed, the loss occurs either when the final decree for foreclosure is passed by which the vendor loses title in the property or when he actually loses possession : 25 A. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 9 — Mortgage by five brothers jointly — Sale of part of property — Purchase-money kept with vendee to pay off mortgagee — On failure, final foreclosure decree passed and property lost to brothers— One brother filing suit against vendee for damages — Other brothers except one made parties— Previous partition between brothers proved—Suit held maintainable — Plaintiff held entitled only to 1/5th share in loss as compensation.

Five brothers, forming a joint family, had mortgaged properties A and B. They sold subsequently property A. The vendee agreed to pay off the mortgages on A and B out of the purchase-money. The vendee, however, failed to do so and the properties were lost to the brothers by the passing of a final foreclosure decree. One of the brothers sued the vendee for damages. The other brothers except one were made defendants. It was established that before the suit there had been a complete partition between the brothers, the plaintiff thus being entitled only to the 1/5th share in the properties :

Held that the suit was not bad on the ground that one of the brothers was not impleaded. The plaintiff was entitled to 1/5th share of the loss suffered, as compensation. [Para 12]

D. T. Mangalmoorti — for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde and P. R. Padhye — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.— On 23rd June 1921 the plaintiff Shamrao and his four brothers executed two mortgages, Ex. D-1 in favour of Ghudulal for Rs. 2256 and Ex. D-2 in favour of Sheoratan for Rs. 2500. In each deed the mortgaged property consisted of a two-anna village share and two absolute occupancy fields, Survey Nos. 20 and 65, in mauza Mogra in the Chhindwara district. Sheoratan brought Civil Suit No. 137 of 1925 to enforce his mortgage (Ex. D-2), and a preliminary decree was passed on 20th October 1925 declaring that the property would be foreclosed in default of payment of Rs. 6251-13-0 by 20th April 1926. As a result of a family partition between Ghudulal and Sheoratan some time in 1925—the exact date is unknown—the mortgagee rights in Ex. D-1 were assigned to Sheoratan. In the meantime on 28th April 1925 Shamrao and his brothers executed an agreement (Ex. D-4) to sell Survey No. 20 to Gadiram, who has since died and is now represented by his sons, the first four defendants, for Rs. 13,500, and admitted the receipt of Rs. 5000 paid as earnest money. Notice of this proposed sale was given to Sheoratan, who was the lambardar of the village, and he applied to a revenue officer to fix the value of the field. The Deputy Commissioner fixed the value at Rs. 11,088 on 8th April 1926 and an appeal by Sheoratan to the Commissioner failed. Sheoratan then abandoned his claim to pre-empt.

[2] On 1st July 1926 Shamrao and his brothers executed a sale-deed (Ex. D-3) by which they sold Survey No. 20 to Gadiram for Rs. 13,500 which according to the recitals in the deed, was made up of Rs. 7351 which was retained by Gadiram, Rs. 4853-13 0 which the vendors said that they had already received, and three items of Rs. 475, Rs. 516-9-0 and Rs. 303-10-0, totalling Rs. 1295-3-0, which were admittedly paid by Gadiram some time in 1925 in settlement of three decrees that had been passed against the vendors. The main question in dispute in this case is whether this sum of Rs. 7351 was retained by Gadiram in order to pay off both the mortgages, as Shamrao contends, or only the debt due on Ex. D 2 for which the preliminary decree for Rs. 6251-13-0 had been passed, as the sons of Gadiram contend. The recital in the deed is as follows:

'This field is subject to mortgage along with other property and a foreclosure decree of Sheoratan ... has been passed against us, and it is also subject to one more mortgage. It is necessary to make payment thereof. The amount of the decree No. 137 of 1925 ... is Rs. 6251-13 0, and the amount due under the mortgage deed, in respect of which no suit has been brought, comes to Rs. 5,000 including interest. If we do not pay this debt there is apprehension of getting the entire ancestral property under mortgage dated 23-6-1921 ruined. Hence in order to save other property, we hereby, after selling the abovementioned field to the said Gadiram, keep Rs. 7,351 with the purchaser by way of amanat (deposit). The purchaser may pay that amount directly to Sheoratan . . . or may deposit the same in the Court."

[3] On 24-4-1926 Sheoratan applied for a final decree in Civil Suit No. 137 of 1925: vide Ex. D 9. On 20 4-1926 Shamrao and his brothers had applied for an extension of time for payment, and on 25-9-1926 one month's time was given to them to find security for payment of interest. On 20-10-1926 they produced Gadiram as a surety, and he undertook to give security for the value of the crops which it was agreed was Rs. 1000. The Court directed as follows:

"I allow interest at Re. 1 p. c. p. m. till the date that now will be fixed for payment, i. e. 20-3-1926. The total amount comes to Rs. 1,000 plus Rs. 687-8-0 interest from 23-4-1926 to 20-3-1927, total Rs. 1,687-8-0.'

On 30-10-1926 Shamrao and his brothers paid Rs. 3000, which was admittedly received from Gadiram, and were granted an extension of four months. Interest apparently was to be paid as already agreed. Subsequently Gadiram paid further sums of Rs. 2445-14-0 on 1-3-1927, rupees 326-11-0 on 7-3-1927, and finally Rs. 115 and Rs. 23-8-0 costs on 2-7-1927 in full satisfaction of the claim : vide Exs. D-9, D-10, and D-11.

[4] Subsequently Sheoratan brought Civil Suit No. 4 of 1929 on 13-4-1929 to enforce the other mortgage, Ex. D-1, in which suit Gadiram also was impleaded as a defendant. On 25-1-1930 Sheoratan obtained a preliminary decree directing foreclosure in default of payment of apparently Rs. 11,416-11-6, but an appeal by Gadiram to the Judicial Commissioner's Court was allowed on 12-1-1933, as reported in 30 N. L. R. 265 vide Ex. D-15. It was held that as Gadiram had paid off the mortgage, Ex. D-2, he was entitled to use that mortgage (Ex. D-2) as a shield against the mortgage in the suit (Ex. D-1), though both mortgages were in fact executed and registered on the same day, and that he was therefore entitled to retain survey No. 20 without redeeming the mortgage Ex. D-1. A final decree for foreclosure against Shamrao and his brothers, Ex. P-10, was passed on 20-7-1934, and on 17 9-1934, and on 17-9-1934 possession of the other mortgaged property was delivered to Punamchand, son of Sheoratan, Sheoratan having died meanwhile : vide Ex. P-3. Gadiram thus retained possession of survey No. 20 without paying off the mortgage Ex. D-1, and Shamrao and his brothers lost the entire mortgaged property in spite of their attempts to save some of it by the sale of survey No. 20.

[5] Gadiram died on 29-2-1936. On 17-7-1937 Shamrao sent a telegraphic notice (Ex. D-17) to Vithoba, son of Gadiram, defendant 1, demanding the return of Rs. 7351 within 24 hours, and on 19-7-1937 he filed an application to sue in forma pauperis for the recovery of this amount from the sons of Gadiram, defendants 1, 2, 3, 4. As Shamrao's brothers had refused to join him in bringing the suit he impleaded his three surviving brothers as defendants 5, 6, 7. The result of his failure to implead the legal representative of his other brother, Narayan, will be considered later. The application to sue in forma pauperis was eventually allowed, and an amended plaint was filed on 11-3 1940. There were further amendments on 15-6-1940.

[6] The lower Court held that out of the money retained by Gadiram Rs. 2951 was retained to pay off the balance due on the preliminary decree after the payment of Rs. 3900 on 30-10 1926 and Rs. 5000 to pay off the other mortgage (Ex. D 1), and that the plaintiff was entitled to a refund of Rs. 5000 with interest at 3 per cent. per annum from 1-7-1926. Against that decision the sons of Gadiram have preferred this appeal.

[7] The sale deed, Ex. D-3, was registered on 1-11-1926. When it was executed on 1-7 1926 no application had been made for a final decree, and there was no agreement in existence to pay interest on the preliminary decree for rupees 6251-13-0. It is therefore difficult to see why the purchaser should have been allowed to retain Rs. 7351 if he were to pay off only the preliminary decree for Rs. 6251-13-0. The appellants' explanation of this is that it was intended to apply for an extension of time, that it was expected that there would be no difficulty in obtaining an extension on an agreement to pay interest, and that this sum of Rs. 7351 included Rs. 1100 interest at the contract rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem for one year from 20-4-1926, by which time it was hoped that the question of pre-emption would be settled. The exact amount would be Rs. 1125-5-0, but it is said that Rs. 1100 was taken as a round figure.

[8] Shamrao, the plaintiff-respondent, on the other hand, contends that the figures in the sale deed were altered after the payment of Rs. 3900 on 30-10-1926, which was two days before the registration. This left Rs. 2351-13-0 payable on the preliminary decree, and this combined with Rs. 5000 calculated as due on the other mortgage, Ex. D 1, made up the sum of Rs. 7351. There have been a considerable number of alterations in Ex. D 3, not all apparently at the same time. It appears to us from a scrutiny of that document that, apart from the figure of Rs. 13,500, which was throughout fixed as the consideration, the other figures were not filled in at the time of writing. As first written the deed showed that Rs. 12,204-13-0 was to be retained by the purchaser and Rs. 7351 was admitted as having been received. There could never have been any admission that Rs. 7351 had been received, and there obviously was some mistake because this would make the total consideration over rupees 20,000 and the stamp that was actually purchased, Rs. 210, was a stamp for such an amount.

[9] The question whether Gadiram undertook to pay off both mortgage debts or only one depends largely on whether he paid Rs. 5000 in cash on 28-4-1925. (Their Lordships considered the evidence in this respect and continued.) We, therefore, agree with the lower Court and accept Shamrao's evidence that Rs. 5000 was not paid in cash on 28-4-1925.

[10] If Rs. 5000 was not paid in cash in advance, then clearly Rs. 7351 was retained in order to pay off both the mortgages and Gadiram failed to fulfil his obligation. The question then is what the vendors can claim as damages for this failure. The lower Court has held that they are entitled to the refund of Rs. 5000, which was retained by the purchaser to pay off the mortgage Ex. D-1, and interest thereon, but admittedly as a result of the purchaser's failure to fulfil his obligation the vendors lost property worth Rs. 1000. There was no promise by Gadiram to pay Rs. 5000 to his purchasers. He undertook, as we have held, to retain that money and use it to pay off the two mortgages, which he failed to do, and as a result of his failure his vendors lost certain property worth Rs. 1000. Gadiram's covenant with his vendors to pay off this encumbrance was nothing more than a contract of indemnity, as was held in 31 ALL. 583,[2] and it appears to us that the damages to which his vendors are entitled on a breach of that contract must be measured by the loss that they have suffered, and that limitation will run from the date when the loss was suffered. It may be that it would have been open to the purchasers to sue for breach of contract before they had actually suffered loss, as was held in A.I.R. 1931 ALL. 754[3] and 34 ALL. 429;[4] but where loss has actually been suffered, that, in our opinion, gives rise to a cause of action. In support of this proposition there are the decisions in 26 Cal. 241,[5] 56 Mad. 724,[6] 55 ALL. 490[7] where the decision in 34 ALL. 429[4] was not approved, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 429[8] and 31 N. L. R. 235.[9]

[11] The question, however, remains whether the loss was suffered when the suit on the mortgage was filed or when the final decree for foreclosure was passed or when possession was actually taken in execution of the final decree. In A. I. R. 1938 Pat. 275[10] it was held that limitation runs from the date of the filing of the suit to enforce the mortgage, but after that date the mortgage debt might have been paid off, and we agree with the view taken in 26 Cal. 241,[5] 55 ALL. 490[7] and A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 429[8] that limitation in such a case would run from the date of payment. In 56 Mad. 724[6] it was held that the loss occurred when the property was sold. In the present case it seems to us that the loss clearly occurred either when the final decree for foreclosure was passed by which the plaintiff lost his title in the property or when he actually lost possession, and whichever of these dates is held as the starting point for limitation the present suit is within time.

[12] The last question is whether the plaintiff alone is entitled to sue, and if so, whether he is entitled to recover the entire amount of the compensation or only 1/5th share of it. One of his brothers, Narayan, died some time between 25-1-1930 when civil suit No. 4 of 1929 was decided and 12-1-1933 when the appeal in that suit (First Appeal No. 108 of 1930) was decided in the Judicial Commissioner's Court. The plaintiff stated that his surviving brothers had refused to join him in this suit and he therefore impleaded them as defendants. According to his own evidence elicited in cross-examination there was a complete partition between him and his four brothers while Narayan was still alive and thereafter the plaintiff had a 1/5th separate undivided share in the property that was subsequently foreclosed and lost by the failure of Gadiram to pay off the mortgage Ex. D 1. He is, therefore, in our opinion, entitled to compensation for the loss of his separate share, and he is entitled to sue for that compensation without joining his brothers as co-plaintiffs. He is therefore entitled to 1/5th share of Rs. 1000 i.e. Rs. 200, as compensation for the loss that he has suffered, and in order that he may be restored to the position in which he would have been if he had not suffered that loss he must be allowed interest on that amount from the date when he lost possession. In the plaint as originally drafted he claimed interest at 3 per cent. per annum, but subsequently he claimed 10 per cent. We think that he should be allowed interest at 6 per cent. per annum on Rs. 200 from 17-9-1934 up to the date of suit, during the suit, and thereafter till realization. Costs both here and below will be in proportion to success and failure.

(a) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 72 (1) — Tenant paying higher rent than assessment for period of years through ignorance of his rights — No protection under S. 72 (1).

Where a tenant has not been paying a uniform rent and has also been paying considerably more than the assessment over a period of years without protest, he cannot claim the status of an ante-alienation tenant. The fact that he has paid the enhanced rate through ignorance of his rights, does not matter : 27 A. I. R. 1940 Nag. 209, Rel. on. [Paras 12 & 13]

(b) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 73— Registered kabuliyat executed by tenant in 1919 without objection—Kabuliyat indicating surrender of tenancy and fresh tenancy—Kabuliyat acted upon for period of years — Tenancy held commenced in 1919 and tenant was not tenant of antiquity.

The tenant and his predecessors had been holding from at least 1867. But there was nothing on the record to show that they came on the land for the first time in that year. There was also a registered kabuliat executed by the tanant without objection in 1919, indicating that there was a surrender of the tenancy, whatever its nature, and a fresh tenancy. The kabuliyat was acted on for a period of years:

Held, that it was established that the tenancy commenced in 1919 and therefore the tenant was not a tenant of antiquity, and the Court could not go behind the document of 1919 and guess at what might have been the position at that date : 14 A. Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal.

[2] The plaintiff is the jahagirdar of the village in which the land in suit is situate. The defendant is his tenant. The plaintiff seeks to evict the defendant on the ground that the defendant is an annual tenant who has not paid his rent for 10 years, namely, from 1930-31 to 1939-40 inclusive. The notice required by S. 74 (2), Berar Land Revenue Code, has been given.

[3] The defendant claims that he is an ante-alienation tenant and is entitled to the protection granted to him under S. 72 of the Code. In the alternative, he claims that he is a tenant of antiquity under S. 73. Both the lower Courts hold that the defendant is an ante-alienation tenant.

[4] Under S. 72 (1) an ante-alienation tenant is a tenant who has personally or through his predecessors in title held land continuously in an alienated village from a period prior to the alienation or from the year 1875. We do not know the year of the alienation in this case, and accordingly that clause can be left out of consideration. We are, therefore, concerned solely with the year 1875. It has been held as a fact that the defendant has been holding continuously through his predecessors-in-title and himself from before 1875. That finding is not challenged, and indeed cannot be. Therefore, that condition of S. 72 is fulfilled.

[5] The second condition laid down by S. 72 is that the tenant should have held for the period specified above "on a rent equal in amount to the fair assessment." Both the lower Courts have found that the defendant has not so held. They find that the defendant has been paying a higher rent than the assessed rent over a period of years. But according to them, this was done through ignorance and not because the defendant accepted the position of an annual tenant. This finding, so far as the latter part of it is concerned, cannot be accepted.

[6] Section 72 confers a special and privileged status which can only be claimed by those who have in fact been paying the assessed rent over the requisite period. If they have not, then it does not matter whether they have been paying an enhanced rate in ignorance of their rights or not because if they had raised the question at the time the jahagirdar might have been in a position to eject them. Consequently, if they choose to attorn afresh and continue to hold under the new attornment over a period of years—here from 1919 down to 1931—without protest, then they cannot, after a lapse of nearly 12 years, be permitted to go behind their attornment. In any event the condition is that they must be proved to have been paying the fair assessment. In the absence of that, they cannot claim the special privilege which S. 72 (1) confers.

[7] Of course, a question of fraud would be another matter. But unilateral mistake cannot avoid a contract nor, in my opinion, can it operate against the jahagirdar under S. 72. It is to be observed that there was no pleading of mistake, and certainly not of a mutual mistake. The defendant's plea was that the enhanced rent was taken by fraud, but no details of the fraud are given, except the one fact that an enhanced rate was taken without letting the defendant's ancestors know of it. Even if these facts be accepted as true it would make no difference. The fact that a demand is made and that the demand on the face of it is for something more than the defendant has been paying would not indicate fraud. But that apart, there is no proof that the defendant's ancestors did not know they were paying an enhanced rate, and it seems to be unlikely that that should have been the case. There being no fraud, the lower Court's finding that the enhanced rate was paid due to the unilateral mistake of the tenant's predecessors would not operate to give the defendant protection under S. 72.

[8] Such evidence as there is on the record disclosed the following facts. Exhibit P 8 shows that the total claimed from the tenant, and presumably paid, for the 22 acres 15 gunthas of survey No. 68 from the year 1879-80 down to 1882-83 was Rs. 13-11-6. In the next three years this was reduced by one rupee. It was reduced to Rs. 12-11-6. Then from 1887-88 down to 1897-98 the rent, together with the cesses, was restored to the original figure of Rs. 13-11 6.

[9] From here we come to Ex. P-9. That shows that from 1898-99 down to 1915 16 the amount was as before, Rs. 13-11 6. Next comes Ex. P-10. That shows that in the year 1916-17 the demand was increased by the jahagirdar by Rs. 21 and that the total was brought up to Rs. 35-6-6. In the next year, 1917-18, the demand was Rs. 35-10-9. Then in the following year, 1917-16 (1918-19?) the demand was again raised by rupee one and brought up to Rs. 36-9 3.

[10] This appears to have occasioned some dispute between the jahagirdar and the tenants because we have Ex. P-6 (a kabuliyat) executed by the tenants in favour of the jahagirdar dated 11-4-1919 under which the tenants agreed to pay Rs. 36-9-3 every year. This document has been attacked, accordingly I will not rely on it at this stage. There is enough foundation for the finding of fact by the two lower Courts that from 1919-20 an enhanced rate was paid, apart from this document.

[11] Exhibit P-7 shows that from 1919-20 down to 1923-24 Rs. 36-9-3 was claimed. Then from 1924-25 to 1925-26 Rs. 38-7-3, was claimed. Next, from 1926-27 down to 1930-31 Rs. 39-7 was claimed According to the findings, these sums were paid. After that the tenants refused to pay.

[12] Exhibit P-1 is an extract from the record-of-rights, and it shows that the assessed rent was only Rs. 13-11-0 which is also what we find from Exs. P-8 and P-9. They show the amount assessed from 1887 down to 1915-16. Exhibit P 1 also shows that the amount paid was Rs. 24. Therefore, it is abundantly clear that the tenants have not been paying a uniform rate, also that they have been paying considerably more than the assessment over a period of years. That being the case, and no question of fraud arising or having been proved, or having been found, it is impossible to uphold the finding of the lower Courts that the status of an ante-alienation tenant has been established.

[13] It was held by Grille J. (as he then was) in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 388[1] that before a tenant can claim the protection which S. 72 affords he must prove that he has been paying as rent to the landlord the exact amount of assessment over the requisite period of years and neither less nor more. In the face of that decision the conclusion of the two lower Courts regarding this matter cannot be accepted.

[14] That leaves at large the alternative case of a tenancy of antiquity. Under S. 73 a tenant is deemed to be one of antiquity where

"by reason of the antiquity of a tenancy . . . no satisfactory evidence of its commencement and of its period is forthcoming."

There are other conditions too, but we need not concern ourselves with those. The explanation states:

"Antiquity does not mean absolute antiquity, but means antiquity in reference to the difficulty of securing evidence."

[15] The evidence here, and the documents, show that the defendant and his predecessors have been holding from at least 1867. There is nothing on the present record to show that they came on the land for the first time in that year, nor is there any evidence of the commencement of the period of that tenancy forthcoming in this case. Accordingly, if that was all, the conditions of S. 73 would be fulfilled.

[16] But it is not all because the commencement of the tenure is known. Exhibit P 6, the kabuliyat, executed by the tenants, indicates that there was a surrender of the tenancy, whatever its nature, in the year 1919 and a fresh tenancy on the terms disclosed in Ex. P-6. It is argued that Ex. P-6 cannot of itself operate as a lease because a lease has to be executed by the lessor, and this is only a kabuliyat. Therefore, according to Kinkhede A. J. C. in A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 153[2] at p. 156 this cannot operate as a lease. That was conceded, but it was said that Ex. P-6 does not purport to be a lease. It is a kabuliyat. But it does show that there was an oral lease. Therefore, there being no prohibition regarding an oral lease, because S. 117, T. P. Act, excludes the provisions of S. 107 from agricultural leases, the oral lease can be proved and the proof is to be found in Ex. P-6 In my opinion, this contention is well founded.

[17] Exhibit P 6 is registered. It discloses an undertaking by the tenants to hold on certain terms. It is clear there must have been a corresponding agreement by the landlord, and that agreement would constitute the lease. There is also evidence to that effect. Such a lease did not require registration because it could be oral, and in those days it was not necessary for the lessor and the lessee both to sign the document. The amendment in the law regarding this did not come into effect till 1929. Therefore, in the year 1919 it was permissible for a valid lease to be made by an oral agreement on the landlord's side and the execution of a registered kabuliyat on the side of the tenant. That being so, there was undoubtedly a fresh lease in 1919.

[18] Had the tenants objected in 1919 to the execution of such a document the position might have been different. It might be that they could have proved that they were tenants of antiquity holding under the corresponding provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code then in existence. On the other hand, it may be that the landlord had at that date evidence in his possession regarding the commencement of the tenure and regarding its period. It may be that the period had expired in 1919, and accordingly a fresh document was necessary. If that was the case then clearly the old document would have been destroyed, and this alone left.

[19] Alternatively it may be that the document having been executed in 1919, and no objection having been taken to it over this long period of years. the landlord allowed the evidence which he then had in his possession to be destroyed or to disappear. Therefore, the mere fact that on the material we now have before us it appears that the defendant might have established that he was a tenant of antiquity in 1919 will not justify us in going behind the document of 1919 which was acted on over a period of years, and will not justify the conclusion that the tenant had no power to surrender his holding and that he did not intend to do so.

[20] The cases reported in 8 Lah. 573[3] at p. 583, which is a Privy Council case, A. I. R. 1944 Lah. 9[4] and A. I. R. 1944 Bom. 210[5] at p. 211 show that the execution of a document such as Ex. P-6 imports a surrender of whatever kind of tenancy was in being in the year 1919 and the commencement of a fresh one from that date; and that holds good even if the previous tenancy was of a permanent nature. Therefore, it is, in my opinion, established that the tenancy here commenced in 1919, and we cannot go behind the document of 1919 and guess at what might have been the position at that date.

[21] The result is that the appeal succeeds and the decrees of the lower Courts are set aside, and a decree granting the plaintiff's claim with costs in all three Courts will now be passed.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — New plea — Plea going to root of jurisdiction can be allowed to be raised for first time in second appeal.

A plea that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree for specific performance of a contract of sale of a house by delivery of possession of the site, as the decree passed was merely a decree for specific performance and not for delivery of possession, goes to the very root, namely, the question of jurisdiction of an executing Court and can, therefore, be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 —Power of executing Court — Decree only for specific performance, not for delivery of possession — Executing Court cannot deliver possession.

An executing Court's jurisdiction is limited to the decree itself. If a decree in respect of a particular property or in respect of a particular matter is rightly or wrongly not passed, it cannot be executed in respect of that property or in respect of that matter. A relief for specific performance and one for possession of the property in respect of which specific performance is asked for are two distinct reliefs. They may in certain circumstances be claimed in the same suit, but it is not necessary to do so. [Paras 4 and 5]

Where in a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell a house, there is no prayer for delivery of possession and the decree passed in the suit does not direct delivery of possession of the property, the executing Court has no jurisdiction to deliver possession in execution under S. 47 on the ground that relief for possession is incidental to the relief for specific performance: 1 A. S. R. Mangrulkar—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the judgment-debtor. In execution of a decree for specific performance passed in favour of the decree-holder-respondent in Civil Suit No. 99 of 1933 he took possession of certain property and now claims an additional property, namely, the open site A. B. C. J. shown in the decree-holder's map which according to the decree-holder was included in the property that was agreed to be sold to him by the judgment-debtor and in respect of which a decree for specific performance was passed in his favour. Both the Courts below have held that the site A. B. C. J. was included in the property agreed to be sold and in respect of which a decree was passed and the decree-holder was therefore entitled to be put in possession of that property in execution of the decree in Civil Suit No. 99 of 1933.

[2] Apart from the merits of the case, the appellant-judgment-debtor contended that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree in respect of possession of the site as the decree passed in Civil Suit No. 99 of 1933 was merely a decree for specific performance and not for delivery of possession. The question was no doubt raised for first time in second appeal but it goes to the very root, namely, the question of jurisdiction of an executing Court. An executing Court cannot execute anything which goes beyond the terms of the decree passed and the scope of the decree cannot be ascertained from the decree itself which is on the record (paper book page 5). I do not therefore see any valid ground for not allowing the appellant to raise this question. If the executing Court had no jurisdiction at all to execute the decree, then the decree-holder's application under S. 47, Civil P. C., must necessarily fail and will have to be dismissed on that ground alone without going into the merits of the question decided by the two Courts below.

[3] I find from the plaint in Civil Suit No. 99 of 1933 that the reliefs claimed are in these words: (a) A decree directing the defendant to execute a duly registered sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the suit house be passed. And Rs. 10 be granted as cost of notice in Maharashtra; (b) That in case the defendant fails to execute the sale-deed this Court be pleased to execute the same on his behalf; (c) Full costs of this suit be saddled on the defendant; (d) Any other relief which the Court deems fit may also be granted. It is thus clear that the relief for possession was not asked for in the plaint. I further find from the decree that no decree was passed for delivery of possession of the house. Relevant portion of the decree runs thus:

"It is ordered that the plaintiff do deposit in Court for payment to the defendant on or before 28-8-34 the sum of Rs. 2,402-12-0 and it is further ordered that the plaintiff do produce and file in Court the necessary stamp paper for the execution of sale-deed on or before 23-8-34. It is further decreed that on the plaintiff's doing this the defendant shall execute the necessary sale-deed conveying the house described below to the plaintiff and shall get it registered at the cost of the plaintiff, and that the sum of Rs. 386-4-0, be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff on account of costs of this suit in case plaintiff does not deduct this sum from the sale price."

The decree gives the description of the property in respect of which a sale deed is to be executed. Thus, not only was there no prayar for delivery of possession but there was also no decree passed either by the first Court or by the lower appellate Court for delivery of possession of the property.

[4] It is beyond doubt that an executing Court's jurisdiction is limited to the decree itself. If a decree in respect of a particular property or in respect of a particular matter is rightly or wrongly not passed, it cannot be executed in respect of that property or in respect of that matter. It is no doubt held in A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 179[1] that even where a decree is only for specific performance and not for delivery of possession, the executing Court can deliver possession as relief of possession is incidental to the relief for specific performance. The learned Judges of the Patna High Court did not agree with the decision in 38 Mad. 698.[2] On the other hand, they followed a previous decision of the Patna High Court in 5 Pat. L. J. 314[3] in which 38 Mad. 698[2] was expressly dissented from. In the earlier ruling of the Patna High Court, Mullick J. observed thus:

"We think therefore that the first objection (i. e. the objection that the Court had no right to give possession) must fail and upon the officer of the Court executing the document on behalf of the judgment-debtor if he refuses to execute it a right to possession vests in the decree-holder which can be enforced by the execution Court."

The learned Judge also relied on O. 21, R. 32, cl. (5), Civil P. C. I express my respectful dissent from the decision of the Patna High Court as in my view O. 21, R. 32 (5) is not relevant to a situation like the present.

[5] On the other hand, it is clear from the decision in 38 Mad. 698[2] that a relief for specific performance and one for possession of the property in respect of which specific performance is asked for are two distinct reliefs. They may in certain circumstances be claimed in the same suit, but it is not necessary to do so. In fact, it is held in that case that where the plaintiff, who had obtained in a previous suit a decree against the defendants for specific performance of an agreement to sell certain immovable property to the plaintiff and had got a sale deed in his favour in execution of the decree, instituted the present suit for the recovery of possession of the lands from the defendants, the suit was not barred by O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. This very positively shows that the two reliefs are distinct. The decision in 38 Mad. 698[2] has been accepted as correct and followed in 4 N. L. R. 11[4] and 14 N. L. R. 176.[5] The Rangoon High Court in A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 197[6] and the Bombay High Court in 18 Bom. 537[7] and in A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 181[8] have taken a similar view.

[6] The following passage at p. 414 of Edn. 2 of the Law of Specific Relief by Agarwal is also relevant:

"In a suit for specific performance of a contract in respect of immovable property the settled practice of Courts in India, where the parties properly sued for specific performance are in possession of the property is to allow a prayer for possession to be added to the prayer for specific performance as such a procedure obviates the necessity for filing a fresh suit for possession to which there could be no defence."

Reliance has been placed on a Full Bench decision in 40 Mad. 365[9] and other decisions.

[7] In my view, therefore, the executing Court went beyond its jurisdiction in entertaining an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., in a proceeding arising out of a decree which was not a decree for possession but only a decree for specific performance of a contract. That in my view was sufficient to reject the application of the decree-holder under S. 47, Civil P. C. His remedy may be by way of a separate suit and he may follow the same.

[8] The other question that was urged before me was regarding the extent of the property against which the decree was passed. The decree-holder contended that the site shown in red in his map and demarcated by letters A B C J was a part of the property which was agreed to be sold to him and in respect of which a decree was passed in his favour. The judgment-debtor, on the other hand, contended that the decree was passed only as regards the house portion which was 65 feet east-west and 25 feet north-south. This excluded the portion which the decree-holder now claims possession of.

[9] In view of what I have held above, it is not necessary for me to decide this second question. This would be decided at proper time and in a proper legal proceeding. There is also no sufficient evidence before me to decide this question as the sale deed which was executed in execution of the decree for specific performance is not on record. That is a very important document for the decision of the question. The Courts below have not also considered whether there is any ambiguity and, if there is any, whether oral evidence was admissible. Any decision on such a scanty material, as is in this case, is bound to be unsatisfactory. I do not therefore propose to give any finding whether the site A B C J was included in the decree under execution or not and set aside the findings of the Courts below.

[10] In conclusion, the appeal is allowed on the first point. The parties to bear their own costs.

Misc. Civil Case No. 130 of 1945, Decided on 16-12-1947.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10—Remission of debt granted by creditor to assessee trader held could not be treated as revenue receipt.

The assessee who was heavily indebted to a creditor was granted a remission of certain amount of the debt by the creditor during the accounting year. In previous years the assessee had been allowed to deduct the interest paid on this debt from his profits for purposes of income-tax. The question was whether this remission could be treated as a revenue receipt:

Held in the circumstances of the case that the amount of remission of debt granted by the creditor to the debtor could not be treated as a revenue receipt of the year of account: (1932) 16 Tax. Cas. 570, Rel. on; (1942) 10 I. T. R. 21 (Bom), Disting. [Para 3]

Pollock J.—This is a reference under S. 66 (1), Income-tax Act.

[2] The assessee deals in gold, silver, grain and cotton, etc., and as a result apparently of forward contracts entered into through Messrs. Gangaram Asaram of Bombay he became heavily indebted to that firm. The debt due to Gangaram Asaram was shown in the assessees accounts, and interest on the debt was credited to Gangaram Asaram in the accounts each year. For the purposes of income-tax assessment the interest so credited was deducted from the assessee's profits. The assessment year with which we are concerned is the year 1943-44, and the assessment has to be made on the income for the year ending at Diwali 1942. In that year Rs. 1,48,242 was shown as due to Gangaram Asaram, but a settlement was arrived at between Gangaram and the assessee by which the assessee was given a remission of Rs. 54,225, the balance being partly paid in cash and adjusted by hawalas; and the debt being thus reduced to Rs. 40,000 was carried forward in the following years. The question referred to us is

'Whether, in the circumstances of the case, the sum of Rs. 54,225 has been rightly treated as a revenue receipt of the year of account.'

[3] The income-tax authorities have held that this item of Rs. 54,225 is a revenue receipt and not a capital receipt. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal remarked:

'The fact therefore remains that a certain remission was granted by the creditor in the account which included revenue items which have been previously claimed by the assessee in his trading account and allowed by the Department. It is common knowledge that traders do grant remission to each other at the time of the settlement of an account. The remission may relate to the charging of higher rate of interest than agreed upon or for some credit entries which have been wrongly entered in the account. During the preceding years' assessments large sums on account of interest have been credited to the account of the creditor and allowed by the Department as a revenue deduction from the appellant's assessable income.'

In the five years ending with 1942, Rs. 41,247 was credited to the account of Gangaram as interest. There is no finding, or apparently evidence, that the amount was inflated or bogus or did not represent the true business and was a book-keeping method to diminish their revenue or anything of that kind, in the words of Rowlatt J. in (1932) 16 Tax. Cas. 570[1] at p. 583, and it appears to us that these two cases are very similar. The British Mexican Petroleum Company Limited became heavily indebted to other firms, and a large part of the debt was written off. That debt had been set off as against the profits in the previous year, and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue claimed that they were entitled to reopen the assessment of the previous year. In the alternative they claimed that the assessee company should be required to enter the sum remitted as a credit item in its accounts for the period in which it was remitted. Both those claims failed. Rowlatt J. remarked at p. 585:

'How on earth the forgiveness in that year of a past indebtedness can add to those profits I cannot understand.'

Lord Thankerton at p. 592 said:

'The appellant's alternative contention, which was not seriously pressed by the Attorney-General, is equally unsound, in my opinion. I am unable to see how the release from a liability, which liability has been finally dealt with in the preceding account, can form a trading receipt in the account for the year in which it is granted.'

So also Lord Macmillan at p. 593:

'I cannot see how the extent to which a debt is forgiven can become a credit item in the trading account for the period within which the concession is made.'

The case on which the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal has relied, (1942) I.T.R. 21,[2] appears to us to be clearly distinguishable because in that case there was an actual cash receipt in the year of assessment. In our opinion, therefore, the answer to the question referred to us is 'No.' The applicant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and a counsel's fee of Rs. 100.

Judgment. — This is an appeal against the order of Mr. R. Y. Mahajan, Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 96-A of 1944, decided on 25th June 1945. The matter arises in execution proceedings based upon an order of the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13, Relief of Indebtedness Act. The Debt Relief Court had prepared a scheme of repayment and instalments were granted. This was on 13th February 1940. The instalments fell due on 15th February of each succeeding year. The Deputy Commissioner was moved on the allegation that two instalments were defaulted. The Deputy Commissioner passed an order on 10th August 1944 that the order of the Debt Relief Court had ceased to have effect and the balance remaining due was recoverable as a decree.

[2] Execution proceedings were started and during the course of the proceedings the judgment-debtor filed another order subsequently passed by the Deputy Commissioner rescinding his previous order on which the execution was based. It was contended that the Deputy Commissioner could not rescind or review the order but was functus officio the moment the first order was passed.

[3] The executing Court held that the Deputy Commissioner had the power to review his own order and in suitable cases even to revoke it. It further held that in the present case, the order on which execution was based having disappeared, the execution proceeding could not go on. On appeal this decision was upheld.

[4] The only question involved in the present case is whether the Deputy Commissioner is empowered to review his own order passed under S. 13 (3), C. P. Relief of Indebtedness Act. The matter is of first impression so far as the civil Courts are concerned. The subject has, however, been discussed in the Revenue Courts on more than one occasion. In 1943 N. L. J. 119[1] it was held by Binney, Financial Commissioner, that the Deputy Commissioner acts as a persona designata but this decision was not followed by a Divisional Bench consisting of Greenfield, Adviser to Governor, and Rau, Financial Commissioner, in 1944 N. L. J. 537.[2] In the latter case it was held that the Deputy Commissioner acts qua revenue officer. I am in respectful agreement with the view taken by the Divisional Bench. This being so I am of opinion that as a revenue officer, the Deputy Commissioner is empowered to review his order and he does not become functus officio in the way claimed by the appellant. As the learned lower appellate Judge has pertinently pointed out, to deny the power of review would lead to grave results. If the Deputy Commissioner under an error or misapprehension passed an order he would have no power to recall his order if he did not possess the power of review. Once it is held that the Deputy Commissioner acts as a revenue officer, it is evident that he can review his own order.

[5] But in reviewing his order the Deputy Commissioner has no jurisdiction to enlarge the time for payment of the two instalments. The penalty under S. 13 (3) is incurred on the failure to pay the two instalments on the due date and the Deputy Commissioner on an application has to pass an order under S.13(3) if two instalments are in arrears at least on the date of the filing of the application: See I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 973;[3] I.L R. (1946) Nag. 786[4] and Misc. second appeal No. 173 of 1944.[5]

[6] In the present case the order of the Debt Relief Court was passed on 13-2-1940 and the first instalment was due on 15-2-1941 and the second on 15-2-1942. Both these instalments were defaulted and the application was filed on 20-5-1942. After inquiry the Deputy Commissioner passed the first order on 9-8-1944. The certificate of the Deputy Commissioner was produced in the Civil Court for execution on 1-9-1944. The two instalments were deposited on 4-9-1944 and the Deputy Commissioner passed the second order on 5-11-1944. The case of the judgment-debtor is that he had a decree against the decree-holder to whom instalments were payable and as the amount of the deceee exceeded the first two instalments, he was entitled to set off his own decree against the amount of the instalments. It is contended that the second order of the Deputy Commissioner took this into account. The second order of the Deputy Commissioner runs as follows :

"5th November 1944. I have gone through the record and I am satisfied that my order granting a certificate ought to be reviewed. The Tahsildar's report of 1-8-1944 was incomplete and wrongly indicated that the debtor had no cause to show. I revoke the certificate. Inform the Civil Court. There is no need for further enquiry because Rs. 200 has been deposited and two kists no longer remain in arrears.

Sd. G. L. Watson.
Deputy Commissioner,
Amraoti district."

The learned Deputy Commissioner gave no reasons for his decision. In fact he did not order any further inquiry because he felt that Rs. 200, having been deposited, the kists no longer remained in arrears.

[7] As has been shown above, the Deputy Commissioner has no jurisdiction to grant further time to the debtor. He must pass an order under S. 13 (3) of the Act if two instalments remain in arrears. The amount of the defaulted kists was deposited when the period had long expired. There appears to be little doubt so far as facts are concerned. There is a certified copy of the order passed by N. L. Pathak, Subordinate Judge, second class, Morsi, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 14 of 1941 on 29-8-1941 by which the creditor in the present case was ordered to pay Rs. 136-14-0 plus costs Rs. 15-4-0. It thus shows that a sum of about Rs. 150 was owing from the present creditor to the judgment-debtor who was required to pay instalments. But the fact remains that the learned Deputy Commissioner did not consider whether this amount could be set off against the instalments due. I understand that this amount was subsequently recovered by the judgment-debtor on 27-4-1946. Learned counsel for the appellant stated during the arguments that the sum was recovered on 21-10-1944 but later pointed out that due to a misreading of the Civil Suit Register this date was wrongly given, the real date being 27-4-1946.

[8] Now to-day the payment of the instalments can only be referred to the deposit of Rs. 200 on 4-9-1944 to which date, as I have shown above, it was not open to the Deputy Commissioner to extend the time for payment. It does appear as if the question of this cross-claim was not mooted and not considered and the matter was solely decided upon the fact of the deposit having been made on 4-9-1944.

[9] It is open to the civil Court to question the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner. This has been laid down by Grille C. J. in I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 786[4] and the observations of the learned Chief Justice have my respectful concurrence. To the same effect are the other decisions to which I have referred above.

[10] In my opinion though the Deputy Commissioner possessed the power of reviewing his order, in the present case he acted without jurisdiction in extending the time for payment till 4-9-1944. This power is not given to the Deputy Commissioner by the Act and in assuming this power he acted without jurisdiction. I hold that the second order of the Deputy Commissioner revoking the certificate is a nullity. The civil Court must ignore that order and proceed as if it was not passed. The appeal is therefore allowed with costs and execution will proceed on the first certificate issued by the Deputy Commissioner.

[11] After the typescript of the order was ready, learned counsel for the respondent challenged the fact that the decree referred to in para. 8 (here para. 6) above had been executed and the full amount recovered. I accordingly sent for the execution case because in my opinion it was necessary to know the correct facts before passing orders in this case and this mode was more satisfactory than asking the parties to file affidavits. I have seen the execution case and find that the amount was in fact paid. Thus the payment of instalments is referable to the deposit made after the expiry of the period allowed to pay the instalments.

[12] Learned counsel says that the matter be judged on facts obtaining on the date the Deputy Commissioner passed the second order and an inquiry be ordered. I find this unnecessary as that order as it stands is void and under the Act time cannot be extended by any Court or other authority. The respondent by his own action has completely shut himself from any relief about which he could have urged something with a show of plausibility.

Mungalal Harbhagat Agarwal — Plaintiff — Appellant v. Maksuddin Husnoddin — Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 425 of 1943, Decided on 28-10-1947, from Appellate Decree of Additional District Judge, Ellichpur, D/- 6-2-1943.

C. P. and Berar Debt Conciliation Act (2 [II] of 1933), S. 23 — "Time ..... continued"—Meaning of — Period from date of registration of agreement up to date of its receipt in office of Board, cannot be excluded.

The expression "the time during which such proceedings had continued ....." in S. 23 of the Act necessarily postulates effective proceedings which call for the exercise of some judicial act as contradistinguished from a ministerial or a clerical act. After the registration of the agreement the Debt Conciliation Board is not required to exercise any judicial function as a Debt conciliation Board in the matter of conciliation. The agreement which may be good, bad or indifferent is finally settled. Hence the period from the date of the registration of the agreement up to the date when the registered agreement was received in the office of the Debt Conciliation Board and papers were directed to be filed, cannot be excluded. [Paras 3, 5]

N. B. Chandurkar — for Appellant.
M. Y. Sharef — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This second appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff, Mungalal, whose suit for recovery of certain money, due on a pro-note, dated 14th December 1936 (Ex. P-1) has been dismissed in both the Courts below.

[2] The facts which have given rise to this appeal are as follows : The plaintiff instituted this suit on the basis of the pro-note, Ex. P-1. He had a cause of action against the defendant on the date of the pro-note and he could have filed his suit within the legal period of limitation on or before 14th December 1939. The plaint in the suit was filed and registered on 2nd September 1941. The plaintiff's suit is prima facie time-barred, but his contention is that he is entitled to deduct the period that was occupied by the proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board, Ellichpur, initiated on the application of the debtor-defendant. The defendant had applied to the Debt Conciliation Board on 20th September 1937 for conciliation of his debt. The plaintiff was not agreeable to the scheme of conciliation recommended by the Debt Conciliation Board, whereas the other creditors had accepted it. On 31st January 1938 the agreement was drawn up with reference to those creditors who had accepted the scheme of conciliation. The said agreement was later on sent for registration under S. 12 (2), C. P. and Berar Debt Conciliation Act, 1933 (2 [II] of 1933), hereinafter described for lucidity as the Act. The agreement in question was actually registered on 9th February 1938 and it was received back by the Debt Conciliation Board on 5th March 1938 from the Sub-Registrar, Ellichpur, and thereupon on the same day the Debt Conciliation Board directed the papers to be filed. The plaintiff's contention is that the whole period commencing with the filing of the application before it on 20th September 1937 up to 8th July 1939, when his application for review was thrown out, ought to be excluded from the period of limitation. It is conceded by Mr. N. B. Chandurkar, the learned counsel for the appellant, that his client's suit would not be within time, even if he were entitled to exclude the period between 20th September 1937, on which the plaintiff-appellant made the application before the Debt Conciliation Board, and the date 9th February 1938, upon which the agreement was registered. It is also further conceded that even if the additional period occupied by the proceedings started on the application for review commencing from 31st March 1938 up to 8th July 1939, the date upon which the application for review was rejected, were excluded, the plaintiff's suit would not escape the bar of limitation.

[3] The only point, therefore, that calls for decision is whether the period from 9th February 1938 (i. e. the date of the registration of the agreement) up to 5th March 1938 (i. e. when the registered agreement was received in the office of the Debt Conciliation Board, Ellichpur, and papers were directed to be filed) should be excluded or not. If this period were excluded it is not disputed that the plaintiff's suit would escape the bar of limitation; if it were not excluded it is admitted, that his suit instituted on 2nd September 1941, was time-barred.

[4] It is contended by Mr. Chandurkar that under S. 23 of the Act the plaintiff is entitled to exclude the time during which such proceedings had continued and it has been argued that the proceedings did not terminate with the registration of the agreement on 9th February 1938, but that they should be deemed to have continued even up to 5th March 1938, that is, until the time when the registered agreement was received in the office and the papers were directed to be filed. I cannot accede to this contention, for the simple reason that the proceedings which commenced with the application of the debtor on 20th September 1937 actually terminated on 9th February 1938, when the agreement was registered. This position is supported by the plain and unambiguous language of S. 12 (2) of the Act. Under the provisions of S. 12 (2) of the Act, the proceedings undoubtedly continued until the agreement was registered. When it is once registered, it takes effect, as if it were a decree of a civil Court. That means, in other words, that after the agreement is registered, there remains nothing to be done by the Debt Conciliation Board so far as the conciliation of the debt is concerned. In so far as the agreement, after it is registered, has the effect of a decree, it can be executed as a decree according to the usual procedure. The proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board must, therefore, be deemed to be effective proceedings until the agreement is actually registered.

[5] The order-sheet, dated 5th March 1938, (EX. P-3) on which Mr. Chandurkar places his main reliance runs thus : "5th March 1938. Agreement received duly registered. Civil Court informed. File." That order of 5th March 1938, cannot, by any stretch of reasoning, be interpreted to mean that it amounts to any exercise of judicial function by the Debt Conciliation Board. The expression "the time during which such proceedings had continued ....." in S. 23 of the Act necessarily postulates effective proceedings which call for the exercise of some judicial act as contradistinguished from a ministerial or a clerical act. It is quite obvious that after the registration of the agreement on 9th February 1938, the Debt Conciliation Board was not required to exercise any judicial function as a Debt Conciliation Board in the matter of conciliation. The agreement which may be good, bad or indifferent was finally settled. The conciliation of the debt so far as the creditors who were agreeable thereto were concerned was completed. When the scheme of conciliation of debt was actually embodied in the agreement and when it was registered, the whole proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board did come to an end altogether. It is futile to contend that after the effective termination of the proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board, mere receipt of the registered agreement in the office of the Debt Conciliation Board from the Sub-Registrar's office and mere order to file papers could, with any rhyme or reason, be regarded as proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board so as to exclude the period from 9th February up to 5th March 1938.

[6] I, therefore, agree with the learned Judge in the Court below in holding that the plaintiff is not entitled to exclude the period from 9th February 1938 up to 5th March 1938 under the provisions of S. 23 of the Act and hold that the present suit was rightly held as being barred by limitation.

[7] The appeal before me fails and is dismissed with costs.

Balchand Tikaram and others — Accused-Applicants v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 204 of 1947, Decided on 2-1-1948, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Saugor, D/-10-3-1947.

(a) Defence of India Rules (1939), R. 81 (4)—Central Provinces Order requiring "dealers" to give correct returns of stock, with declaration—'Dealer' includes "producer."

Where the "dealers" are required by the order of the Provincial Govt. (Central Provinces) to give returns of their stock, the word "dealers" applies also to persons who manufacture and sell. It is true that ordinarily the word is applied to a person who sells articles in the same condition in which he bought them but that is because of the large number of traders of this kind to be found in this country. There is nothing wrong in speaking of a 'furniture dealer' even though he may be a manufacturer and may not be merely buying and selling furniture made by others.

The fact that the form of return does not apply strictly to a 'producer' because there is no column where the 'dealer' can show the quantity "produced" by him as opposed to the quantity bought by him, is not conclusive of the matter.

Consequently, persons who press out oils and produce oil cakes as by-product, are 'dealers' in oil cakes within the meaning of the order. [Paras 3 &4]

(b) Defence of India Rules (1939), R. 81 (4)—Central Provinces Order requiring dealer to give correct returns of stock with verification—Dealer stating quantity approximately without verification—Order is contravened—Prosecution need not show that quantity was more than shown in return.

Where the return filed by a dealer as to his stock, under the order of the C. P. Government requiring dealers to give returns of their stock with verification, does not make a true statement of the quantity and is not verified as required by the prescribed form, but merely states the quantity approximately, the order is contravened, and an offence punishable under R. 81 (4) is committed. Prosecution need not prove that actual quantity in stock was more than that shown in the form. [Para 5]

(c) Defence of India Rules (1939), R. 81 (4) — C. P. Government order requiring dealers to give return of their stock and verify same — Mens rea must be proved for conviction under R. 81 (4) for contravention of order.

For conviction under R. 81 (4) for contravening order requiring dealers to give returns of their stock and verify the same, mens rea must be proved. The persons having nothing to do in the matter cannot be convicted. [Para 6]

Case referred :—

1. (1891) 7 T. L. R. 302, N. E. Rly. Co. v. Mayor, etc. Kingston-upon-Hull.

M. R Bolde—for Applicants.

R. Kaushalendra Rao, Govt. Pleader — for the Crown.

Order.—The applicants were convicted under R. 81 (4), Defence of India Rules for contravention of the Provincial Government's Order relating to oil-cakes. The facts are that the applicants (who are all brothers) are proprietors of Hira Oil Mills, Saugor, and in contravention of the order of the Provincial Govenment did not submit a true return of their stocks of oil-cakes in the three months which are the subject of this prosecution. Their sentences were varied on appeal and as they stand to-day they are :

Applicant 1—Rs. 2000 for each of the three offences. Total Rs. 6,000.

Applicants 2 & 3 — Rs. 300 for each of the three offences. Total fine Rs. 900 each.

[2] Various grounds were urged in the petition for revision but now the main argument is the applicability of the order to the applicants. It is contended that the order applies only to 'dealers' and the applicants are not dealers because the applicants press out oils and the oil-cakes are merely a by-product. In this sense the applicants contend they are 'producers' rather than dealers. Since the clause contravened applies to dealers, it is urged, no offence has been committed by the accused. In this connection reliance was placed upon the meaning of the word 'dealer' and it was argued that the word is used in the order in the sense of a person who 'buys and sells' and thus the Provincial Government must be held to have purposely excluded the application of the order to 'producers.' Reference was also made to the form prescribed which, it was urged, strengthens this argument and to certain other orders of the Provincial Government in which a distinction is made between 'producers' and 'dealers.'

[3] The learned Sessions Judge has discussed at length the several meanings of the word' dealer' and has shown that the word applies also to persons who manufacture and sell. It is true that ordinarily the word is applied to a person who sells articles in the same condition in which he bought them but that is because of the large number of traders of this kind to be found in this country. There is nothing wrong in speaking of a 'furniture dealer' even though he may be a manufacturer and may not be merely buying and selling furniture made by others. See in this connection the wide meaning given to the word 'dealer' in (1891) 7 T. L. R. 302.[1]

[4] It is true that the form does not apply strictly to a 'producer' because there is no column where the 'dealer' can show the quantity 'produced' by him as opposed to the quantity bought by him. But that in my opinion is not conclusive of the matter. If the meaning of the word is clear, the person filling in the form could state the fact in it by specifying the quantity 'produced' as has been done in the present case by the applicants. There is no force in this contention. Indeed accused 1 in giving the return shows that he well understands this position.

[5] The gravamen of the charge against the applicant 1 is not that he has not given a return but that the return does not make a true statement of the quantity and is not verified as required by the prescribed form. Applicant 1 has merely stated the quantity approximately. It is contended that it was not proved by the prosecution that the quantity was more than shown in the form. That is neither here nor there. There is a sound administrative reason to compel the dealers to give a declaration about the true quantity and also to give a declaration to that effect since a person making a false declaration is liable under the Penal Code for it. Applicant 1 had been warned about this and there is no excuse for not complying with the express directions in this behalf. In my opinion there was contravention of the order and the conviction of applicant 1 cannot be said to be bad. I accordingly confirm it.

[6] As regards the liability, applicants 2 and 3, there is no proof that these applicants did anything in the matter. They cannot be said to have shared the mens rea which in my opinion must be proved. Their convictions are not proper. I therefore set aside their convictions and the sentences of fines imposed on them. The fines which have already been recovered will be refunded to them.

[7] As regards applicant 1, the of fine Rs. 6.000 is too heavy and excessive. It is true that the Mills had been told that the forms must show the true quantity and must contain a declaration to that effect. But the fact remains that he did submit a form and that the form being incomplete the accused was required to adopt it for his own purpose. That proves his desire to comply with the law. Though it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that he had understated the quantity, the proof of such a fact would have proved that the offence was more serious. This has not been done and there is nothing to show that the accused purposely did not give a declaration to save himself from further consequences. In my opinion the ends of justice would be served by imposing a fine of of Rs. 500 on each count, that is to say, a total fine of Rs. 1,500. I find that the fine has already been recovered. The balance will now be refunded to applicant 1. With this modification the application for revision is dismissed.

R.G.D. Order accordingly.

Gulabchand Bhagiratha—Accused—Applicant v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 487 of 1947, Decided on 7-2-1948, from order of 2nd Addl. Sessions Judge, Amraoti, D/-30-9-1947.

(a) C. P. and Berar House Rent Control Order (1947), Cl. 14 — Indirect interference with water connection—Connection cut off by municipality on landlord's application—Landlord is liable.

Clause 14 applies to indirect interference also and when the municipality cuts off the water supply of the house as a result of the landlord's application, the landlord is liable under Cl. 14. [Para 4]

(b) C. P. and Berar House Rent Control Order (1947), Cl. 14 — Clause is not ultra vires powers under S. 2, C. P. and Berar Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act (11 of 1946) under which order was made.

Clause 14, C. P. and Berar House Rent Control Order is covered by the words "regulating the letting and subletting of any accommodation" in S. 2, Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act. Rule making power is conferred by the opening part of the section and the function of Cls. (a) to (d) is merely illustrative. This is borne out by the fact that they are preceded by the words "in particular" which connote that the preceding contents of the section relate to the generality of the powers conferred on the Provincial Government.

Clause 14 is not, therefore, ultra vires the powers under S. 2: 32 A. I. R. 1945 P. C. 156, Foll.; 30 A.I.R. 1943 F C 1, Not foll. [Paras 6 and 9]

T. J. Kedar—for Applicant.
R. Kaushalendra Rao, Govt. Pleader—for the Crown.

Order.— Gulabchand of Amraoti was convicted and sentenced to undergo 4 months rigorous imprisonment under Cl. 14, C. P. and Berar House Rent Control Order, 1947, and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under Cl. 13 (1) (a) ibid. read with S. 8, C. P. and Berar Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act, 1946, by the first class Magistrate, Amraoti and his appeal was dismissed by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Amraoti. He has now come up in revision to this Court.

[2] As a result of his application of 25th March 1947 to the municipality, the water connection of his tenants Madanlal, Ratanlal, Bhaurao and Mathuradas (P. Ws. 2-5) was stopped and on 2nd April 1947 he issued them notices to vacate their house without the previous written permission of the Controller. He subsequently applied to the Controller for such permission on the ground of non-payment of rent by the tenants and the Controller on 1st September 1947, granted him the permission. An appeal from that order was summarily dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner, Amracti, on 22nd September 1947.

[3] So far as the contravention of Cl. 13 (1) (a) of the Order is concerned, there can be no question that it took place and I was not addressed regarding it. It was also clear that as a result of the applicant Gulabchand's application to the municipality, the water connection of his tenants was stopped, but it was urged that his act was not covered by Cl. 14 of the Order, inasmuch as that clause contemplates direct interference by a landlord with the water connection of a house occupied by his tenant.

[4] Clause 14 runs as follows:

"No landlord shall interfere with the ..... water connections .... of the house so as to affect materially the enjoyment of the house by the tenant."

There is nothing in the wording of the clause to restrict it to direct interference and from its terms it is clear that interference of any kind with the water connections is prohibited, if such interference materially affects the tenant's enjoyment of the house. This ban thus, applies to indirect interference and it follows that when the municipality cut off the water supply of the house in question as a result of his application, he was liable under clause 14 of the Order.

[5] This does not conclude the matter, as his learned advocate raised the interesting contention that this clause was ultra vires of the Central Provinces and Berar Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act, 1946, under S. 2 of which the Order was made. That section is:

Regulation of letting and sub-letting, etc.—The Provincial Government may, by general or special order which shall extend to such areas as the Provincial Government may, by notification, direct, provide for regulating the letting and sub-letting of any accommodation or class of accommodation whether residential or non-residential, whether furnished or unfurnished and whether with or without board and in particular, (a) for controlling the rents for such accommodation either generally or when let to specified persons or classes of persons or in specified circumstances, (b) for preventing the eviction of tenants or sub-tenants from such accommodation in specified circumstances, (c) for requiring such accommodation to be let either generally, or to specified persons or classes of persons, or in specified circumstances, and (d) for collecting any information or statistics with a view to regulating any of the aforesaid matters."

[6] There is in my view no force in the contention that the words "regulating the letting and sub-letting of any accommodation" do not cover a provision which inhibits interference of the kind in question. "Regulating" in this context means subjecting to rules or restrictions; and clause 14 is clearly a clause which is designed to place restrictions on a landlord's powers of intermeddling with conveniences in such a manner that the tenant's enjoyment of the house let to him is materially affected thereby.

[7] The contention that as clauses (a) to (d) of S. 2, Central Provinces and Berar Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act, 1946 did not cover clause 14 of the Order, it was not permissible to invoke the aid of the more general words "regulating the letting and sub-letting of any accommodation ....." in S. 2. of the Act, cannot succeed. This contention was based on the rule of the Federal Court in 1943 F. C. R. 49[1] to the effect that as the Legislature had set out in plain and unambiguous language in para. (x) of S. 2 (2), Defence of India Act, the scope of the rules which might be made providing for apprehension and detention in custody, it was not permissible to pray in aid the more general words in S. 2 (1) of the Act, in order to justify a rule which so plainly went beyond the limits of para. (x).

[8] In 1945 F.C.R. 195,[2] however, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, who were of the view that that case had been wrongly decided, made the following observations:

"Their Lordships are unable to agree with the learned Chief Justice of the Federal Court on his statement of the relative positions of sub sections (1) and (2) of S. 2, Defence of India Act, and counsel for the respondents in the present appeal was unable to support that statement .... In the opinion of their Lordships, the function of sub-section (2) is merely an illustrative one; the rule-making power is conferred by sub-section (1), and 'the rules' which are referred to in the opening sentence of sub-section (2) are the rules which are authorised by, and made under, sub-section (1); the provisions of sub-section (2) are not restrictive of sub-section (1), as, indeed, is expressly stated by the words "without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) '.

[9] I am aware that S. 2, Central Provinces and Berar Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act, 1946, does not contain the words "without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred .....", but it is manifest that the rule-making power is conferred by the opening part of the section and that the function of clauses (a) to (d) is merely illustrative. This is borne out by the fact that they are preceded by the words "in particular" which connote that the preceding contents of the section relate to the generality of the powers conferred on the Provincial Government.

[10] The applicant's conviction under clause 14 of the Order read with S. 8, Central Provinces and Berar Regulation of Letting of Accommodation Act, 1946, was, therefore, in order and it is maintained. It seems to me, however, that the punishment awarded was inappropriate and unduly harsh. The tenants were duly evicted from the house in 1947 for failure to pay the rent of the house for several months and it is clear that they were extremely unsatisfactory tenants. This does not condone the applicant's high-handed action, but it is undoubtedly a circumstance in his favour in awarding punishment. There was also the fact that the rent from the house constituted his only source of income, as he is physically disabled. The sentence of 4 months' rigorous imprisonment is, therefore, set aside and replaced by a fine of Rs. 100. In default of payment of that fine he shall undergo 1 month's rigorous imprisonment.

[11] Subject to this modification, the application is dismissed.

Emperor v. Amir Khan s/o Abdulla and another — Non-applicants.

Criminal Revn. No. 107 of 1947, Decided on 9-10-1947, from order of 2nd Addl. Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 22-1-1947.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 488 (3)—Husband against whom order under S. 488 is passed declared insolvent—Arrears of maintenance can be recovered by proceedings under S. 488 (3).

Insolvency of a person in itself is no bar to a proceeding under S. 488 (3). Where after an order of maintenance against the husband is passed, the husband is declared insolvent, insolvency does not bar the proceedings under S. 488, for the recovery of the arrears of maintenance. The fact that the bulk of an insolvent's property vests in the Receiver and that this might, in given cases, afford "sufficient cause" for non-payment of the maintenance is of course relevant, but, there may be cases in which a part of the insolvent's property does not vest in the Receiver : 25 A. I. R. 1938 All 253, Relied on. [Para 4 & 5]

Quære: Whether wife has two remedies, one by regarding arrears due as "debt" provable in insolvency and the other under S. 488 (3). [Para 6]

Case referred:—

1. ('38) I. L. R. (1938) All. 486 :25 A. I. R. 1938 All 253 : 175 I. C. 235:39 Cr. L. J. 553, Shyama Charan v. Anguri Devi.

Order.—The question here is whether S. 488, Criminal P. C., applies to a person who is adjudced insolvent after an order of maintenance has been made against him.

[2] The order for maintenance was passed in favour of the non-applicant's wife on 7th August 1944. The non-applicant applied to be adjudicated an insolvent on 30th January 1945 and was adjudicated on 27th July 1945. On 29th January 1945 the non-applicant divorced his wife. The question relates to the arrears which accrued meanwhile.

[3] The learned Magistrate holds that the wife's only remedy is under the Insolvency Act where she must prove her debt. He considers that S. 488, Criminal P. C., no longer applies because of Ss. 28 and 34, Provincial Insolvency Act.

[4] There is some difference of opinion on this point, but I agree with Allsop J. in I. L. R. (1938) ALL. 486[1] that insolvency in itself is not a bar. As he points out, the order passed by a Magistrate under S. 488 (3), Criminal P. C., against a person, who fails to pay without sufficient cause, is a sentence of imprisonment. No part of the Provincial Insolvency Act confers immunity from arrest or detention against sentences of imprisonment passed by a Criminal Court.

[5] The fact that the bulk of an insolvent's property vests in the receiver and that this right in given cases afford "sufficient cause" for non-payment of the maintenance is of course relevant, but as Allsop J. points out, there may be cases in which a part of the insolvent's property does not vest in the receiver. In such cases, provided the portion left to the insolvent is sufficient to enable him to comply with the order under S. 488, the fact of adjudication would afford no protection. I set aside the learned Magistrate's order and direct him to proceed under S. 488 (3).

[6] I may add that the non-applicant's wife regarded the arrears due to her as a "debt" provable in the insolvency and applied to the Insolvency Court to prove it. She succeeded and has been put on the list of scheduled creditors. But that is neither here nor there. I am not concerned here with whether she has two remedies, or whether the Insolvency Court was right or wrong. All I hold is that insolvency in itself is not a bar to proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 366-A—Illicit intercourse —Intention.

Where at the time the girl was removed, there was no intention on the part of the accused that she should be used for sexual intercourse, the accused is not guilty of an offence under S. 366-A. The intention of getting her married is not sufficient. [Para 7]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 375—"Without her consent" —Evidence.

Where, in a case of alleged rape of girl of over 14 years of age, the evidence showed that the girl left her home without compulsion, that she journeyed with the accused from place to place, that though literate, she did not write or communicate with her people, that she never complained of any ill treatment by the accused to any of the people she met and there was only her own evidence that the alleged sexual intercourse was without her consent:

Held that the circumstances indicated that if there was any sexual intercourse it was with her consent and the offence of rape was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. [Para 8]

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 366—"Against her will."

The accused were charged under S. 366. The allegation was that they abducted a girl with idea of getting her married for the profit of the accused. There was no intenion or knowledge on the part of the accused of illicit intercourse with the girl at the time of her removal.

Held that the offence under S. 366 was not made out. [Para 9]

(d) Penal Code (1860), S. 363—Ingredients.

In order to make out a case under S. 363 the prosecution must establish the following ingredients: (1) That the age of the girl is less than 16 years; (2) That the girl was taken or enticed away; (3) That she was in the keeping of her lawful guardian; and (4) That the guardian did not consent to her removal. [Para 9]

(e) Evidence Act (1872), S. 45 —Medical opinion as to age.

(f) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Register of births in Police station — Entries in — Admissibility— Evidentiary value.

Under S. 35, it is not necessary that the duty should be prescribed by any enactment —it is enough if it is prescribed by rules made under authority of an enactment. [Para 22]

Such a copy is valuable evidence of age. It cannot be trusted for the exact date of birth, but it is accurate to within a few days. [Para 26]

(g) Evidence Act (1872), S. 79—Section has no application to original documents. [Para 22]

Hakimuddin and Bashir Ahmad — for Appellants.
P. N. Chaudhri, Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment. — Appellant 1, Bishnath Prasad, Brahmabhat by caste, was the headmaster of a boys school in model village Hussainnagar close to the town of Unao. He was also librarian of the village library and was placed in charge of the village radio set supplied by the Rural Development Department. The task of issuing permits for sugar and kerosene oil was also assigned to him. Appellant 2, Mt. Rani Devi, is his wife and was mistress in the girls' school of Hussainnagar. Shankar Sahai, alias Lalloo, is the son of the two appellants and he was in charge of the control shop in the village. Thus the family occupied a very prominent position and it may be said that, next to Pandit Jagdish Prasad Dwivedi, the zamindar of the village who was Chairman of the District Rural Development Association and Vice-Chairman of the Education Committee of the District Board, it was the most influential in the locality.

[2] The family used to live in the pucca part of the house of one Audh Behari Brahman, a distant relative of Pandit Jagdish Prasad, who, with his nieces and nephews, the sons and daughters of his deceased brother, Kunj Behari, lived in the kachcha portion of the same house. The eldest of the children is Mt. Surjan Dei, who, according to the prosecution case, was aged about 13 or 14 years in 1944 and, according to the defence, was then aged about 19 or 20 years. Kunj Behari died about 10 or 11 years ago and the mother of the children is alleged to have died about four years before the incident at her father's house at Rahimabad, district Lucknow, though the defence alleges that she is still alive. Thus for some time before the incident the children lived without the care either of a mother or a father with their paternal or maternal uncles in the house. It is natural that in the circumstances many of the duties of the lady of the house devolved upon the eldest girl, Surjan Dei, and that there were greater opportunities of her being misguided by interested persons since the two men were engaged upon the business of carrying a livelihood and were often absent from the house for the whole day.

[3] The prosecution alleges that on the night of Janam Ashtmi, i. e. the night between 11th and 12th August 1944, Audh Behari and his family had gone to sleep after the celebrations were over. When Audh Behari woke in the morning Surjan Dei had disappeared. He made enquiries from appellant 2 and searched for the girl but she could not be traced. He thereupon informed the chaukidar and various relatives, including Pandit Jagdish Prasad, but did not make a regular report to the police because of the calumny and dishonour that would attach to the family. It is also alleged that Pandit Jagdish Prasad asked a distant relation of his, Prakash alias Bhajju, P. W. 7, to keep a look out for the girl who was said to have disappeared with the appellant Bishnath, though it is not stated how Bishnath came to be suspected.

[4] Prakash states that he visited various places in search of the girl but did not find her. He, however, met her accidentally in the company of appellant 1 on 1st March, 1945 at about 6-30 p. m. buying bangles at a shop in Dwarkapuri Bazar at Cawnpore. He proceeds that Bishnath Prasad also saw him and hastened off with the girl to the house of a vakil in muhalla Gandhinagar. Prakash followed and recovered the girl with the aid of a doctor and one Pandit Madho Prasad, P. W. 2. Thereafter the accused and the girl were taken to Jarib Ki Chauki and thence to Thana Sisamau where the first information report, Ex. 1, was lodged under S. 363, Penal Code, by Prakash, claiming to be the uncle of the girl and the statement of the girl herself was recorded in the general diary. Exhibit 2 is a copy of an extract containing this statement. P. W. 14, Mst. Surjan Dei, tells us that the report was recorded after she had had an hour's talk with Prakash but Prakash denies this. In any case the report was made at about 10. P. M. which gave sufficient time for such a consultation. The report simply mentioned that Bishnath had enticed the girl away and that all searches made by the uncle of the girl and by himself had proved fruitless. He then describes how he had found the girl in the manner stated above.

[5] Bishnath was arrested and sent to jail. The girl was sent to an orphanage and the case was sent to the Kotwali, Unao, within whose jurisdiction the offence had been committed. The accused was released on bail at Unao and, on 16-3-1945, the girl was entrusted to her uncle who brought her home. So far no report had been made against Mt. Rani Devi and no case had been started against her but during the course of the police investigation she was also implicated and she was arrested on 27-5-1945, and eventually the prosecution was launched against both the husband and the wife.

[6] The following two charges were framed against the accused:

"Firstly, that you on or about the night between 11th and 12th day of August, 1944 at about 2 A. M. abducted Mt. Surjan Dei from village Hussainnagar with intent that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 366/366-A, I. P. C.

"Secondly, that you, Bishnath accused, committed rape on or about 12-8-1944 upon Mt. Surjan Dei and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 376, I. P. C. and I direct that you be tried on the said charge."

The accused pleaded not guilty. Mt. Rani Devi denied all knowledge of, or participation in, the alleged abduction. Bishnath filed a lengthy written statement Ex. 32, in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and he confirmed it in the Sessions Judge's Court. The whole of the written statement is directed against Pandit Jagdish Prasad and his supposed tyrannical attitude to the accused and his family. He is alleged to be the author of the prosecution and Audh Behari, his relation, is only his tool. The written statement then proceeds to make allegations against the chastity of Surjan Dei and names her various supposed paramours, including Prakash (P. W. 7). It then says that the accused decided to leave for pilgrimage and to secure his transfer because of the oppression of Pandit Jagdish Prasad. He accordingly got leave and proceeded to Cawnpore where, on the day on which he was to set out for pilgrimage to Rameshwaram, Audh Behari turned up at his daughter's house at Cawnpore and brought Mt. Surjan Dei with him. Audh Behari stated that she had been caught with Lalloo, the accused's son, on the Janam Ashtmi night and so he could no longer keep her since the whole village had come to know of it and Lalloo had run away. He, therefore, brought the girl to entrust her to Lalloo or leave her with Bishnath to get her married somewhere. On the accused's objection that he was going on a pilgrimage Audh Behari replied that he could take her with him. All the protests of the accused were silenced by threats and so the accused kept Surjan Dei and took her with him to Allahabad, Benares and other places to find a husband for her. He failed and finally brought her back to Cawnpore. Audh Behari was all along kept informed of his movements but was not prepared to spend any money on the marriage of his niece. The result was that the girl was left on his hands. He again wrote to Audh Behari from Cawnpore. Audh Behari and Prakash came to his house at Cawnpore. The former asked him to keep the girl a little longer since he was settling her marriage. He agreed. Thereafter Prakash revived his liaison with the girl and so he moved away from the house to another one. Prakash got infuriated at this and, in revenge, got the accused arrested on a false charge when he saw him.

[7] It may be stated at the outset that the charge under S. 366-A, I. P. C., is not made out against either of the accused. Section 366-A can only be applicable if the taking away of the girl was "with intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse."

While under S. 366 the removal of a minor even with the intention of giving her in marriage without her consent is illegal if she is under 16 years of age, this is not so if she is above that age. In the present case all the evidence shows that it was with the idea of getting her married, perhaps for a consideration, that the girl was removed. As to illicit intercourse by the accused himself, the learned Additional Sessions Judge, although he has held the charge of rape proved, has further held that, at the time the girl was removed, there was no intention on the part of either accused that appellant 1 should have sexual intercourse with her. I see no reason to differ from this finding, particularly when it is remembered that appellant 2 is the wife of appellant 1. The conviction of the accused under S. 366-A can, therefore, not stand.

[8] Similarly the charge under S. 376 against appellant 1 for the alleged rape cannot stand. The sole evidence in support of this is the medical evidence, Exs. 16 and 30, which shows that, when examined by the doctor, it appeared that the girl was used to sexual intercourse, and the evidence of the girl herself as P. W. 14 which shows that the accused had sexual intercourse with her. The defence pleaded that the evidence of the girl on this point should not be accepted because she did not mention this either in Ex. 2 or in Ex. Z-17, her previous statement before the police, and it was only after a great deal of time had elapsed that she mentioned it for the first time in Ex. Z-18. It is not necessary for me to decide whether her evidence of the sexual intercourse is true or not because the circumstances indicate that, if there was any sexual intercourse, it was with her consent. The girl left her home without compulsion; she journeyed with Bishnath from place to place : she is literate and can write letters but she did not write to or communicate with her people : she never complained to any of the people she met of any ill-treatment by the accused. There is only her own evidence that the sexual intercourse if it really did take place, was without her consent. She is over 14 years of age and consequently the offence of rape is not proved beyond reasonable doubt.

[9] There remains then a consideration of the question whether any offence under S. 366, Penal Code, has been made out : and, if it has not, whether any other offence for which the appellants can be convicted in this case, is proved. The first thing to be noticed in this connection is that the charge was of abduction with a view to illicit intercourse. I have already shown, in dealing with the charge under S. 366-A, there was no intention or knowledge of illicit intercourse. It was always alleged that the girl was abducted with a view to get her married for the profit of both the accused. With regard to marriage too the evidence of P. W. 14, Surjan Dei herself discloses that she was induced to leave the house of her uncle tempted by the offer of a wealthy bridegroom and a happy marriage. She further deposes that wherever her marriage was talked of, her own consent was asked for. Perhaps this is the reason why the Additional Sessions Judge did not include the words

"With intent that she may be compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled, to marry any person against her will."

The case under S. 366, I. P. C., is also not made out. This does not, however, mean that the appellants are not guilty of any offence at all. I consider that the evidence in this case clearly establishes a case under S. 363, I. P. C., the section under which the original report was made. In order to make out a case under S. 363, the prosecution must establish the following ingredients: (1) that the age of the girl is less than 16 years; (2) that the girl was taken or enticed away; (3) that she was in the keeping of her lawful guardian; and (4) that the guardian did not consent to her removal. In the present case each one of these ingredients is disputed.

[10] The prosecution alleged that the girl was about 13 or 14 years of age while the defence case was that she was about 19 or 20 years. In support of its case the prosecution relied upon the evidence of P. W. 15, Audh Behari, the uncle of the girl. Exhibit 16, the report of the Civil Surgeon, Ex. 30, the Civil Surgeon's evidence, Ex. 23 the copy of the school register of the girls' school at Hussainnagar and Ex. 24, an extract from the copy of the birth and death register.

[11] The statement of Audh Behari as to age is very vague and cannot be accepted. Exhibit 23, copy of the school register would give the age as about 14½ years at the time of the occurrence since it shows 2nd January 1930, as the date of birth. The document is not of much assistance because it is notorious that the ages given at school are not accurate. The medical evidence shows that the age of the girl at the time of the medical examination, on 9-4-1945, was about 15 years, that is to say, in August 1944, it would be about 14¼ years. The doctor, in his statement, Ex. 30, abides by his estimate but adds that such estimates may be out by six months or even a year. Thus the girl in question could, allowing for a margin of one year, be about 15¼ years on 11-8-1944. The doctor has stated in cross-examination that the estimate is a little more accurate if X-Ray examination takes place. He has also given the data upon which such estimates are based although he has not noted them down in this particular case in Ex. 16. It is objected that he had the school leaving certificate of the girl, Ex. 23, before him when he made the report and he merely took the estimate there given. In support of this it is pointed out that the copy of the certificate filed in this case was obtained on 9-4-1945 and that that is the day on which the police reported that the girl's age should be ascertained (vide Ex. Z-2 and Ex. 15). There is, however, no evidence that, as a matter of fact, Ex. 23 was shown to the doctor. There is no mention of it being forwarded to him either in Ex. Z-2 or in Ex. 15 nor was the doctor asked in cross-examination whether he had Ex. 23 before him. Moreover, even if it was shown to him it would only mean that the doctor had some estimate but it would not mean that his judgment as an expert was controlled by this certificate. The evidence is valuable but by itself it is not sufficient to fix the exact age.

[12] I come then to Ex. 24, the copy of an extract from the birth register. This document was vehemently attacked as inadmissible for two reasons: (1) That it is not shown to have been prepared by a chaukidar or some public servant in the discharge of his official duty; (2) That it is not shown that it refers to Surjan Dei and not to some one else.

[13] In support of the first point reliance was placed upon 54 I. C. 166:22 O. C. 250.[1] This decision itself shows that a considerable amount of conflict existed as to the admissibility of such documents. I have, therefore, considered all the cases mentioned in it as well as some others which I have been able to find and I have come to the conclusion that the document is admissible and affords valuable evidence of birth. In considering this document it must be borne in mind that it is not a copy of a chaukidar's register but of a register maintained at the thana subsequently deposited in the record room of the District Magistrate, Unao (vide P. W. 11 Sarfaraz Khan, the reader of the Unao Collectorate who brought the register).

[14] The first case on this point is 14 O. C. 68[2], which related to a chaukidar's register. In that case it was admitted that the entry was not made by a chaukidar and Chamier J. C. (later Sir Edward) held that it was not admissible in evidence because "there is no evidence that it was made by any other public servant or that it was the duty of any other public servant to make it."

[15] The matter again came up for consideration in 15 O. C. 351,[3] which also related to a chaukidar's register. In this case Lindsay J. C. (later Sir Benjamin) referred to the decision in 14 O. C. 68.[2] He then held that in the case before him also the entry was made by some person other than the chaukidar. He then proceeded :

"it was held that the entry was not admissible under S. 35, Evidence Act, because there was nothing to show that the making of such entries was an act required of a chaukidar in the discharge of his official duty and that there was no other section except S. 35 which would justify the reception in evidence of such an entry. I have no reason for supposing as at present advised that the ruling in 14 O. C. 68[2] is erroneous in law: at the same time it is not necessary for me to consider the question because even assuming that the entry was admissible it proves nothing."

[16] In 19 I. C. 528,[4] which involved the question of the admissibility of a municipal register of births and deaths the learned Judges followed 14 O. C. 68[2] and held that it was not shown that the entries were made by a public servant in discharge of his official duties. This case was followed without any discussion in A. I. R. 1922 ALL. 510.[5]

[17] These four cases were based on an absence of proof that any duty of making entries were any part of the official duties either of the chaukidar or some other official. As a matter of fact this duty is imposed upon the chaukidar and the head constable writer of the thana under the rules framed by the Inspector-General of Police under S. 12, Police Act. This position is made quite clear in subsequent decisions both of the Judicial Commissioner's Court and of the Allahabad High Court. Those decisions can, therefore, no longer be considered authoritative and in any case they did not relate to a register of the kind now under consideration.

[18] 14 O. C. 68[2] was again considered by a learned single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in 24 I. C. 540[6] in which also a question of the admissibility of a chaukidar's register arose, and the learned Judge said:-

"I should hesitate to dissent from the authority of Chamier J. on this point; but I am content to say that I feel some doubt as to the correctness of his view."

He then proceeded to distinguish 14 O. C. 68[2].

[19] The point was again considered by a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 19 O. C. 221.[7] The learned Judicial Commissioners felt that, for the purposes of the case before them it was not necessary for them to come to a definite finding as to whether such a register is or is not a public document. The judgment is, however, instructive and takes the matter much further. At page 227 the Judicial Commissioners say:.

"Section 10, para 367 of the Police Manual, U. P. and Oudh (1900) sets out rules for the registration of deaths among the population. In that paragraph it is distinctly laid down that the head-constable writer will keep up a register of deaths in the prescribed form, that when the village policeman comes to make his report, the head-constable writer will ask him whether any death had occurred since the date of the last report, that the writer need not require the exact day on which the man, woman or child reported as dead died. The date on which the village policeman's report is made will be assumed to be the date of death, this course of "procedure, being for all practical purposes of registration, quite sufficient". The paragraph then provides that the writer shall also enter in the village policeman's pocket register of births and deaths any reports of such that he may make. From this it is clear that the primary register which has to be kept up, is a register of deaths at the police station . . . . . ."

Paragraph 368 is a similar paragraph relating to births.

[20] Thus there is a great deal of difference between the chaukidar's register and the thana register —the latter being the primary register. This case establishes that a register such as the present one was maintained by the head constable writer of the thana in performance of his official duties.

[21] The case in 14 O. C. 68[2] was referred to in 22 O. C. 124[8] in which Daniels J. C. held:

"Whatever the state of the law as to chaukidar's registers may have been in 1910, it is perfectly clear that the register of which a copy is before me is an official register made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and as such in admissible under S. 35."

This case clearly makes Ex. 24 admissible.

[22] The whole law was reviewed in 22 O. C. 250[1] in which Ashworth, A. J. C., referred to all the previous decisions of his Court, to paras. 367 and 368 of the Police Manual and to S. 50 of U. P. Act 20 [XX] of 1856 and then held:

"It, therefore, follows that chaukidars were lawfully assigned the duty of verbally reporting births and deaths and the station writers were lawfully required to make the entry to the chaukidar's dictation. If then the entry can be proved to have been made by the station writer, the entry is relevant under S. 35, Evidence Act."

The learned additional Judicial Commissioner then proceeds to hold that the entry was inadmissible inasmuch as it was not duly certified under S. 79, Evidence Act, and was not directed by any law to be kept in order to justify the application of S. 81. With due deference to the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, S. 79 has no application to original documents and his own judgment shows that the Registers were maintained under a law, i. e., the Rules made by the Inspector-General of Police with the approval of the Provincial Government under S. 12, Police Act 5 [V] of 1861. It is not necessary that the duty should be prescribed by any enactment —it is enough if it is prescribed by rules made under authority of an enactment. In 1946 A. W. R. P. C. 135[9] at p. 139 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee admitted in evidence, and placed great reliance upon, a pedigree contained in an estate note book of the Court of Wards because the Court of Wards Manual provides for the maintenance of such a book. Their Lordships say:

"This document is, therefore, an official document prepared by a public authority in pursuance of a statutory duty."

Another criticism was repelled by their Lordships in the following words:

"The criticism directed against this document is that it does not show the sources on which the Court of Wards based its findings, and that 'the assumption of charge file' on which the pedigree purports to be founded was not produced. But this is not criticism of weight against a public document. The Court must assume that the Court of Wards did its duty to the best of its ability, and based the pedigree on material of accuracy of which it was satisfied. No cross-examination of the two witnesses from the Court of wards who were called was directed to ascertain the sources on which the pedigree was founded. In their Lordships view, this is much the most important document on either side and, in the absence of any reason for supposing the document to be incorrect, their Lordships think that it must be accepted as accurate."

Exactly the same reasoning will apply to a register maintained at the thana under rules framed under S. 12, Police Act.

[23] In A. I. R. 1925 ALL. 79[10] all the cases mentioned above were noticed by Sulaiman and Kanhaiya Lal. JJ., at page 81 of their judgment and their Lordships say:

"Under the police Act (No. [V] of 1861), S. 12, the Inspector-General of Police is authorised to frame orders and rules relative to, amongst others, the collecting and communication by them of intelligence and information etc. Under the Police Regulations, Chapter 24, para. 274, sub-clause 4, the Head Muharrir of every police station officer has to keep registers of births and deaths and make entries therein as reported by the village chaukidars. There are prescribed forms, Nos. 1 and 5, which have to be used for that matter. The register in question contains printed pages of the form No. 5 and it was manifestly kept at the police station and later on forwarded to head-quarters. The mere fact that the entries in it are made in chronological order would not show that this document is not an official book. We are clearly of opinion that this register was an official book, register or record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty within the meaning of S. 35, Evidence Act. An entry made therein would, therefore, be itself a relevant fact."

[24] In 1934 O. W. N. 416[11] a Bench of this Court held that an entry in a municipal register of births and deaths was admissible under S. 35. Such registers are also maintained under rules made under S. 298, U. P. Municipalities Act.

[25] The same view has been taken by other High Courts with regard to similar registers-vide 46 Cal. 152,[12] 41 Mad. 26,[13] A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 985,[14] A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 601,[15] A. I. R. 1935 Pat. 474,[16] and A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 264.[17]

[26] On a consideration of all these authorities there can be no doubt that under S. 35, Evidence Act, Ex. 24 is admissible in evidence as being a certified copy of a public document. Further it is valuable evidence of age. It cannot be trusted for the exact date of birth because the chaukidar does not visit the thana every day and the entry is only made when he visits the thana in the regular course of his duties; but it is accurate to within a few days. In judging of this I cannot lose sight of the fact that, at the time that the entry was made, i. e. in 1928, no one could have been interested in getting a wrong entry recorded. This evidence, therefore, clearly establishes that the girl to whom it relates was less than 16 years of age on 11th and 12th August 1944. [His Lordship considered the rest of the evidence and held that there could be no doubt that the accused had committed the offence of kidnapping punishable under S. 363, Penal Code and proceeded]: I have already said that the conviction of either of the accused under Ss. 366/366A and 376, Penal Code, cannot be sustained. I, therefore, partly allow the appeal and set aside those convictions and convict both the accused under S. 363, Penal Code.

[27] The Additional Sessions Judge sentenced the accused Bishunath Prasad to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and Rani Devi to four years' rigorous imprisonment. These sentences cannot stand. In determining the sentence under S. 363, Penal Code, I have to consider the conduct of the accused. There can be no doubt that they are both educated persons placed in authority and having great confidence reposed in them. They have abused their trust. Further they have thought fit to make attacks upon all and every person concerned in the case without any regard to facts. This was done no doubt on the advice of their advisers but they cannot be wholly exempted from all blame in the matter. At the same time the girl, Surjan Dei, was herself a willing party and she was nearly 16 years of age. Further she was no longer under the care of either of the accused. Moreover both the accused have been heavily punished by losing their service and they are both past middle age. I think that a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment on Bishunath Prasad and two years' simple imprisonment on Mt. Rani Devi will meet the ends of justice and I accordingly reduce their sentences from seven years' rigorous imprisonment and four years' rigorous imprisonment to three years' rigorous imprisonment and two years' simple imprisonment respectively.

Second Appeal No. 155 of 1941, Decided on 3-3-1947, from order of Civil Judge, Sultanpur, D/-25-1-1941.

(a) Oudh Laws Act (18 [XVIII] of 1876), S. 9 — Pre-emption — Lessee of under-proprietary rights cannot subsequently claim to be transferee by sale, when limitation for pre-emption has expired.

Where a deed calling itself a lease has been executed and there is no fraud, it is not open to the lessee subsequently to go behind this lease deed, when the question of pre-emption of another land arises, and lead evidence to show that the deed was in fact a sale and claim to be a co-sharer by reason of it and thus entitled to pre-empt: 29 A. I. R. 1942 Oudh 55, Foll.; 30 A. I. R. 1943 Oudh 125 and 31 A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 263, Rel. on.

Where by reason of the fact that a transfer was put in the form of a lease the co-sharers were deprived of their right of pre-emption with respect to it it would be assisting in the perpetration of a fraud on their right, however weak it might be considered to be, if the person claiming under it is permitted to assert greater rights when the period of limitation for filing a suit for pre-emption has expired. [Para 8]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144—Mutation does not confer title—Lessee lawfully in possession for more than 12 years—Mutation of lessee as under-proprietor—Lessee, if under-proprietor by adverse possession.

Mutation of names cannot confer a title which did not previously exist. Where the lessees of under proprietary rights were wrongly recorded as under-proprietors, which mistake could not be explained, it cannot confer a title on the lessees, and make them under-proprietors and co-sharers. [Para 9]

The fact that lessees were in possession for more than 12 years, which they were entitled to by reason of the deed of lease, their possession which was lawful cannot be said to be adverse to anybody. The fact that they were wrongly entered as under-proprietors, when in fact the mutation order treated the transferees as lessees could not make them under-proprietors by adverse possession. [Para 9]

Annotation : ('42-Com.) Limitation Act, Arts. 142 & 144, Note 59.

(c) T. P. Act (1882), S. 105 — Lease or sale — Transfer of under-proprietary rights — Transferor's liability to rent not affected—Transfer is sale.

The distinction between lease and sale is a very nice one but it is nevertheless a real distinction. The question really is whether the transfer operates to substitute the transferees for the transferor for all purposes and terminates all the rights and liabilities in the property which is being dealt with. [Para 10]

In the case of rent-free tenure no present liability to payment of rent exists. But this does not mean that no such liability can come into existence in the future. Thus rent may be assessed either under S. 79, U. P. Land Revenue Act, or under the resumption Chapter of the U. P. Tenancy Act. Where there is nothing in the deed by which the transferor of under-proprietary rights divested himself of this liability, under the law his liability would continue and consequently in case of such transfer it cannot be said that the transfer terminated all his rights and liabilities in respect of the property dealt with by it, especially when an yearly payment was reserved to the transferor. In such a case transfer is a lease. [Para 10]

In such a case the transferor remains an under-proprietor by reserving an interest in land. By such a transaction he cannot create another under-proprietary right in the same land, he cannot also confer any such thing as "sub-under-proprietary rights." By such a deed the transferees cannot become under-proprietors by whatever name the deed is called : 21 A. I. R. 1934 Oudh 145, Ref. [Para 11]

R. B. Lal and M. M. Lal—for Appellants.
K. P. Misra—for Respondents 1 and 2.

Judgment. — Plaintiff respondent 1 and the predecessor of respondents 2/1 and 2/2 instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif, North Sultanpur, for pre-emption of a share in mahal Manpur Dahla in village Sukhanpur Ashraf Patti, District Sultanpur. They claimed to be members of the village community inasmuch as they were co-sharers in a different mahal-Manpur Dhaurahra in the same village and they alleged that vendees—respondent No. 4 and the predecessors of the appellants—were strangers. The sale deed had been executed on 18-4-1939, for a consideration of Rs. 400/- and at one stage the amount of the consideration was challenged but there is no longer any dispute with regard to it.

[2] The vendees, who were defendants 1 and 2, claimed that they were not strangers but co-sharers in the mahal in which the property sold was situated. They, therefore, claimed a preferential right.

[3] The trial Court found that the plaintiffs were co-sharers in mahal Manpur Dhaurahra and, as such, members of the village community. It also found that, although the vendees are recorded in the khewat as under-proprietors in mahal Manpur Dahla, they are in fact not under-proprietors but only the holders of permanent lessee rights. It accordingly held that the plaintiffs had a preferential right to pre-empt and decreed the suit.

[4] The vendees appealed and the civil Judge of Sultanpur upheld the findings of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal. Both the Courts rejected the oral evidence led by the vendees to show that Buddhu who had executed the transfer, EX. A-13, in their favour, had agreed to sell his under-proprietary rights outright and the deed had assumed its present form on the advice of a petition writer with a view to avoid pre-emption. The lower appellate Court has also held that the real value of the property conveyed by EX. A-13 would be about RS. 800/- and the fact that the consideration of EX. A-13 is only RS. 200/- is an indication that sale was not intended.

[5] One of the vendees, Nakched has come up in appeal to this Court. He has impleaded the other vendee as respondent 4 and has made a note in the grounds of appeal that, under O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C., the appeal is for the benefit of respondent 4 also. During the pendency of the appeal Nakched died and is now represented by his heirs.

[6] In appeal the right of the plaintiffs as members of the village community is not disputed nor is it disputed that, in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in 11 O. W. N. 843[1] the holder of a permanent lease is not a member of the village community entitled to pre-empt. It is, however, contended that the Courts below have erred in their construction of EX. A-13, the deed under which the vendees hold their previously existing rights. Their learned advocate contends that it is not the name which is given to a document but its substance that must be considered in determining the rights of a party claiming under it. He further argues that both sales and leases are transfers, in the former case ownership and in the latter the right of enjoyment alone being transferred. He contends that a consideration of EX. A-13 leads to the conclusion that Buddhu divested himself of all vestige of ownership which thereafter vested in Nakched and Gayadin and the mere fact that an yearly payment reserved to the vendor is called rent does not mean that it is in fact rent and may well be a part of the price. In support of this plea, apart from the terms of EX. A-13 itself, he relies upon the proceedings for mutation of names on the basis of EX. A-13, as contemporanea expositao indicating what the parties understood at that very time to have been the effect of EX. A-13.

[7] The learned counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, urges that the deed EX. A-13, is not the deed of transfer involved in the suit but it is the deed which forms the basis of the vendee's alleged previous co-sharership. No question of construction, therefore, arises since such a deed must be accepted at its face value.

[8] The learned counsel for the appellant has placed before me a large number of decisions in which it has been held by this Court that it is the substance of the transaction and not its form that is to be considered in deciding the question. All these decisions, however, except one dealt with the construction of the deed which formed the basis of the transaction then in suit. On the other hand, the specific point involved was decided by a learned single Judge of this Court in 1941 O. W. N. 1122.[2] In that case a deed calling itself a lease was executed in favour of the person who claimed to pre-empt alleging that the lease in his favour was really a sale deed and that he had accordingly become a co-sharer. Madeley J., said:

"In my opinion it was not open to the respondent to go behind this lease deed and lead evidence to show that it was a sale. As I have said, no fraud was pleaded and I do not think that the plaintiff could plead fraud in order to take advantage as a pre-emptor."

This view was cited by another single Judge in 1942 O. W. N. 504[3] and later was the subject of an appeal under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act. In 1944 O. W. N. 155[4] a Bench of this Court on appeal upheld the view of Madelay J., and held that the pre-emptor was precluded from contending that he was a co-sharer. In the present case it is the vendee who seeks to show that his previous title deed confers upon him rights different from those which it ostensibly purports to do. The position is exactly the same as in the case of the pre-emptor asserting sale and I, sitting as a single Judge, am bound by the decision in the previous cases. Further, I say so with respect, the decisions to which I have referred are based upon sound reasoning. By reason of the fact that a transfer was put in the form of a lease the co-sharers were deprived of their right of pre-emption with respect to it and it would be assisting in the perpetration of a fraud on their right, however weak it might be considered to be, if the person claiming under it is permitted to assert greater rights when the period of limitation for filing a suit for pre-emption has expired.

[9] There is, however, one point of distinction which must be noted and that is that, while in 1944 O. W. N. 155[4] the name of the original under-proprietor continued to be recorded in the papers, in the present case his name has been removed and that of the transferee has been substituted in the revenue records. It is not disputed that, mutation of names cannot confer a title which did not previously exist, but it is contended that 12 years have now elapsed since mutation was effected and Nakched and his brother have perfected their title by adverse possession. Apart from the fact that no plea of adverse possession was taken in the Courts below, I cannot find any support for it from the evidence on the record. Undoubtedly Nakched was entitled to be in possession under Ex. A-13 and to have his name entered in the khewat. His possession cannot be considered to be adverse to anybody; it can be, and should be, referred to the lawful title which he possessed under Ex. A-13. Further Ex. A-15, a copy of the order for mutation, shows that Nakched and Gayadin were treated as lessees but some how or other it is not explained how the entry in the khewat is of under-proprietary right. Thus it cannot be said that Nakched and his brother became under-proprietors by adverse possession after the transfer in their favour.

[10] Even, however, if it is open to consider the real nature of Ex. A-13, I must hold it to be a lease and not a sale. The distinction between the two is a very nice one but it is nevertheless a real distinction. The question really is whether the transfer operates to substitute the transferees for the transferor for all purposes and terminates all the rights and liabilities in the property which is being dealt with. A consideration of Ex. A-13 shows that this has not been done. If the transfer had been made by a superior proprietor undoubtedly the right created would have been under-proprietary right, which means that the mere reservation of an annual money payment would operate as the reservation of an interest in property. It is contended that it is so because the liability of the proprietor to pay the Government revenue remains and he has thus not divested himself of all his liabilities which are as much a part of the ownership of property as rights. In the present case the tenure is rent-free and so no present liability to the payment of rent exists. This does not mean that no such liability can come into existence in the future. Thus rent may be assessed either under S. 79, U. P. Land Revenue Act, or under the resumption Chapter of the U. P. Tenancy Act. There is nothing in Ex. A-13 by which Budhu divested himself of this liability. Under the law his liability would continue and consequently it cannot be said that Ex. A-13 terminated all his rights and liabilities in respect of the property dealt with by it.

[11] Further it is agreed (see 11 O. W. N. 430[5] at p. 434) that there cannot be two under-proprietary rights in the same land and that an under-proprietor cannot confer any such thing as "sub-under-proprietary" rights; he can only create another under-proprietor by parting with all his rights. Thus if any interest is reserved by Buddhu he has not parted with all his rights and he remains an under-proprietor the necessary corollary of this being that Nakched and his brother did not become under-proprietors. By the deed Ex. A-13 a right to receive Rs. 3/7/- per annum, by whatever name it is called, is reserved to the transferor. It is argued that this is in the nature of an annuity as a part of the price and cannot be rent within the meaning of that term in the Oudh Rent Act, or the U. P. Tenancy Act because it is not paid for the use and occupation of the land or of a right in the land. This is begging the whole question: Ex. A-13 cannot be construed leaving out of consideration the provision as to payment of Rs. 3/7/- and then holding that, since no interest is reserved, Rs. 3/7/- is not rent. The provision for the payment of Rs. 3/7/- is as much a part of the terms of Ex. A-13 as any other provision. This coupled with the fact that Ex. A-13 does not terminate the liability of Buddhu vis-a-vis the superior proprietor to pay rent if it is assessed clearly indicates that Buddhu reserved some interest, however small. Thus Ex. A-13 cannot be construed as a deed of sale. The result is that I uphold the decree of the lower appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—The suit, out of which this appeal airses, was instituted by Mian Tej Singh appellant for a declaration that he is the absolute owner of certain properties including four villages, Bamhnauti Shankarpur, Airiye Bamhrauri, Fateh pursa and Reotipurwa in District Bahraich. These villeges formed part of Chileri Estate, which was confiscated in 1858 by virtue of Lord Canning's proclamation. They were granted along with several other villages to Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh sometime between 1865-1867. These Sardars were grandsons of the late Maharaja Ranjit Singh of Lahore who had rendered conspicuous services to the Crown and whose family, it was desired by the Government of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, should be suitably provided for. A communication to that effect was despatched by the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India on 25-5-1865. Subsequently the aforenamed villages were transferred by Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh to plaintiff's grand-father Mian Uttam Singh in lieu of his past services by means of a registered deed of gift, dated 31-3-1867, and were in due course mutated in his favour.

[2] On the passing of the Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869) the names of Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh were entered in lists 1 and 5, prepared under S. 8 of the Act. Sadar Fateh Singh died in 1872. His widow, Mt. Lachhmin Kuer, succeeded to her husband's estate under S. 22 of the Act, and on her death the interests of the late Sardar passed to Sardar Jagjot Singh. The latter died in 1915 and was succeeded by his son, Sardar Amar Singh. The defendant, Sardar Daljit Singh, who was a minor at the time of the institution of this suit but who has since attained majority, is the present successor of the Taluqa, being the grandson of Sardar Amar Singh.

[3] Mian Uttam Singh died in 1889 and was succeeded by his son, Mian Indar Singh. The plaintiff, Mian Tej Singh is one of the two surviving sons of Mian Indar Singh. The villages in suit have by virtue of a family settlement, dated 23-6-1938, fallen to Tej Singh's share.

[4] There was some dispute regarding the gifted villages between Daljit Singh's mother, who acted as his guardian and Mian Tej Singh. This dispute gave rise to proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C. in November 1938. In course of these proceedings the property was attached. The case eventually came to this Court in revision, and the parties were directed to obtain a decision as to their rights from a competent Court of civil jurisdiction. Meanwhile the villages were kept under attachment. Hence the suit which gives rise to this appeal.

[5] The plaintiff alleged that Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh were absolute owners of the villages which were transferred to his grandfather, that the latter and after him his descendants have been in possession thereof, that under the family settlement, dated 23-6-1938, the villages have fallen into plaintiff's share and were mutated in his favour in the revenue records and that in November 1938, the defendant's guardian started proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C., which resulted in attachment of the villages in suit. He prayed for declaration of his title in accordance with the directions of this Court. The plaintiff also sought declaratory relief with respect to some other property, but we need not enter into that part of the case inasmuch as the decree granting the declaration in respect of it is not challenged by Sardar Daljit Singh.

[6] The suit was resisted on various grounds. So far as the villages are concerned, the genuineness and the validity of the gift deed were denied, and possession of plaintiff and his ancestor as well as plaintiff's relationship with Uttam Singh was questioned. On these points the decision of the learned Civil Judge was in plaintiff's favour. The principal defence, however, related to the nature of the estate granted to Sardars

Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh under the grant, and this is practically the only defence with which we are concerned in this appeal in view of the arguments addressed to us from the Bar. It was pleaded that the interest granted to the two Sardars was neither heritable nor transferable. The grant in fact, it was said, created a succession of life interests in favour of the grantees' family, and the transfer by Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh could not operate to vest in Mian Uttam Singh and his successors' rights which could enure beyond the donor's life-time. Issues 1 and 6 covered these pleas. They were as follows:

"Issue 1. Did Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh hold and possess the villages in suit as mere Guzaradars as alleged?

"Issue 6. Were Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh incompetent to transfer the villages in suit under the terms of their grant? If so, its effect on the gift set up by the plaintiff?"

The first issue and the substantive part of the sixth issue were decided by the learned Civil Judge of Bahraich in favour of Sardar Daljit Singh. The result was that the plaintiff's suit failed so far as it concerned the four villages. Mian Tej Singh has now come up in appeal.

[7] We have had the advantage of hearing elaborate arguments on behalf of the parties. Unfortunately the actual grant or the sanad is not before us. The plaintiff alleges that it is being withheld by the other side while the defendant maintains that no document of grant or sanad was ever given to Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh. We find, there are distinct indications on the record to show that a taluqdar's sanad existed and was in possession of the original grantees. The wajibularz of village, Moorawwa, the parent village of the Taluqa, while giving its history distinctly refers to it. It says:

"Under the order, dated 30-4-1867, this village was granted by the Government as revenue free jagir to Sardaran Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh, for their lifetime on this condition that after their death half of the Government revenue will by payable by other heirs in the first succeeding generation and full Government revenue by the heirs in the second succeeding generation. But up till now it stands entered in the Talukdari Sanad."

It will be remembered that the Taluqa of Chilari was confiscated to Government by virtue of Lord Canning's Proclamation of 1858. It is well known that no sanads were granted in Oudh by the Government of India prior to 10-10-1859, and it is impossible to assume, as the lower Court has assumed, that the reference in the above passage is to a sanad, granted to the previous Taluqdar. There is again a reference to a sanad in identical words in the last rubkar (rubkar akhiri) of the Settlement Department, dated 15-4-1872, (Ex. 26). That the sanad was in actual possession of Sardar Jagjot Singh appears from another rubkar of 1881 from the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda which required the grantee to attend his Court along with sanad for verification. This document was sent to the Tahsildar of Qaisarganj with the direction that the aforesaid Sardar be asked to present himself in the Gonda Court along with the sanad. Exhibits 101, dated 21-9-1881, 100, dated 22-9-1881 and A14, dated 23-9-1881, show that the order was complied with. It is difficult to explain these specific references to the Sardars' sanad on any other hypothesis but that sometime before 1872 a taluqdari sanad was in fact issued. The only person who is likely to have it now is the defendant and the plaintiff accordingly summoned it from him by means of an application, dated 17-7-1942. On notice being issued the general agent of Daljit Singh presented an application by way of reply on 18-8-1942, and stated therein that no Taluqdari sanad was ever granted and no such sanad was with the defendant. Certified copies of Taluqdari sanads are sometimes not available, since the existing Government records do not always contain their duplicates. The plaintiff is thus at a disadvantage, and he is forced to fall back upon other evidence to prove the nature of the grantees' interest.

[8] The history of the grant begins with the despatch from the Secretary of State to the Government of India in 1865 which directed that provision should be made for the members of the family of the late Maharaja. Reference to this despatch is contained in the extract of proceedings of Government of India, Foreign Department (Political), dated 10-7-1865, which was forwarded on 19-7-1865, (Ex. A-1) to the Punjab Government for information and Communication to Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh and to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh and the Financial Department. Since different interpretations are put by the parties' advocates upon the language employed in this document, we would like to reproduce material parts of it here. Before we do so, we might give a short pedigree of Maharaja Ranjit Singh's family so far as it is necessary for this judgment. It is found in Ex. A 19.

[9] The material portion of the extract of Government of India proceedings says:

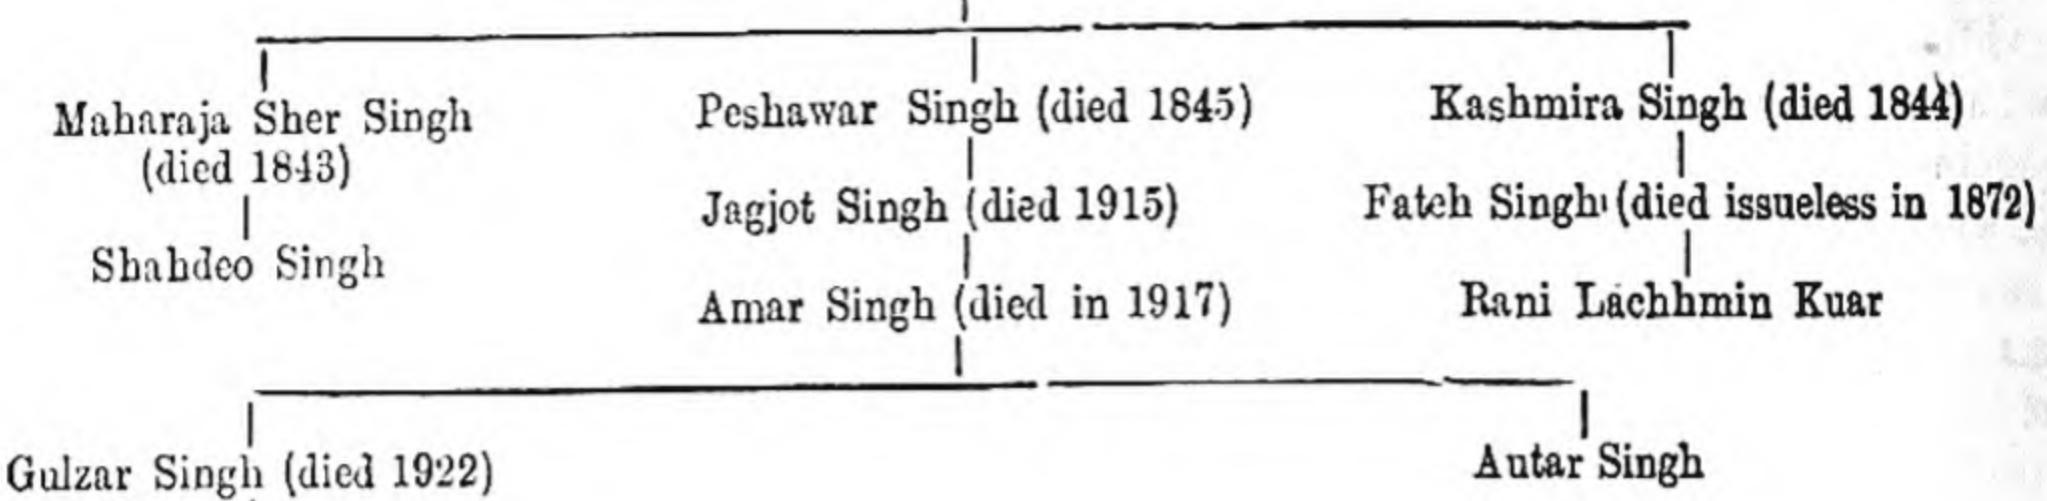
"Received despatch, dated 25-5-1865 No. 37, political from the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India respecting the provision to be made for the members of the family of the late Maharaja Sher Singh of Lahore.

The members referred to are—

1st—Shah Deo Singh, son of the late Maharaja Sher Singh.

2nd—Fateh Singh, son of the Koonwar Kashmira Singh.

3rd—Jagjot Singh, son of the Koonwar Pesewara Singh.



For Shahzada Shah Deo Singh the Government of India recommended.....

As regards Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh the Government of India proposed (1) the continuance to each for life, on the death of their mothers, of the pension of Rs. 1,800 a year, granted to those ladies respectively and (2) the grant to each, of a tract of land, not in the Punjab, yielding Rs. 5,000 per annum. The land to be held in Jagir for life and subject to assessment at half rates in the next generation, and full rates thereafter. The Home Government have approved of both proposals. His Excellency in Council accordingly resolves that the first proposal be observed when the time comes for its adoption, and that, as regards the second it will be best to grant the land in Oudh from the ensuing harvest. It will be desirable if practicable that these grants be villages in which the proprietary rights in the soil belonged to the Government."

[10] A copy of this document, as stated above was forwarded to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh also, and since he was chiefly concerned he desired to ascertain the exact import of resolution. Accordingly his Chief Secretary addressed a communication to Government of India (Foreign Department) on 15-4-1867, seeking clarification of Government's intention. This letter, (Ex. 132), inter alia said:

"The Chief Commissioner concurs in the view taken by the Financial Commissioner that it was the intention of the Government to grant the Sardars each land yielding a gross rental of Rs. 10,000 revenue free for their lives, the land to be held by the second generation at half the Government revenue assessed upon it and in the third and subsequent generations at full Government demand.

I am desired to inquire whether this view of the Chief Commissioner is in accordance with the real intention of the Government."

[11] The reply of the Government of India (Ex. 131) is dated 30-4-1867. It said that the Chief Commissioner's interpretation regarding the grant was correct. It appears, however, that meanwhile the Financial Commissioner's view of the Government's intention had been acted upon and summary settlement of 31 villages in Tahsil Bahraich and of one village in Khanpur Tahsil yielding an income of Rs. 19,396 (vide Ex. 146) with Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh was ordered. This order is contained in the remarks column of statement A (Ex. 146). It says:

"From Rabi 1273 Fasli Chilari Estate and Barat Segraura were given to Jagjot Singh and Fateh Singh. As per letter No. 1055, dated 14-5-1866, of the Financial Commissioner and according to the order of the said officer "summary settlement is ordered. Dated 12-10-1866.'

See also Ex. 145, dated 6-2-1867.

[12] We have already mentioned that the names of the two sardars were entered in lists 1 and 5, prepared in pursuance of S. 8 Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869.) List 1 contained the names of all persons who were to be considered Taluqdars within in the meaning of the Act. List 5 consisted of grantees to whom sanads or grants had been made up to the date fixed for closing of the lists, declaring that the succession to the estate comprised in such sanads or grants must thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture.

[13] According to S. 2 of the Act "estate" means "(a) the Taluqa or immovable property acquired or held by a taluqdar or grantee in the manner mentioned in S. 3, S. 4 or S. 5, and

(b) ....."

Section 5 lays down that:

"Every grantee shall possess the same rights and be subject to the same conditions in respect of the estate comprised in his grant as a taluqdar possesses and is subject to, under S. 3, in respect of his estate."

[14] The latter section amongst other things provides that"

"Every Taluqdar with whom a smmmary settlement of the Government revenue was made between the first day of April, 1858, and the 10th day of October 1859 or to whom, before the passing of this Act and subsequently to the first day of April, 1858, a Taluqdari sanad has been granted,

Shall be deemed to have thereby acquired a permanent, heritable and transferable right in the estate comprising the village and land named in the list attached to the agreement or qabuliat executed by such Taluqdar when such settlement was made,

"or which may have been or may be decreed to him by the Court or an officer engaged in making the first Regular Settlement of the Province of Oudh, such decree not having been appealed from within the time limited for appealing against it, or, if appealed from having been affirmed,

"subject to all the conditions affecting the Taluqdar contained in the orders passed by the Governor-General of India on the 10th and, 19th day of October 1859 and republished in the first Schedule hereto annexed, and subject also to all the conditions (other than those relating to succession) contained in the sanad under which the estate is held.

(Explanation — notwithstanding anything contained in the Crown Grants Act, 1895, the conditions of the sanad relating to succession, in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, shall not apply to the estate.")

[15] By S. 10 the Courts were enjoined to take judicial notice of the lists and to regard them as a conclusive evidence of the fact that the persons named therein are Taluqdars or grantees within the meaning of the Act. Reference may also be made to S. 11, Oudh Estates Act, which confers on the Taluqdars and grantees a power to transfer or bequeath their estates.

[16] The names of Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh having been entered in lists 1 and 5, it must be held that since the passing of the Act, permanent, heritable and transferable rights in the lands were possessed and enjoyed by them. Presumably these rights had their origin in the sanad and since they belonged to list 5 we further believe that the sanad must have been in the ordinary primogeniture form.

[17] The policy of the Government in regard to the grants of Taluqas in Oudh may now be adverted to. It is well known that this policy was a subject of prolonged consideration for a period of about 10 years before the Act came to be passed. By 1865 it was decided that the Taluqdars in Oudh should have a free right of disposal of their property and that in case of intestate succession the rule to be applied to them was to be that of primogeniture as far as possible, provided there was a custom of primogeniture in the family or the Taluqdars concurred in adopting the rule. It may be recalled that at one stage Mr. Wingfield, the then Chief Commissioner, pressed the Viceroy for adoption of the English rule of entail but though he made repeated attempts for obtaining its recognition Lord Canning and his successors resolutely refused to accept the suggested limitations on the Taluqdars' power.

[18] Having regard to these facts it appears unlikely that the Government of India's minute of 10-7-1865, intended to confer upon Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh a non-transferable estate for life with a provision for similar successive life estates in favour of the future generations.

[19] Set in this relief we will now consider the proceedings of the Government of India, the relevant portion of which has been re-produced above. Under it the grant to each of the two Sardars was described as a jagir and it comprised two distinct items (1) A tract of land yielding Rs. 5,000 per annum, and (2) A grant of the revenues of the land in their entirety to Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh and of half of those revenues to the generation following. What was meant by a jagir in Oudh at that time is clear from settlement circular No. C. 1123 of 1862. This circular conveyed certain instructions to Commissioners of Divisions. In the 12th paragraph of the aforesaid circular it was pointed out that a grant of a jagir in Oudh generally carried with it proprietary rights in the soil and that when a holding is released in favour of one or more muafidars, the Government simply consents to waive its claim to the payment of land revenue on a holding in perpetuity for the life or lives of one or more specified person or persons. See in this connection 18 O. C. 168[1] and 11 Luck. 588.[2]

[20] We have no reason to believe that the Government of India used the word Jagir when they applied it to grants in Oudh in a different sense. The rights which were intended to be conferred in the tract of land would thus appear to be absolute. The concession as to the revenue was to last for the lifetime of Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh only. In the next generation it was to be assessed at half rates. No remission was allowed in case of subsequent generations. That this was the meaning is clear also from the correspondence between the Chief Commissioner of Oudh and the Government of India (Exs. 132 and 131) to which we have already referred. It would be noticed that these documents avoided the use of term 'Jagir.' Each of the Sardars, according to the true intent of Ex. A1, was to be given land yielding a gross rental of Rs. 10,000 revenue free for their lives in order that it may secure to the third and the subsequent generation an income of Rs. 5,000 annually. The first item of the grant was thus intended to be heritable. Transferability must follow as an adjunct. It was in this light that the summary settlement was made with the grantees and it was in this light again that the property came to be recognised as a Taluqdari estate by Act I of 1869 and at the First Regular Settlement.

[20A] The events which followed the gift of four villages to Mian Uttam Singh, confirm the view that we take of the nature of Sardars' interest. Soon after the delivery of possession to the donee the Sardars themselves applied for mutation being effected in favour of the Mian, (Ex. 89). Orders to that effect were passed on 22-2-1868, (Ex 90). It seems to have been in the mind of every one at the time that the donors possessed the power to alienate. During the course of the First Regular Settlement Mian Uttam Singh applied to the Settlement Court to have his name entered as owner of the villages in suit in the record of rights which was then under preparation; vide Exs. 2, 5, 8 and 10. It is pertinent to remember in this connection that the duty of the Settlement Courts was to prepare exhaustive records of rights and for this purpose all persons, who were claimants to lands, were required to file cases in these Courts. The decisions of the Settlement Officer were given effect to in the record of rights and this record had the force of a decree of civil Court: vide, 1 O. C. 124[3] and 1 O. C. 289.[4] The name of Mian Uttam Singh was entered in the record of rights as owner by orders, EXS. 3, 7, 9 and 11. In EX. 20 the wajibularz of village Moorawwa the Settlement Officer made a mention of the gift of 1867 whereby villages Banhnauti, Shankarpur, Airiya Bambrauri, Fatehpurwa and Reotipurwa were transferred to plaintiff's ancestors. Similarly, in the waji-bul-araiz of four villages (EXS. 12, 14, 16 and 18) the title of the then owner, namely, Uttam Singh was traced to the gift The importance which we attach to these documents lies in the fact that they confirm the view that we take about the character of the grant so far as the transferability of the lands is concerned. If what was given to Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh was merely an entailed estate of a limited life interest, it is difficult to believe that the settlement Courts would have been oblivious of it or that they would have condescended to recognise Mian Uttam Singh as owner. The subsequent peaceful devolution of the villages to the succeeding generations of the transferee durind a period of 75 years is also not without significance.

[21] The appellant's side invited our attention to history of devolution of the Chilari Estate after the death of the original grantor and to certain litigations. In our judgment these events are unimportant and scarcely affect the issue, for the devolution after the passing of Act [1] of 1869 was bound to be in accordance with S. 22 and the subsequent rights of the Sardars were likewise to be governed by the provisions of the Act.

[22] A great deal of the case law was laid before us by the learned counsel at the bar in aid of the construction which each party desired to place on EX. A1. It is however, (not?) necessary to examine them, for it is hardly ever, if at all, profitable to try to interpret the terms of a document by referring to the considerations which prevailed in construing other documents executed in different circumstances and couched in different language, except in so far as they expound some principle of general application. We will, therefore, notice only such cases as fall within the exception. We propose to examine them in connection with two further contentions advanced on behalf of the respondent. These are: (1) that the grant to Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh being with the avowed object of making provisions for the members of the family of the late Maharaja Sher Singh, it must be regarded as a maintenance grant and as such it must be confined to a life interest in favour of Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh with successive life estates in favour of the later generations; (2) that in grants made by the Crown the rule of interpretation in view of the Crown Grants Act is different from the rule which is applied to private grants. It is said that every such grant must take effect according to its tenor notwithstanding any rule of law or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary.

[23] The first contention is sought to be supported with reference to a number of decisions amongst which may be mentioned, 6 I.A. 54,[5] 26 I.A. 216,[6] 46 I.A. 88,[7] 58 I.A. 215,[8] 2 Luck 335,[9] A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 623[10] and 22 P. R. 1889 p. 71.[11] Before we deal with these cases it is necessary to point out that our view of the nature of the Sardars estate does not depend upon construction of the sanad since that document is withheld. It rests on the inferences drawn from documents and circumstances of the case. The conclusion so derived is that the grant was absolute in the sense that it conferred full proprietorship on the grantees. We are clear that the intentions of the Secretary of State for India to make provision for the members of the family of the late Maharaja Sher Singh did not impress the grant with a non-transferable character. It is true that if the bestowal of the villages was made as a maintenance grant, ordinarily it would have enured for the lifetime of the grantees having regard to the object of the grant if the terms thereof did not militate against such construction. There is nothing, however, to show that the sanad in this case purported to confer limited rights of that kind or that it was of the character of the maintenance grant. In 6 I. A. 54[5] a sanad was granted by the East India Company to one Najamooddin Khan avowedly for the purpose of making some suitable provision as a subsidy for the expenses of the grantee and his descendants and it was provided that if it be necessary thereafter for the Government to resume the jagir given on account of maintenance or otherwise, the amount of the income thereof would still be given to Najamoodin Khan or his children or descendants from the Company's treasury. The sanad further provided for a special pension of RS. 6,000/- per annum in favour of Najamooddin Khan. The main object of the grant of the property there was to secure a pension of RS. 24,000/- per annum to the family and a portion thereof was to be paid out of revenues of certain mohals, constituting the jagir. Their Lordships having regard to the peculiar character of the grant from the Government under the circumstances which they emphasised and with the objects specified above, came to the conclusion that it conferred upon the descendants of Najamooddin nothing more than a mere estate for life. They observed that it was not a case of the State merely granting a jagir and declaring that the grant should be hereditary but that it was a grant of a jagir accompanied with the grant of a pension, under circumstances which indicated that the intention was to give the jagir and the pension subject to the same conditions, namely, that both were unalienable. 6 I. A. 54,[5] therefore, does not afford any assistance to the respondent. It is true that the property was given as a jagir but that term, as pointed out by their Lordships, had a somewhat different significance in Bombay from what it has in Oudh.

[24] The case reported in 26 I. A. 216[6] also related to a grant made to three persons expressly in lieu of maintenance. Its provisions showed that the maintenance there contemplated was not only for the grantees personally but also for the heirs. One of the grantees, namely, Barmeshwar executed a mokurruri lease in favour of another person. He died thereafter without leaving any issue and a question then arose whether the transfer was within the competence of the grantee so as to entitle the lessee to remain in possession of the property after the death of Barmeshwar. Lord Davey, who delivered the judgment of the Board, observed as follows:

"Their Lordships will not discuss at length the terms of the grant to Barmeshwar, which was expressly made "in lieu of maintenance". It was, therefore, prima facie resumable on the death of the grantor in accordance with the law laid down in the cases cited by the Subordinate Judge. It contains no words purporting to grant a perpetual interest, and as Barmeshwar died childless it is unnecessary to say whether his family would have taken the benefit of it if not resumed."

We think the case is not an authority for the proposition that whenever a grant is made with the object of making a provision for the grantee's family, the property covered by it must necessarily be regarded as non-transferable.

[25] In 46 I. A. 88[7] their Lordships said that a jagir prima facie gives a life estate only. They, however, pointed out that it may be granted in such terms as to be heritable but in order to make the estate one of inheritance the terms, if they have to be considered alone, must be unambiguous, and must show clearly whether it was intended that the right of inheritance should be general or confined to a particular class of heirs. The rule cannot apply to the case before us. A Jagir in Oudh, we have already pointed out, carries with it proprietary right in the soil. Besides, the language of Ex. A1 as well as the evidence to which reference has been made above indicate that heritable and transferable rights were conferred by the sanad and were conveyed to plaintiff's grandfather. The proceedings of the summary settlement of 1868 and the first Regular Settlement show that they were recognised as such by Settlement Officers who were charged with the preparation of the record of rights.

[26] In 58 I. A. 215[8] an enactment gave statutory effect to a previous grant of successive life estates. Considerations which prevailed there are wholly inapplicable to the present case.

[27] The Punjab case, 22 P. R. 1889 p. 71,[11] is of a similar kind. An istamrar grant was made for the life of the grantee who later proposed that it should be continued to the children. A supplementary grant was thereupon made in favour of the heirs of the original grantee on payment of certain rents in istamrar. The object was the support of each generation of children and it was held that the interest of the istamrardar was such that he could not charge the estate beyond his lifetime. It is clear that in face of the life estate of the first grantee it was unlikely that the subsequent grants to the following generations could be absolute. The intention was that each generation was to hold as grantee from the Government. We are unable to deduce from this case the principle for which the respondent contends.

[28] The Oudh case, 2 Luck. 335,[9] dealt with the construction of a family settlement whereby certain properties were allotted to one of the parties thereto in lieu of maintenance. The learned Judges said that the question whether the estate conferred was absolute or limited depended upon the circumstances of each case and if these circumstances negatived the grant of full proprietorship, the mere use of the word "proprietor (malik)" or "for ever" would not enlarge it. They took care to say that if the deed stated clearly that the grantee would have absolute interest, such interest could not be controlled by the mere fact that the motive of the grant was maintenance. We may add that cases in which full proprietary interest has been held to be conferred upon the grantees in spite of the fact that the object of the grant was to provide for maintenance are not wanting. See for example, 9 M. I. A. 55,[12] 4 Bom. H. C. R. O. C. 1[13] at p. 18; 18 O. C. 168[1] and A. I. R. 1938 Bom. 113.[14] We have already said that in the circumstances of the present case the conclusion that the sanad was heritable and transferable is irresistible.

[29] The Madras case, A. I. R. 1938 Mad. 623,[10] does not take the matter further. The deed of grant clearly provided that its object was to make permanent provision for the grantee and his heirs as compensation for the loss sustained by resumption of certain emoluments. It expressly said that the grantee and his heirs were to appropriate the rents and profits for their own use and were prohibited from alienating the village by grant, gift, sale or otherwise, it being liable to revert to the East India Company in default of legal heirs. Being a Crown grant, the prohibition as to the alienation was valid. It was sought, nevertheless, to attach and sell the aforesaid village and it was observed that the only interest which could be available to the decree-holder was to enjoy the rents and profits during the lifetime of the grantee. That being so, the learned Judges refused to countenance the sale.

[30] Ordinarily, when a grant is made to a person for his maintenance, it means that he is to enjoy the property for life but when the instrument of grant or the circumstances of the case and the evidence clearly indicate that the grantor intended to confer absolute interest on the grantee and future generations, we have no doubt that even if the object was to provide for the grantee's family it would not operate to entail the estate. In the case before us proprietary rights in the villages were granted in addition to the release of revenue wholly in favour of Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh and partly in favour of the next generation. The fact that the release of revenue was intended to operate for the lifetime of the two Sardars cannot and does not limit the proprietary interest in the villages.

[31] The second contention need not detain us long. The actual sanad is not forthcoming. The evidence, to our mind, is clear that what was given was a transferable estate. Assuming, however, that the sanad was couched in the language of Ex. A1, (which we think is very improbable) the general rule of interpretation that a grantee acquires all that interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property must be applied. It is difficult to agree with the defendant's contention which was accepted by the Court below that no such interest woud pass unless the Crown grant conveyed it expressly. Unqualified words of conveyance in a Crown grant cannot be regarded as qualified merely by virtue of the provisions of the Crown Grants Act. As observed in 3 A. L. J. 628[15] the object of the legislature in passing the Act was to validate any provisions, restrictions, conditions and limitations which might be contained in any Crown Grant and which otherwise might be held to be obnoxious to the restrictions imposed in respect of grants generally by the Transfer of Property Act. It was not intended by the legislature that unconditional grants made by the Crown free from restrictions as to alienation must nevertheless have restrictions imposed on them. The same view was taken by Sir Carlton Moss, King C. J., and Ziaul Hasan J. in 11 Luck. 588[2], in respect of Crown Grant in which no restrictive language regarding heritability or transferability was used. They held that it carried full proprietary rights. In 73 I. A. 123[16] at p. 133 their Lordships of the Privy Council, dealing with S. 3, Crown Grants Act, refused to read its language in its apparent generality. They observed that:

"The whole Act was intended to settle doubts which had arisen as to the effect of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and must be read with reference to the general context. . . . . ."

See also 1 Pat. 201[17] at p. 206, 4 Bom. H. C. R. O. C. 1[13] at pp. 18, 18 O. C. 168[1] at p. 177-178, A.I.R. 1929 ALL. 781[18] and 14 Luck. 723[19] at p. 741.

[32] On behalf of the respondent the case was argued also on the assumption that the grant purported to create a trust in favour of the succeeding generations. Our attention was drawn to the definition of "trust" in S. 3, Trusts Act, and it was said that the Government having given the property for the benefit of the Sardars as well as for the benefit of future generations, the grantees must be regarded as trustees for their successors. In the view that we have taken of the nature of the grant and of conferment thereby of proprietary rights on the grantees, this argument does not fall to be considered. We may add that we would, in any case, find it difficult to hold that one life tenant is a trustee for the next life tenant; or, to conceive that the two Sardars accepted the obligation to hold the property for the benefit of indeterminate future generations.

[33] We ought to mention that the appellant's learned counsel pressed upon us two further arguments in support of the appeal. He urged that the decision of the Settlement Court, recognising the proprietary rights of Mian Uttam Singh as against the Sardars must be given conclusive effect and the question should not be reagitated now by reason of the rule of res judicata. He also maintained that the donee and his successors having remained in possession of the property as owners for a period of over 70 years, they must in any event be considered to have acquired proprietary rights by prescription. The lower Court repelled these contentions, but in our opinion they must prevail, for Sardars Fateh Singh and Jagjot Singh, after the passing of the Act of 1869 and after the inclusion of their names in lists 1 and 5, appended to that Act, must (even if the view of the learned civil Judge regarding the restricted nature of the rights of the grantees under Ex. A-1 be assumed to apply) be regarded as absolute owners of the property in suit. The decisions and the records of right consequent thereon which operate as decrees of Settlement Courts must be given finality and must bind the parties' successors. Further, if the successors of the grantees had a cause of action against the donee or against those who claimed under him their remedy was extinguished after a lapse of 12 years from the accrual of the right to sue.

[34] The result of what has been said above is that the appellant must succeed. We accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the decision of the Court below in so far as it purports to dismiss the plaintiff's suit in respect of the four villages, namely, Bambnauti Shankarpur, Airiya Bamhrauri, Fatehpurwa and Reotipurwa. In addition to the declaration given by the Court below, we grant the plaintiff a further declaration that he is full owner of the aforesaid villages and as such is entitled to remain in possession thereof. The appellant is entitled to costs of this Court and of the Court below.

Bikaru and others—Accused—Applicants v. Emperor.

Criminal Misc. Applns. Nos. 165 and 169 of 1946, Decided on 18-2-1947.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 561A—Scope—No revision or appeal against conviction—Powers under S. 561A, if can be used—Acquittal of one of accused in appeal—General observations in judgment against prosecution—Convictions of non-appealing accused, if can be set aside under S. 561A.

Powers under S. 561A are certainly wide, but they are not unlimited. They can be exercised only when the Code makes no provision for dealing with the matter, and the Court is satisfied that there is an abuse of its process which calls for interference, or otherwise to secure the ends of justice it is necessary that the High Court should step in and exercise its inherent powers. The law having provided, by means of appeal and revision, the modes by which a conviction recorded by a Court of Sessions can be set aside, the High Court would not ordinarily entertain an application under S. 561A for this purpose. When the Criminal Procdure Code deals with any subject its provisions should be taken to be exhaustive so far as that matter is concerned. But it cannot be said that the High Court can never set aside a conviction in exercise of its inherent powers; it will do so in exceptional cases.

A case can be conceived where in dealing with an appeal filed by one of the convicted persons the Court comes to the conclusion that the entire prosecution case is false and concocted; in such a case it may be permissible for the Court to exercise its inherent powers on behalf of non-appealing persons who were also convicted with the one who filed an appeal and was acquitted. Such a case would be an instance where the High Court would rightly exercise its inherent powers and set aside the conviction even though the convicted persons did not appeal or invoke the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. The reason for this view is clear. It is assumed that in that case the entire prosecution story was held to be false and concocted. Thus there would be no justification for keeping in detention persons who must necessarily be deemed to have been wrongly convicted. But where in dealing with the appeal, the High Court was considering only the case of one appellant who had actually appealed and the scope of the inquiry was limited to the determination of the guilt or innocence of that particular accused, the observations made in the judgment acquire their meaning and significance from the scope of the enquiry with which the Court was for the time being concerned. The generality of the expressions used, unless the language expressly said so, is not to be taken as intending to lay down any absolute dicta unrelated to the point or points which are to be determined. The scope of the inquiry before the Court for the time being limits the meaning and the significance of the general reflections. It would be altogether wrong when the Court makes certain observations in dealing with the case of any individual appellant to cull out certain passages from the judgment, and to argue on their basis that they lead to an inference as regards the guilt or innocence of other persons whose case was not being considered by the Court at all.

Annotation : ('46-Com.) Cr. P. C., S. 561A, Notes 2 and 5.

J. D. Pradhan—for Applicants.

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Order.—These are two applications made under S. 561A, Criminal P. C. Application No. 165 is made by three applicants Bikaru, Ram Sudhi and Udit. Audhey is the sole applicant in the other application No. 169. As both these applications arise out of the same order, and are based on the same grounds, they may conveniently be dealt with together. They arise on the following facts :

[2] On the night between 12th and 13-12-1945, one Ram Din was murdered not far from Singhwa Nala which is about a hundred kasis from village Itiabdullah. Six persons Bikaru, Ram Sudhi, Udit, Audhey, Piarey and Hardin were alleged to have participated in the murder. Hardin absconded and so far as we are aware has not been arrested. The remaining five accused were tried by the Sessions Judge of Gonda and convicted under S. 302/149, Penal Code. Each of them was sentenced to transportation for life. Piarey filed an appeal which was disposed of by this Court on 28-10-1946. His participation in the crime was found not to have been established beyond reasonable doubt, and he was accordingly acquitted. These two applications were made on behalf of the remaining four accused praying that in view of certain observations made in the judgment of this Court disposing of Piarey's appeal, the conviction of the present applicants should be set aside. The applications, as already stated, purport to be made under S. 561A, Criminal P. C.

[3] It was argued before us at the hearing of the application that in view of certain observations made by this Court in its judgment in Piarey's appeal it should be held that the entire prosecution story as to the murder of Ram Din and the participation of the present accused in the crime were disbelieved and accordingly the applicant's conviction should also be set aside.

[4] Before dealing with the merits of these applications we will consider how far this procedure for getting the applicants' conviction set aside is permissible under the law. Ordinarily a conviction by a subordinate Court can be set aside by the High Court only in appeal or in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction The present applicants had a right to appeal against their conviction by the Sessions Judge. They did not avail themselves of that right Under S 439 (5), Criminal P. C, where an appeal lies under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed. Thus it is clear that the present applicants had no right to apply for the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court in the matter of their conviction. This, however, does not debar the High Court from taking up the case in revision suo motu. When the Criminal Procedure Code deals with any subject, its provisions should be taken to be exhaustive so far as that matter is concerned. It follows therefore, that the applicants cannot avail themselves of any of the two ordinary modes of procedure by which their convictions can be set aside, namely, appeal or revision Section 561A of the Code preserves the inherent powers of the Court, (1) to prevent abuse of the process of the Court and (2) to secure the ends of justice. These powers are certainly wide, but they are not unlimited They can be exercised only when the Code makes no provision for dealing with the matter, and the Court is satisfied that there is an abuse of its process which calls for interference, or otherwise to secure the ends of justice it is necessary that the High Court should step in and exercise its inherent powers. We are clear that the law having provided the modes by which a conviction recorded by a Court of Session can be set aside, the matter to which these applications are directed would not ordinarily fall within the purview of S 561A We do not hold that the High Court can never set aside a conviction in exercise of its inherent powers, but it will do so in exceptional cases.

[5] The next question which arises for consideration is whether either of the two applications before us constitute such an exceptional case. Reliance is placed on certain observations made by the Court in disposing of Piarey's appeal, and in view of them we are asked to set aside the applicants' conviction though they filed no appeal and are not entitled to ask the Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction in their behalf. We can conceive of a case where in dealing with the appeal filed by one of the convicted persons the Court comes to the conclusion that the entire prosecution case is false and concocted; in such a case it may be permissible for the Court to exercise its inherent powers on behalf of persons who were also convicted with the one who filed an appeal and was acquitted. Such a case would be an instance where the High Court would rightly exercise its inherent powers and set aside the conviction even though the convicted persons did not appeal or invoke the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. The reason for this view is clear. It is assumed that in that case the entire prosecution story was held to be false and concocted. Thus there would be no justification for keeping in detention persons who must necessarily be deemed to have been wrongly convicted. Though it is not specifically pleaded. the argument of the learned counsel for the applicants implied that in dealing with the case of Pearey, appellant, this Court discredited the entire prosecution case. Reliance in support of his contention was placed on the following observations:

(1) "Not only there are material discrepancies in the statements of these witnesses as regards what happened . . . . . but that there are certain inherent improbabilities in the version given by them which makes their story difficult of acceptance." (2)' It is impossible to reconcile the evidence of these witnesses with this medical evidence. (3) "We are unable to accept the prosecution version that the murderers of Ram Din continued to strike him till the witnesses were within a few paces of them It is very unlikely that they would expose themselves to the risk of being identified by the villagers." (4) We find it difficult to believe that if a murder was committed at about five gharis after nightfall within two hundred paces of a village with one hundred families no other person except such of them as ran in response to the alarm when it was first heard, would go there at any time during the night. Nor is it easy to believe that all the nine persons who had run in response to the murdered man's cries for help would stop near the dead body throughout a cold December night without any one of them returning to the village to inform others about what had happened."

These are general observations which divorced from the context in which they occur might appear to lend support to the applicants' contention. It should, however, be borne in mind that in dealing with the appeal, to which reference has been made, this Court was considering only the case of one appellant Pearey. The scope of the inquiry was limited to the determination of the guilt or innocence of that particular accused. We may point out that the observations made in a judgment acquire their meaning and significance from the scope of the enquiry with which the Court is for the time being concerned The generality of the expressions used, unless the language expressly says so, is not intended to lay down any absolute d cta unrelated to the point or points which are to be determined The scope of the inquiry before the Court for the time being limits the meaning and the significance of the general reflections. It would be altogether wrong when the Court makes certain observations in dealing with the case of any individual appellant to cull out certain passages from the judgment, and to argue on their basis that they lead to an inference as regards the guilt or innocence of other persons whose case was not being considered by the Court at all. In dealing with the case of any individual appellant the Court considers the evidence from a particular point of view This is determined by the specific case sought to be proved against that appellant and his defence. In dealing with this case the Court does not take into consideration any points which, though they might be of considerable importance as regards the cases of other co-accused, have no material bearing as regards the case of the individual appellant whose guilt or innocence is being determined.

[6] We do not propose to deal at length with each of the observations contained in the judgment in Pearey's appeal on which reliance was placed by the applicants' counsel. The applicants cannot ask this Court to deal with their applications as if they were appeals or applications in revision We are clear, as they are debarred from availing themselves of either of these remedies, they cannot be permitted to make the Court do so indirectly If we treat these applications as appeals or revision petitions, we would be going against the express provisions of the law and exercising a jurisdiction not vested in us It is, however, the duty of the High Court to see that if the innocence of any convicted person is established, he should not be held in detention It is from this point of view that we have approached the present applications. We have carefully examined the judgment given in Pearey's appeal. The conclusion at which the Court arrived is thus summed up in the last paragraph.

"Having considered the evidence carefully we are not satisfied that Pearey's participation in the commission of this crime is established beyond reasonable doubt. There is no evidence of any close association between the present appellant and Udit or any of the other accused. He was not one of those who held out a threat to murder Ramdin if his improper attentions to Jhingaura did not cease. Nor was he among the persons who, according to the prosecution version, lured Ram Din to the place of murder. Nor did Jagai who claims to have seen Ram Din going towards the jungle with Audhey and Hardin specifically mention Pearey as one of the party. For the reasons already given we are unable to accept the evidence of the prosecution witnesses so far as the present appellant is concerned. We accordingly allow the appeal set aside the conviction and the sentence passed upon Pearey and acquit him."

[7] The paragraph reproduced above makes it abundantly clear that in that appeal it was only Pearey's case that was examined. The evidence was considered only for a special point of view. The present applicants can ask for interference only if it was apparent from the judgment in Pearey's appeal that they were not guilty and were wrongly convicted. We are unable to hold that that judgment leads to any such conclusion and the applicants are therefore not entitled to ask us to treat the present applications as appeals or revision petitions. We are clear that no case has been made out for interference in exercise of the inherent powers of this Court The applications are accordingly rejected.

B. K Dhaon — for Applicants.
H. Husain—for Opposite Party.

Order. — Surajpal and ten others applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sultanpur praying that action be taken under S. 133, Criminal P. C. against Changu Manihar and Brij Bhawan Singh. They alleged that Changu with the permission of his zamindar opposite party No. 2, was constructing a house in such a way as to block the way on plot No. 23 of the abadi which is used by the public. They further alleged that a channel for carrying water from a well on plot No. 24 to the fields outside the abadi for the purpose of irrigation was also being stopped. They said that this action of the opposite party caused loss not only to them but also to the general public. A police report was called for and thereafter the opposite parties were summoned to show cause why proceedings under S. 133, Cr. P.C. should not be taken. They appeared and filed a written statement on 22-3-1946. This written statement has an important bearing on the case but I do not wish to say anything further with regard to it because it is advisable not to say anything which may affect the merits.

[2] Thereafter the learned Magistrate called upon the Naib Tahsildar to report and he also reported that the opposite parties had obstructed a public way. Thereupon, on 27-4-1946, the learned Magistrate issued a preliminary order under S. 133, Criminal P. C.

[3] On 8-5-1946, the opposite party No. 1 filed another written statement in which he pleaded that he had not constructed his house on any part of a public road. The Court then proceeded to record evidence and after completing its enquiry it made its order absolute. The learned Magistrate held that plot No. 23 was a "Rasta" and had always been used by the public. The opposite parties applied to the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, in revision and challenged the legality of the order. The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the procedure prescribed by Criminal Procedure Code for such cases has not been followed and the order should be set aside. He accordingly referred the case to this Court under S. 438, Criminal P. C.

[4] It appears from the record that only one enquiry took place after the preliminary order under S. 133, Criminal P. C. had been passed by the learned Magistrate. In the circumstances of the case there should have been two enquiries, one under S. 139A, Criminal P. C., and the other under S. 137, since opposite party No. 1 denied the existence of the public right in respect of the land upon which he had raised the walls involved in this case. Section 139A, cl. (1) provides that in such a case

"the Magistrate shall, before proceeding under S. 137 or S. 138, enquire into the matter."

Then follows cl. (2) which is as follows:

"If in such enquiry the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial, he shall stay the proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent Civil Court; and, if he finds that there is no such evidence, he shall proceed as laid down in S. 137 or S. 138, as the case may require."

[5] Thus it is only after the determination of the question of the public right, that further proceedings under S. 137 can be taken. The language of the section is perfectly clear and unambiguous and requires evidence at two stages; once in the enquiry under S. 139A, Criminal P. C. and again in the proceedings under S. 137. If parties are deprived of their right of producing evidence at either of these stages they are materially prejudiced and it cannot be said that only an irregularity has been committed which may be cured by invoking the aid of S. 537, Criminal P. C. In 1941 O. W. N. 54[1] a learned Judge of this Court held that, in such cases the Magistrate can only proceed under S. 137, Criminal P.C. after recording a finding under S. 135A, Criminal P. C. and that if this had not been done the order of the Magistrate must be set aside. In that case this Court returned the case to the Magistrate and directed him to proceed again with the case and hold an enquiry first under S. 139A, Criminal P. C. and then under S. 137, Criminal P. C.

[6] In 1946 O. W. N. 108,[2] the Magistrate after an enquiry under S. 139A, Criminal P. C. made his conditional order absolute without taking evidence under the provisions of S. 137, Criminal P. C. It was contended that there was no prejudice and, therefore the irregularity was cured by S. 537, Criminal P.C. Thomas (Sir George) C. J. refused to accept this contention and held that the law provides for two distinct stages in an enquiry under Chapter X of the Criminal P. C. The first is prescribed by S. 139A and it is only when he finds that there is no reliable evidence in support of the denial of the public right that he can undertake the enquiry under S. 137. That enquiry too must be completed before the conditional order can be made absolute. He said:

"Both the stages must be complied with as the provision is mandatory and it is not a question of a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C."

He also set aside the order of the Magistrate and directed that he should proceed to dispose the application according to law.

[7] The learned counsel who opposed the reference, relied upon 1946 O.W.N. 57,[3] but that case does not assist him since, in that case both the stages were gone through though, at the second stage the counsel for the parties stated that they did not wish to lead any additional evidence. Thus the Court complied with the requirements of the law and it is always open to the parties not to lead evidence. There was no defect in the procedure at all. That is not the case here.

[8] The order of the learned Magistrate dated 29-6-1946, by which he made the order of his predecessor absolute must, therefore, be set aside. The question then arises whether the Magistrate should be directed to take up this case from the stage commencing with the passing of the preliminary order. The learned counsel supporting the reference strongly contends that this is not a case to which S. 133, Criminal P. C. has any application at all. I cannot agree with this contention, since the section does not refer to a public way but only to a way "which is or may be lawfully used by the public." That is a fact to be determined on the evidence in the enquiry under S. 139A, Criminal P. C. and I do not wish to say anything which might prejudice the evidence before that enquiry commenced. Different interpretations have been placed by different Courts upon the meaning of the word public: vide A. I. R. 1928 ALL 627,[4] A I. R. 1942 ALL. 443[5] and A. I R. 1939 Pat 460.[6] The case reported in A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 286[7] related to a case under S. 283 which relates to a "public way" and has no application. In the three other cases the Court was acting under S. 133, Criminal P. C. and it was only as a result of the enquiry under S. 139A. Criminal P. C that the question as to whether there was or was not a "public right" arose for determination. No doubt in giving its finding under S. 139A (2), Criminal P. C the learned Magistrate will duly consider all these authorities as well as the decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court presided over by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in 3 I. C. 7,[8] in which their Lordships say that all that S. 133 requires is that the way should be one wich is "or may be lawfully used by the public."

[8] Mr Dhaon also relied upon the decision of Walford J. in Cri. Rev. No. 88 of 1946 decided on 9-9-1946 which has not been reported. In that case the learned Judge set aside the order of the Magistrate and did not order proceedings to commence afresh. In that case, however, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the right claimed was at the best only an easement and that S 133, Criminal P. C. did apply to such cases. He also held that the obstruction was one of two years' standing and he followed the decision of the Lahore High Court in A. I R. 1938 Lah. 523[9] for the proposition that S. 133, Criminal P. C. was not intended for obstructions of long standing. The case is, therefore, inapplicable to the facts of the present case

[9] I accordingly accept the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge Fyzabad, set aside the order of the Magistrate dated 29-6-1946 and direct that the Magistrate should proceed to hold an enquiry under S. 139A, Criminal P. C. and thereafter, if necessary, under S. 137, Criminal P. C. and then pass such orders as the facts proved may warrant.

Second Appeal No. 34 of 1941, Decided on 16-12-1946, from order of Civil Judge, Unao, D/- 28-11-1940.

U. P. Tenancy Act (17 [XVII] of 1939), Ss. 90 and 91—Applicability—Provision in lease for payment of haqooq-i-zamindari—Suit for recovery of such dues—Maintainability.

Section 90 does not apply to a case where the liability sought to be enforced has arisen before the U. P. Tenancy Act came into force. Even in cases where it applies, it does not affect a provision in the contract of tenancy relating to giving of bhusa etc. to the landlord.

A contract of tenancy executed before the U. P. Tenancy Act came into force provided that the tenants shall pay the haqooq-i-zamindari over and above the rent or shall pay compensation at the rate mentioned in the contract in lieu of those rights and that these haqooq were to be regarded as a special part of the compensation for the letting of the land. In a suit brought by the landlord for the recovery of these dues:

Held, (1) that S. 90 did not apply to the case; [Para 5]

(2) that S. 91 also did not apply. It applies only to realisation of cesses and not to claims made with regard to something which had been converted into rent by agreement of parties: [Para 5]

(3) that the effect of the provision in the contract of lease regarding these dues was to make them part of the rent: 4 A. I. R. 1917 All. 483, Applied; 1943 R D. 244; 1943 R. D. 485 and 1944 R. D. 457, Rel. on. [Paras 2, 4]

H. Husain—for Appellant.

P. N Chaudhari—for Respondent.

Judgment.— The appellant Lal Yogendra Baksh Singh is a taluqdar and village Akhori lies within his taluqa. Lala and Ram Dayal respondents in the two appeals respectively are his tenants. The contract of tenancy provides that they shall pay the rent entered in cash and that they shall pay the 'haqooq-i-zemindari' detailed in the qabuliat over and above the rent or that they shall pay money compensation at the rate mentioned in the qabuliat in lieu of those rights. The qabuliat in both the cases provided that these haqooq were to be considered a special part of the compensation (that is muawiza) for the letting of the land. These haqooq were not paid for the years 1344 to 1346F. Consequently the appellant brought the suits against the respondents in the Revenue Court for realization of those dues. Those suits were dismissed by the District Judge of Una by his judgment dated 6-6-1939 on the ground that the Revenue Courts had no jurisdiction but that the plaintiff would be at liberty to institute suits in the civil Court if he was so advised. Thereafter the plaintiff filed suits on 7-6-1939, in the Court of the Munsif South Unao, for recovery of Rs. 7-8-0 and Rs. 7-11-0 from the two respondents respectively The learned Munsif decreed both the suits but on appeal the civil Judge reversed the decrees of the Munsif and dismissed both the suits.

2 The taluqdar has now come up in appeal and it is urged on his behalf that the suits ought to have been decreed because under the contracts entered into between the parties, haqooq-i-zamindari must be treated as part of the rent and there is nothing in the law to make such a contract illegal. It was laid down by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 38 ALL 286[1] that the result of the entry of the zemindari dues in the qabuliat was to make them part of the rent In present case the qabuliat also contains specific mention of the various zamindari dues realizable by the landlord It further provides the compensation to be paid in cash in case the tenant fails to pay up those zemindari dues. The decision of the Allahabad High Court is, therefore, fully applicable to the present case. This view has also been taken repeatedly by the Board of Revenue in cases: vide 1943 R D 244;[2] 1943 R. D. 485[3] and 1944 R. D. 457[4] I have not been referred to any decision of this Court in which this matter has been decided.

[3 The learned counsel for the respondents has referred to the case in 1942 O. W. N. 683[5] in which it was held that if the taluqdar was entitled to realize four chattaks of ghi annually from his Ahir tenants under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz as return for their using his banjar land for grazing purposes, the tenant were bound to provide this ghi or to make payment for it unless they could show that they were prevented from using the land as their grazing ground. In that case the suit was based upon custom and the claim was not rent due The case is, therefore, not applicable to the facts of the present case but it shows that this Court has laid down the proposition that something over and above the rent can be realized unless there is some illegality and that the judgment of the Civil Judge inasmuch as it holds that nothing over and above the rent can be realized in any case is not correct.

[4] The learned lower appellate Court has found that such dues could not be realized because the Oudh Rent Act forbade the realization of anything over and above the rent He seems to have misunderstood the argument of the plaintiff The plaintiff claimed these dues not as something over and above the rent but as part of the rent by virtue of a contract entered into between him and his tenants. The reason which the learned Civil Judge, therefore, gives proceeds upon a wrong assumption altogether and is not justified by the facts of the case.

[5 The learned Civil Judge next proceeded to hold that the enforcement of these demands infringed the provisions of Ss. 90 and 91, U. P. Tenancy Act Section 90 does prohibit any contract that the tenant shall render any service or do any work for the landholder as part of the contract of tenancy This section cannot, however, apply to the present case because the liability that is sought to be enforced in the present case is one that arose before the new Tenancy Act came into force. Had the liability arisen after 1-1-1940 no doubt S. 90 would have been applicable to that part of the agreement which relates to rendering of service by providing a goi or pair of bullocks to the landlord for the the purpose of working on his fields but it would not even then affect the rest of the contract which relates to giving bhusa, etc. S. 91 applies only to the realization of cesses which may be notified by the Provincial Government in the official Gazette to be not recoverable. No such notification has been brought to my notice and even if such notification had been issued it would only relate to cesses and not to a claim made with regard to something which has been converted into rent by agreement of parties. The decision of the lower appellate Court cannot, therefore, be upheld and must be set aside.

6] I, therefore, allow these appeals, set aside the decision of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. The appellant will get his costs of both the appeals.

Second Appeal No. 330 of 1941, Decided on 20-11-1946, from order of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 18-7-1941.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 101 and 103—Order for possession under R. 101—No suit by decree-holder under R. 103—Acquisition of forcible possession by decree-holder—Effect—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 11-A.

After the expiry of one year from the date of order under O. 21, R. 101 the right of the party in whose favour that order is passed becomes conclusive. If within that time the decree-holder does not file a suit under O. 21, R. 103 his right to claim possession upon the same title (which is defeated in the proceedings under O. 21, R. 100) is barred.

The acquisition of forcible possession by the decree-holder after delivery of possession to the successful party under R. 101, cannot operate to arrest the running of time against the decre -holder. nor can it invest him with a fresh right to reagitate the question of title which had already been extinguished.

('42-Com.) Limitation Act, Art. 11-A, Note 10, Pts. 1 & 2.

Siraj Husain and Ganesh Pd.—for Appellant.
Jagdish Chandra—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of ownership of a house on a title based upon a sale deed executed on 3rd October 1936 by one Gur Prasad son of Jagmohan in favour of the plaintiff Brij Lal. It appears that possession of the house was not delivered to Brij Lal after its transfer. In pursuance of a decree obtained by him on 24th July 1937, he obtained actual delivery of possession in execution on 6th September 1937; objections were thereafter preferred in the execution Court by Mahadeo who claimed to be an owner in his own right These objections were under R. 100 of O. 21, Civil P. C., and were allowed on 9th December 1937. Possession was, therefore, delivered to Mahadeo on 17th January 1938. Under R. 103 of O. 21 a suit by Brij Lal to establish his right in derogation of the one which was granted by the order of 9th December 1937 was necessary, and in the absence thereof the decision was conclusive. Such a suit could be filed within a period of one year from the date of the order under Art. 11A of the Limitation Act. Brij Lal did not file any such suit as is contemplated by R. 103 It appears that some time in July 1939 or thereabouts he took forcible possession of the property which Mahadeo had to recover by suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act. The present suit for declaration was then filed by Brij Lal on 16th July 1940, and the title upon which he relied was the earlier title which he set up against Mahadeo in the proceedings under S 100, (O. 21, R. 100?) Civil P C namely the sale deed of 3rd October 1936. Mahadeo resisted the suit upon a number of grounds The one with which we are concerned related to the bar created by R. 103 of O. 21 The trial Court did not accept the defendant's contention and in view of its other findings it passed a decree in plaintiff's favour. The appellate Court affirmed that decree Mahadeo defendant has come up by way of second appeal

[2] The only contention that has been urged before me by Mahadeo's learned counsel is that after the expiry of a year from 9th December 1937, which was the date of the order in Mahadeo's favour under R. 101 of O 21, the right to claim possession upon the title which was then defeated is barred There can be no doubt that the order of 9th December 1937, became finally conclusive after the expiry of year and that the right of the party in whose favour that order was made became absolute Brij Lal could not, therefore, set up again the right which was rejected by that order in a subsequent suit. Since the substance of the present suit was the establishment of the right which was the subject of the order, this suit ought to have failed. The trial Court, however, rejected the defence holding firstly that after the order of 9th December 1937, and in spite of the delivery of possession to Mahadeo on 17th January 1938, Brij Lal still remained in possession of the property and in the second place that the cause of action for the present suit was different, being dispossession not by virtue of the order under R 101 of O 21 but by virtue of the decree under S 9, Specific Relief Act, which was passed in Mahadeo's favour on 15th May 1940 When the case went up to the Court of first appeal the first ground was apparently negatived. The learned District Judge observed that there was plenty of evidence to show that Mahadeo got possession under the order. He observed:

> "We do not know how long he remained in possession but we do know that he was subsequently dispossessed by the plaintiff who thereafter remained in possession until Mahadeo brought a suit on the basis of his possessory title under S. 9. Specific Relief Act."

The learned District Judge, however, went on to say in a subsequent portion of his judgment:

> "that plaintiff being in possession adversely to the order under R. 101 had no need to proceed under R. 103."

I am clear that an acquisition of possession by the plaintiff after the delivery of possession to Mahadeo on 17th January 1938, could not operate to arrest the running of limitation against him from the date of the order of 9th December 1937, and further that if the second dispossession of Mahadeo took place on 15th July 1939, as was alleged by the defendant in the suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, the high-handed act of Brij Lal could not invest him with a fresh right to reagitate the question of title which had already been extinguished.

[3] The next point which influenced the Courts below was that the cause of action upon which the present declaratory suit was founded was different from the cause of action upon which the suit under O 21, R. 103 would have been based. It appears to me, however, that the title which is set up in the declaratory suit is the same title upon which the plaintiff claimed possession of the property in 1937 and which was defeated then. That title could not be revived after the expiry of one year from the date of the order.

[4] It is urged by the learned counsel for the respondent that the finding about Mahadeo's obtaining possession under the order of 9th December 1937 should not be regarded as conclusive. In fact, he says, it should not be regarded as a finding at all in view of the fact that it occurs in a paragraph of the judgment in which the learned District Judge was giving merely a narration of facts of the case. I have no doubt that the view expressed by the Court below was on appreciation of evidence produced.

[5] I am clear that Brij Lal's right to possession of the property became finally extinguished and it cannot now be resuscitated. His suit, therefore, based upon the title derived from the sale of 3rd October 1936, must fail.

[6] The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Where, during the pendency of an appeal, the Court of Wards assumes superintendence of the estate of a party to the appeal and an application is made for the substitution of the name of the Deputy Commissioner in place of the party, S. 15, U. P. Court of Wards Act has no application and the Court should resort to the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C. It is doubtful whether O. 1, R. 10 or O. 22, R. 10 will apply to such a case: 22 A. I. Order.—This is an application under S. 15, U. P. Court of Wards Act read with O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C. by the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur in charge of the Hasanpur estate praying that the name of the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur be substituted in place of the minor Raja of Hasanpur estate.

[2] It appears that the original appeal was filed by Raja Mohammad Ahmad Ali Khan, taluqdar of Hasanpur estate but he died during the pendency of the appeal leaving his minor son, Raja Mohammad Raza Ali Khan as his sole heir and successor. The estate of the minor was taken under the superintendence of the Court of Wards under S. 14, Court of Wards Act and the minor Raja was substituted under the guardianship of the Deputy Commissioner in place of the deceased by an order of the Bench dated 10-12-1945. Subsequently the Court of Wards assumed superintendence of the estate under S. 8 of the Act and this application now seeks the substitution of the name of the Deputy Commissioner, Sultanpur in place of the minor Raja. There is no objection to the substitution by the opposite-party but it is pointed out that the application is made under wrong provisions of the law.

[3] I am of opinion that S. 15, U. P. Court of Wards Act has no application. That section merely relates to notification of the assumption of superintendence and I consider it at least doubtful whether substitution can be ordered under R. 10 of O. 1, Civil P. C. It appears that in A. I. R. 1935 Oudh 486[1] a Bench of this Court applied the provisions of O 22, R. 10 in substituting the Deputy Commissioner in charge of the Court of Wards in place of the disqualified proprietor holding that there was a devolution of interest in certain respects. Ordinarily I should be bound by the decision of the Bench but for the fact that doubt is thrown on the applicability of R. 10 to such a case by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1938 P. C 49.[2] Under the circumstances I must resort to the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C. as in my opinion having regard to the provisions of S. 55, Court of Wards Act, a ward cannot continue any proceedings in the civil Court otherwise than by and in the name of the Collector in charge of his property. Accordingly I allow the application as prayed.

P. S. Divedi—for Appellant.

Judgment.—This is a court-fee report made by the office in respect of a suit for declaration that a "tamliknama" of a house executed by a Hindu widow governed by the Mitakshara Law is invalid after her death and for possession. The suit was filed during the life time of the widow with a prayer for a declaration that the deed is voidable after her death. While the suit was pending, the widow died and then a plea for possession of the property was added to the plaint. The office report is that since there is a direct prayer for cancellation of the "tamliknama," court-fee must be paid on this as well as on the relief of possession. Since the reversioner does not claim through the widow, the court-fee is payable on 1/5th of the value of the house.

[2] Learned counsel for the appellant cites several rulings which he regards as being in his favour. The first is A. I. R. 1938 Pat. 22.[1] The court-fee report in the present case is based upon an amendment of the Court-fees Act made by the Provincial Legislature which introduced S. 7 (iv-A) into the Act. The Patna decision cannot affect the interpretation of a section which does not exist in the Court-fees Act applicable to the province of Bihar.

[3] A. I. R. 1930 Oudh 104[2] is the second decision he cites. Section 7 (iv-A) was added by the U. P. Court-fees (Amendment) Act of 1938. It was, therefore, no part of the Act when the decision cited was passed and that decision cannot affect the interpretation of the law as it now stands.

[4] A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 125[3] has no application. The question there was the payment of court-fee on an appeal filed in 1936. The Court held that the court-fee was payable under S 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, "to obtain a declaratory decree or order, where consequential relief is prayed." This sub-section no longer exists in its present form in these provinces. The whole of S. 7 (iv) has been re-cast by S. 7 of Act 19 [XIX] of 1938.

[5] A. I. R. 1942 Lah. 209[4] is distinguishable for the same reason as the Patna case. The case is governed by S. 7 (iv-A) as interpreted by A. I. R. 1944 Oudh 118.[5] That case related to a suit for cancellation of a decree and for possession and it was held that court-fee was separately payable upon theso two reliefs as they were based upon distinct and separate causes of action.

[6] The appellant has attempted to escape the result of that decision by arguing that the "tamliknama" is not an instrument securing money within the meaning of S. 7 (iv-A). A "tamliknama" he says is a deed of gift and a gift before it can become binding upon the donor and before it can secure the property to the donee must be accepted by the donee and this acceptance must necessarily take place after the deed of gift has been executed. Therefore a deed of gift cannot by itself, "secure money or other property." We do not find, however, that the appellant's contentions are borne out by the sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to gifts.

[7] In S. 122, T. P. Act, gift is defined :

"'gift' is the transfer of certain existing movable or immovable property made voluntarily and without consideration by one person called the donor, to another called the donee and accepted by or on behalf of the donee."

[8] This acceptance by the donee is made part of the essence of the "gift" itself. The act then provides that for the purpose of making a gift of immovable property the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument singed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. A valid deed of gift is therefore complete in itself and is an instrument securing property We accept the office report and order that the deficit court-fee be paid by the appellant within two months.

Case Referred :—

1. Cr. Appeal No. 319 of 1946, Ram Jiwan v. Emperor

S. D. Misra — for Appellant.

Asst-Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment. — The appellant Bhabhuti was charged under S. 455 and 302/34, Penal Code, and committed for trial to the Court of Session at Hardoi in respect of an incident which occurred at village Birauli in the district of Hardoi on 28-12-1945 at about noon as a result of which one Chitta received injuries to which he succumbed on his way to the police station.

[2] The prosecution case was that the relations between Bhabhuti who is a bania and his neighbour Pirthi, a Barber, had become strained owing to a quarrel beween Pirthi's daughter's son and Bhabhuti's niece both of whom are small children. This quarrel resulted in abuse passing between Bhabhuti's sister-in-law and Pirthi's daughter Mt. Parbati and eventually in Bhabhuti administering two strokes with a cane upon the latter. The prosecution case then proceeded that on the day of the occurrence, Bhabhuti was at his door when Pirthi passed that way and Bhabhuti called out to Pirthi to come and shave him or at least to give him a razor so that he may shave himself A quarrel thereupon ensued in which Bhabhuti received a beating and Pirthi his son Sarju and Chitta the son-in-law of Pirthi went away after the last mentioned had received some injuries. It is alleged that about two or two and a half hours after this incident, while Pirthi and Sarju were absent from their house and were at the house of one Bandi Din, the lambardar of the village, Bhabhuti, his brother Hazari, Rokar son of Hazari, Daryai, brother-in-law of Bhabhuti, Ram Adhar and Tulsi Ram invaded the house of Pirthi, broke open his door and assaulted Chitta in such a way that he succumbed to his injuries very shortly afterwards. At the time of the assault only Mt Parbati wife of Chitta was present in the house.

[3] Mt. Parbati reported the incident at police station Kashimpur on the same day at 4-30 p. m. The report is Ex 2 and it substantially gives the prosecution version as it has been given in Court On the same day Bhabhuti had also lodged a first information report at the same police station at 4.15 p. m complaining that Pirthi, Sarju and Chitta had assaulted him with lathis This report is Ex. 6. Bhabhuti and his brother Hazri who were at the police station when Ex. 2 was recorded were immediately taken into police custody and Bhabhuti was sent for medical examination of which the report is Ex 12 His mother Mt Radha had also been injured and her medical examination took place The report is Ex. 13. The body of Chitta was sent for post mortem examination and it reveals that he had several injuries caused by a lathi one of which was on the head and was a fracture of the skull. The post mortem report reveals that Chitta had a very much enlarged spleen which was ruptured as a result of the assault The doctor was of the opinion that the injury on the head as well as the rupture of the spleen caused the death of Chitta.

[4] Bhabhuti in his defence pleaded that the entire incident took place at one time at his own door and that it was he who was attacked by Pirthi, Sarju and Chitta. He alleged that Pirthi had a spear with which he caused injuries to Mt. Radha, his mother He also pleaded the right of self-defence in inflicting injuries upon Chitta who he said had also struck him with a lathi. He pleaded that he alone participated in the quarrel on his side and that the names of the five other persons had worngly been given.

[5] As a result of the police investigation Bhabhuti, Hazari and Rokar were prosecuted. The last two have been acquitted and Bhabhuti has been convicted under para. 2 of S. 304, Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four years. He has now come up in appeal

[6] On the findings which have been arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge, Bhabhuti is clearly entitled to an acquittal. Briefly stated the Sessions Judge has found (1) That there was only one marpit as alleged by Bhabhuti and that the prosecution case that there was a separate incident which resulted in Chitta's death is false. (2) That the whole marpit took place in front of Bhabhuti's house and Chitta received his injuries at that place. (3) That it is false that Bhabhuti entered the house of Pirthi after breaking open his door. (4) That Bhabhuti did not possess a spear and that the case that the injury to Mt. Radha was caused by her catching it in order to prevent Bhabhuti from using it was not substantiated. (5) That Pirthi and Sarju had attacked Bhabhuti and he and his mother had received injuries in the course of that assault. (6) The learned Sessions Judge was of the opinion that in this village there are two parties, one of Bandi Din who is a partizan of Pirthi and the other of Gaya Din who is a supporter of Bhabhuti. The learned Sessions Judge considered all the evidence and came to the conclusion that P. W. 10 Jit Bahadur, P. W. 12 Sital

Prasad, P.W.14 Bishambhar, P.W.15 Kallu and P.W.16 Ajaipal belonged to Bandi Din's party and for this reason as well as by reason of other discrepancies which occur in their evidence, they were unworthy of credit. With regard to P.W. 7 Pirthi, P.W. 8 Sarju and P.W. 9 Bandi Din, he held that they themselves state that they were not eye-witnesses to what they call the second incident which resulted in the death of Chitta and they cannot depose anything about it. He has also come to the conclusion that P.W.11 Dhani Ram was not present when the incident occurred and that the evidence of P.W. 3 Parbati cannot be believed.

[7] This is all the evidence that was led by the prosecution to bring home the guilt to the accused and when the learned Sessions Judge had come to the conclusion that their evidence was unreliable he should have acquitted the accused. He, however, came to the conclusion that Bhabhuti's own statement as an accused was sufficient for his conviction because though Bhabhuti was attacked Chitta was not an attacking party and so Bhabhuti had no right of private defence as against Chitta. This reasoning is open to two objections. Firstly, according to the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, Chitta came to the scene along with Sarju who came armed with a lathi and he was injuried while he was standing by the side of Sarju at Bhabhuti's door. Chitta was Pirthi's son in-law and it was his wife who was principally aggrieved by Bhabhuti's conduct since it was she who had been caned. In such circumstances Bhabhuti had no reason to suppose that Chitta was not taking part in the assault and had come to the scene merely as an onlooker. When a man is being attacked, he is not in a position to distinguish which person in the party of aggressors is his real assailant and which is merely an onlooker and he is not deprived of the right of private defence merely because a person in the party of the aggressors has not attacked him. The second ground why this reasoning of the learned Sessions Judge cannot be accepted is that it is not open to a Court in such a case to accept a part of the statement of the accused and reject the rest. In his statement the accused clearly stated that Chitta had also beaten him and that he had struck him in self-defence. The statement of Bishamber, P.W. 14, also shows that the accused had taken up a danda in self-defence and that Chitta had come up to the door of the accused and was standing at the door of the accused by the side of Sarju who was actually striking the accused with a lathi. It has recently been laid down by a Bench of his Court of which I was a member in Cri. Appeal No. 319 of 1946,[1] which was an appeal against a conviction by same learned Sessions Judge that it is not permissible for a Court to dissect the statement made by an accused person under S. 342 Criminal P.C. containing both incriminating and self-exculpatory statements and to reject the self-exclupatory statement and base his conviction solely upon its self-incriminating protion when the Court has already come to the conclusion that the evidence for the prosecution is unworthy of credit. In that case it was also laid down that it is only when there is other evidence to support the conviction of the accused that the Court may accept a part of the confession and reject a part. The present case is on all fours with that case and in view of the law there laid down the action of the learned Sessions Judge basing the conviction purely on the self-incriminating part of the statement of the accused cannot be sustained.

[8] I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the conviction of Bhabhuti and direct that he be released unless he is required in connection with some other case.

In the case of findings of fact arrived at by the Court of first appeal, giving of reasons for its conclusions is all the more necessary as the findings are binding on the Court of second appeal and it is necessary that, if such a matter comes before a Court of second appeal that Court should be able to judge whether the first appellate Court has applied its mind to a consideration of the evidence or not. Where the judgment of the lower appellate Court gives no reasons whatsoever why the evidence of one set of witnesses is accepted and that of the other set rejected and does not even mention the evidence supporting its finding, the Court of second appeal can go through the evidence. Judgment.—The last male holder of the property in suit was Gajadhar, who died sometime before 1881, without leaving any issue He was succeeded by his widow, Mst. Batasi, who died in 1935 The plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of the Munsif, North Sultanpur, on 30-7-1940, claiming possession of the properties as well as mesne profits. They alleged that they were the next reversioners of Gajadhar snice all the nearer heirs were dead and Gajadhar left no sister or sister's son. The defendants pleaded that the properties did not belong to Gajadhar, that the plaintiffs were not the next reversioners, that Gajadhar had a sister whose son is still alive and that they were transferees of the property from Mst. Batasi, Mst. Ramna and Bhikha, grandfather of the plaintiffs 2 and 3, who had executed the sale deed in their favour for legal necessity.

[2] The trial Court framed a large number of issues of which only the first and the third are material. They are as follows:

(1) Is the pedigree given in the plaint correct?

(2) Are the plaintiffs the nearest reversioners of Gajadhar?

[3] The learned Munsif, after a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the witnesses produced by the plaintiff on the question of the absence of the sister and sister's son of Gajadhar could not be believed and that the evidence of Rameshwar (D. W. 2) who stated that he was the sister's son of Maheep should be accepted. He accordingly came to the conclusion that the pedigree given in the plaint was not complete and that it was proved that the plaintiffs were not the next reversioners since Gajadhar's sister's son is alive. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

[4] The plaintiffs went up in appeal and the lower appellate Court accepted the findings of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal. The judgment of the lower appellate Court is not at all satisfactory. It contains a full recital of the facts and the pleadings but it gives no reasons whatsoever why the evidence of one set of witnesses is accepted and that of the other set rejected. Its findings are given in two brief paragraphs which read as follows:

"I think the lower Court has rightly believed the evidence of the defendants and was perfectly justified in rejecting the testimony of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had no doubt concealed the name of Sita daughter of Mahip and their denial of the daughter of (Sic) Sita and her son shows their guilty mind".

"I agree with the lower Court and hold that Gajadhar had a sister and her son is Rameshwar (D. W. 2). Therefore the plaintiffs in view of the amendment in Hindu Law cannot be the nearest reversioners of Gajadhar."

This is a very unsatisfactory judgment since it gives no reasons whatsoever for the conclusions at which the Court has arrived. Order 20 Rule 4, sub-rule (2) requires a Court not only to state the points for determination and the decision thereon but also to give the reasons for such a decision. In the case of findings of fact arrived at by Courts of first appeal this is all the more necessary because those findings are binding on the Court of second appeal and it is necessary that, if such a matter comes before a Court of second appeal, that Court should be able to judge whether the first appellate Court has applied its mind to a consideration of the evidence or not. The learned Civil Judge has not even mentioned what is the evidence supporting the finding at which he has arrived or why he has rejected the evidence of the plaintiffs.

[5] In these circumstances I have been through the evidence of all the witnesses and I have come to the conclusion that the consideration of that evidence by the trial Court is full and complete and that it has given sufficient reasons for rejecting the statements of the plaintiffs' witnesses. Ram Sarmukh (P. W. 1) has clearly stated in his examination-in-chief that he does not know anything about women. His evidence, therefore, cannot prove that Gajadhar did not leave a sister. Sabaraj (P. W. 2), who is plaintiff 1, has no doubt stated that Gajadhar left no sister but his evidence, apart from being interested, cannot be accepted because he also states that Maheep left no daughter although the documentary evidence on the record, EX. A3, shows that Maheep left a daughter, Mst. Sita. The Munsif was quite right in coming to the conclusion that P. W. 2 was concealing the existence of females and his evidence on the question of the existence of a sister of Gajadhar could not be accepted. This is the only evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiffs and it is not sufficient to discharge the burden which lay upon them not only to prove their own pedigree but also to establish that there are no nearer heirs in existence. This is, however, not the only evidence because the defendants have produced Rameshwar who states that he is the son of Gajadhar's sister. His evidence has been accepted by the learned Munsif and there does not appear any reason why it should be rejected. That being so there is evidence to establish that, as a matter of fact, Gajadhar had a sister and that sister's son is still alive.

[6] The result is that the plaintiffs have failed to substantiate their claim of being the nearest reversioners of Gajadhar and their suit was rightly dismissed by the learned Munsif.

[7] This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

S. C. Dass and J. Chandra — for Appellants.

Ghulam Imam — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of the decree passed by the Courts below against the appellants. The respondent, who is the taluqdar of the Mahmudabad estate, sued the appellants, husband and wife, for demolition of a new wall they had constructed in the open space in front of their house in Sheikhupur, a hamlet of Bilauli Bazar, pargana Mahmudabad. The defence was that the land was the joint sahan of the defendants and one Bisheshwar, not a party to the suit.

[2] The trial Court held that the land on which the wall had been raised was not the sahan darwaza of the defendants and decreed the suit. The learned District Judge differed from this finding and held that it was the joint sahan darwaza of the defendants and Bisheshwar. He, however, took the view that it was not their exclusive door yard (sahan darwaza). It is difficult to understand the significance of this finding. The map prepared by the commissioner shows that the defendants' house is to the south and the land which was used as sahan darwaza by them is to the north. To the west of this land is the house of Bisheshwar. It is obvious from a look at the map and the land lying to the east of Bisheshwar's house and to the north of the defendants' house was used jointly by the owners of the two houses as their sahan darwaza. The other finding at which the learned Judge arrived is that the construction of the wall 5 feet high does not conduce to the better enjoyment of sahan darwaza, and consequently the defendants were not entitled to construct this wall without the permission of the zamindar. Reliance was placed on Ex. 2 by the defendants as showing that having accepted Rs. 10 as damages, the plaintiff was estopped from suing for the demolition of the wall. The learned Judge held that it was merely a fine in the nature of illegal exaction for constructing the wall without the permission of the zamindar but it did not amount to a condonation of the unauthorised act and created no estoppel.

[3] In appeal it has been contended before me that the wall was necessary for the better enjoyment of the sahan darwaza in that it secured privacy to the inmates of the house as against Bisheshwar's house. The map shows that there is a thatched chabutra to the north of the defendants' house and in front of this is the sahan darwaza. From the point at which the chabutra ends the wall from south to north is 31 feet 5 inches long, 1 foot 2 inches wide and 5 feet high. On the west of this wall is a drain running across the wall. The distance between Bisheshwar's house and this wall at the southern point is reduced to 4 feet and 3 inches while at the northern point it is 7 feet 5 inches. This has probably given cause for dissatisfaction to Bisheshwar who, according to the defendants, is the cause for the institution of the present suit. This may or may not be so, but the fact remains that the construction of the wall has left a large portion for use as sahan darwaza to the defendants and comparatively very little to Bisheshwar. The fact that the defendants wanted to secure privacy for this courtyard is no ground for holding that they could raise the wall without the permission of the zamindar. In 3 O. W. N. 475,[1] Gokaran Nath Misra J., held that where a tenant has been in possession of land lying in front of his house as his sahan darwaza for over 30 years, this long enjoyment gives him a right to retain the land in his possession for being enjoyed as such and the proprietor is to be deemed in proprietary possession but not entitled to eject the tenant by taking actual possession, though the tenant has no right to put up any structure thereon without the express permission of the landlord. At page 481 of the report the learned Judge observed:

"It is one thing for a tenant to remain in enjoyment of the land as open space in front of his house and it is quite a different thing to put up structures on it or to enclose it by means of walls. The landlord may not object to his use of the open land situate in the abadi of a village, of which he happens to be the proprietor, but that would not give a right to the tenant to put up structures upon that piece of land and the landlord would be legitimately entitled to his remedy if he claimed it by coming to the Court for a relief to the effect that the structures complained of may be demolished."

At the conclusion of the judgment, the learned Judge observed as follows:

"She (the zamindar) will however be deemed to be in proprietary possession of the land and the defendant will have no right to put up any structures thereon without the express permission of the plaintiff."

This case was followed by a Bench of which the leaaned Judge was a member in 3 O. W. N. 937.[2]

[4] These cases were not referred to by Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava C. J. in 1937 O. W. N. 764[3] when he held that a kachcha chabutra built by a tenant on the land used by him as sahan darwaza did not constitute any infringement of the rights of the proprietor and did not give him any cause of action to recover possession of the land. In that case the defendant who had built a chabutra also relied on the words of the permission granted by the zamindar and it was held by the learned Chief Judge that the words "makan waghaira" might well include the construction of a chabutra for the better enjoyment of the sahan.

[5] The learned counsel for the appellants referred to a decision of Ziaul Hasan J. in 1938 O. W. N. 285,[4] where the learned Judge allowed a verandah built by a tenant without permission of the zamindar to stand on condition of paying compensation and did not order demolition as a matter of equity. This decision was, however, reversed in appeal: vide 1942 O. W. N. 113.[5]

[6] Reliance has been placed on a decision of Kidwai J., reported in 1946 O. W. N. 364.[6] There the suit was brought by the plaintiffs for demolition of the constructions made by the defendants on their (plaintiffs') sahan darwaza. The learned Judge relying on a number of cases, including the decision of Gokaran Nath Misra J., held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief. In the course of the judgment the learned Judge observed that a tenant may be in possession of land greatly in excess of his requirements or for enjoyment of his house, but that does not mean that he can raise any structure upon the land. As was rightly pointed out by the learned Judge, the question is not whether he has a large or small piece of land in his possession but the question is whether he has been in the enjoyment of the land, large or small, for 12 years. This case, therefore, does not help the appellants.

[7] Lastly it was urged that EX. 2, the inspection note prepared by the manager of the estate, amounted to a condonation of the defendants' act. I cannot agree. I have examined the contents of the note and find that RS. 10 were realised as a sort of fine for building the wall without permission, but there is nothing whatever to suggest that the manager acquiesced in the construction upon payment of that amount. Indeed this very note shows that Chandrika Prasad had apologised for his mistake and had undertaken to have the wall demolished. This note further shows that Bisheshwar who had built a room without permission paid a heavier amount and was allowed to retain the room. I quite agree with the Courts below in holding that EX. 2 creates no estoppel.

[8] The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

[9] As the appeal has been dismissed, stay order dated 15-11-1946, passed on civil miscellaneous application NO. 713 of 1946, is hereby vacated.

Second Appeal No. 263 of 1947, Decided on 7-5-1947, from decree of Addl. Civil Judge, Lucknow, D/- 8-1-1947.

Defence of India Rules (1939), R. 81 (2) (c) (ii)— Rules under framed by District Magistrate, Lucknow, Rr. 6 and 7— Scope and effect.

Rule- 6 and 7, unlike S. 3, U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947, do not prohibit the institution of a suit for ejectment but only prohibit the actual ejectment. In other words, a decree may be passed in a suit for ejectment but at the time the decree-holder seeks to execute his decree the Court will consider the provisions of these rules and will not evict if the conditions laid down in them are fulfilled: 1944 O. W. N. (H. C.) 272, Foll. [Para 3]

Case referred:—

1. ('44) 1944 O. W. N. (H. C.) 272, Makhan Lal v. Shankaral.

Hyder Husain and Govind Behari Lal— for Appellants.

N. Banerji— for Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellants are the owners of a house situated on Capper Road, Lucknow, of which the respondent is in possession as a tenant paying a monthly rent of Rs. 69/-. The rent of the house for the period beginning with 1st September 1945 and ending with 31-3-1946, was in arrears. Consequently, on the 23-4-1946, the appellants issued a notice on the respondent under section 111, clause (h), T. P. Act, determining the lease and asking the respondent to vacate the house by 31-5-1946 (vide EX. 1). Thereafter they instituted a suit for the arrears of rent due, in the Court of Small Causes at Lucknow, on 26-4-1946, and their suit was decreed on 17-5-1946. The decree allowed monthly instalment of Rs. 69/-, the first instalment falling due on 17-6-1946.

[2] The plaintiff instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises on 1st June 1946, for possession of the house by ejectment of the defendant. The defendant pleaded that the arrears had merged in the decree of the Small Cause Court and that consequently, he was not in arrears with regard to the rent at the date of the suit. He, therefore, pleaded that the suit should not have been instituted without the permission of the District Magistrate as provided for in the rules made under the Defence of India Act. The Munsif, South Lucknow, overruled this plea and decreed the suit. The defendant went up in appeal and the learned Additional Civil Judge of Lucknow accepted his plea in the appeal and set aside the decree of the Munsif.

[3] The plaintiffs have now come up in second appeal and two points are raised on their behalf: Firstly, that the question of permission of the District Magistrate does not arise at this stage, and, secondly, that the opinion of the lower appellate Court that arrears of rent in respect of which a decree had been passed ceased to be arrears is not justified in law. The rules upon which the respondent relies for his contention that no suit can be brought for eviction unless there are arrears due for more than fifteen days at the date of the institution of the suit are rules 6 and 7 made by the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow on 24-4-1944. These rules unlike S. 3, U. P. Temporary Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947, do not prohibit the institution of a suit for ejectment but only prohibit the actual ejectment. This has been held by the Allahabad High Court in 1944 O. W. N. 272[1] to mean that a decree may be passed in a suit for ejectment but that at the time that the decree-holder seeks to execute the decree the Court will consider the provisions of these rules and will not evict if the conditions laid down in them are fulfilled. I see no reason to doubt the correctness of this view and, following the decision in that case, I have come to the conclusion that the learned Additional Civil Judge has erred in not decreeing the suit for ejectment. His judgment must, therefore, be set aside

[4] In this view of the law it is not necessary for me to consider whether an arrear which has merged in a decree still remains an arrear or not. That is a question which the Court executing the decree for ejectment will, no doubt, consider if it is called upon to do so Moreover, a new law, viz., The United Provinces (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947, has been passed dealing with such matters and the Court executing the decree will also have to consider the provisions of this Act.

[5] I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and decree the suit of the plaintiffs for ejectment. The appellants will get their costs throughout.

No doubt a declaratory relief simpliciter against a third party cannot properly be granted in a suit under S. 92, but there may be cases in which some of the reliefs properly claimed may be implicit and inevitable. For example, a Court framing a scheme for management of the trust property cannot properly do so without first determining what is or is not the trust property to be administered. Consequently declaratory relief to that extent is implicit in such an enquiry. [Para 23]

Judgment. – This appeal arises out of a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C. It was instituted by Ram Lal Dass and Radhika Dass, Bairagis, against Mahant Moti Dass, Shyam Raj Dass and Raja Ambika Prasad Narain Singh of Mankapur. The said Raja died during the pendency of the suit and his legal representative Raja Raghvendra Pratap Singh was substituted in his place.

[2] The plaintiffs based their suit upon the allegation that defendants 1 and 2 were the managing mahants and had mismanaged the trust and that defendant 3, the Raja of Mankapur was impleaded because he was in wrongful possession of two villages, namely, Baikunthpur and Kaharjot,which according to the plaintiffs are property dedicated to the Asthan the subject-matter of the suit. The Raja of Mankapur in para. 27 of his written statement, pleaded than the villages Baikunthpur and Kaharjot are it possession of Sri Radha Krishna and Ram Janki of Ajodhya and Mankapur temples, who were necessary parties to the suit and that he himself was only a sarbarakar on behalf of the said temples and had nothing to do with the property. Consequent upon this pleading defendants 4 and 5 were brought on the record as defendants, who are now appellants 2 and 3. The plaintiff sought the following reliefs: (1) That defendants 1 and 2 the existing mahants be removed from the office of mahant and the plaintiffs or any of them be appointed in their place. (2) That all the trust properties mentioned in list A attached to the plaint be vested in the new mahant and the defendants be directed to make over their possession to him. (3) That a scheme be drawn up and settled for the due management of the entire trust properties mentioned in list "A" attached to the plaint including villages Baikunthpur and Kahariot as appertaining to Asthan Madhsagar and Govardhan situate in Gonda City and also for the due performance of the worship and other religious ceremonies connected with the temple mentioned above. On the pleadings of the parties the learned Additional Civil Judge, Gonda, who tried the case, framed the following issues: (1) "Are ths villages, Baikunthpur and Kaharjot dedicated to Asthan Madhsagar, Gonda, and is the compromise (Ex. 5) for that reason invalid? (2) Have defendants 1 and 2 mismanaged the dedicated property and made defalcations as alleged? (3) Can the suit for recovery of possession of village Baikunthpur and Kaharjot as brought against defendants 3 to 5 be joined in this suit which is primarily against defendants 1 and 2 under S. 92, Civil P. C.? (4) Does the sanction of the Advocate-General as obtained by the plaintiffs, entitle them to sue defendants 4 and 5? (5) Is the suit for recovery of possession of village Baikunthpur and Kaharjot barred by time? (6) To what relif, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled, and against which defendants. and which party?"

[3] With regard to issue No. 2, defendants 1 and 2, who were affected by it, put up no contest. Defendant 2 disclaimed all interest in the management of the Asthan and defendant 1 agreed that the new scheme of management be drawn up under S. 92, Civil P. C. The main contest in the suit was confined to the subject-matter of issues 1 and 3.

[4] Before we deal with the controversy raised, it is necessary to state briefly the facts in the case. The subject-matter of the trust relates to a temple known as Asthan Madhsagar Govardhan. Admittedly this is a very old temple and the Asthan possesses considerable property which is managed by the presiding Mahant of the Asthan. It is established that village Baikunthpur was conveyed by Thakurain Gajraj Kuer, wife of Bhaiya Chandrika Bakhs Singh, by two shankalapnamas, EX. 8 and EX. 9, and has ever since been in the possession of the Mahants of the Asthan till shortly after the death of Mahant Priya Dass. A reference to the pedigree on page 38 of PART III of the Paper-Book shows that Thakurain Gajraj Kuer's husband, Bhaiya Chindrika Baksh Singh, was connected with the Raja of Mankapur by virtue of descent from a common ancestor, namely, Raja Azmat Singh, in other words, he was a distant cousin some three or four degrees removed of Raja Raghuraj Singh of Mankapur. The other property, namely, Kaharjot, had been in possession of the Mahants of the Asthan for over a centuary and a half.

[5] After the death of Thakurain Gajraj Kuer, Raja Raghuraj Singh and his wife Jageshar Kunwar instituted a suit against the then presiding Mahant and others for recovery of the property, subject-matter of the shankalapnama on the ground that Thakurain Gajraj Kuer had only a life estate in the property in suit and therefore the transfer thereof after her lifetime was of no effect. This suit was dismissed, vide EX. 16, the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner wherein Thakurain Gajraj Kuer, was held to possess proprietary rights. It also appears that at one time Raja Pirthipat Singh one of the ancestors of defendant 3 had also laid claim but unsuccessfully, to village Kaharjot.

[6] On the death of Mahant Priya Dass, the last undisputed Mahant of the Asthan in the suit in the year 1927, a dispute arose between defendant 1 and Mahant Oudh Behari Dass whose chela is defendant 2. It is alleged that Oudh Behari Dass had been put up to claim succession to the gaddi by Raja Raghuraj Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of defendant 3. In the mutation proceedings which ensued not only the two rival Mahants who claimed succession to the gaddi, asked for mutation in their favour, respectively, but Raja Raghuraj Singh also claimed mutation of villages Baikunthpur and Kaharjot in his name. The claim of Raja Raghuraj Singh was rejected by the mutation Court and his appeal against that order was also rejected by the Commissioner.

[7] It appears that when the appeal between the two rival Mahants came up for hearing before the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, a compromise was submitted to the learned

Commissioner to which Raja Raghuraj Singh was also a party. The learned Commissioner rejected the compromise because in his opinion the effect of the compromise would have been the transfer of the two villages, namely, Baikunthpur and Kaharjot, to the Raja ; whereupon the parties to that appeal withdrew the appeal and later submitted a compromise in the mutation Court on the basis of which the names of both the Mahants were entered in respect of the property of the Asthan, and villages Baikunthpur and Kaharjot were entered in the name of Raja Raghuraj Singh. It appears that by the petition of compromise, EX. 5, the two properties in dispute were dedicated to defendants 4 and 5, the temples in Mankapur and Fyzabad, respectively, and Raja Raghuraj Singh was constituted the sarbarakar of the two temples. It may be mentioned that both these temples are private temples of the Raja of Mankapur. The matters stood thus till the present suit was instituted, and the transfer of the trust property by the two Mahants to Raja of Mankapur is one of the misfeasances alleged in the suit. The learned Judge in the trial Court held that all the property mentioned in the list annexed to the plaint, including villages Baikunthpur and Kaharjot, were trust property and drew up a scheme for future management of the trust property. He further held that in a suit framed under S. 92, Civil P. C., a decree for possession of trust property in the hands of a third person could not be granted.

[8] In the present appeal the learned counsel for the appellant has raised only two contentions. The first is that the property in dispute was not dedicated to Asthan Madhsagar Govardhan but was the private property of the presiding Mahant and consequently the successors of the Mahant Priya Dass were within their right to transfer the property to anyone whom they liked and therefore the compromise whereby these properties had been transferred was valid. The second contention is that in a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., strangers to the trust were not necessary or proper parties, nor can any relief in the nature of declaration or possession can be granted in such a suit. These two contentions are therefore to be examined with reference to the evidence on the record.

[9] The answer to the first contention depends upon the interpretation of the two shankalapnamas, EX. 8 and EX. 9. By EX. 8, Thakurain Gajraj Kuer purported to transfer 75 bighas and 18 biswas of land in village Baikunthpur to "Baba Baldeo Dass, Chela of Mahant Ranchhor Dass, caste Faqir Bairagi occuption poojapat, resident of Asthan Modhsagar, situate in Gonda City, for the purposes of meeting the expenses of worship of Sri Gobardhan Nathji." This shankalapnama EX. 8, was executed on 22-2-1888, and registered. Later Thakurain Gajraj Kuer executed the shankalapnama, EX. 9, on 16-9-1890 and registered it, whereby she transferred the entire village Baikunthpur to "Mahant Baldeo Dass aforesaid for bhog of Sri Thakurji Gobardhan Nath Asthan Madhsagar." In both these deeds after declaring the purpose for which the transfers were being made the following words occur :

"and put the said Mahant in proprietary possession like myself from today the date of the execution of the said deed and shall get the mutation effected after the completion of the registration. If there be any objection on my part then Babu Mahant Baldeo Dass shall be authorised to get mutation effected in his name by a competent Court and having entered into possession and occupation of the entire said muafi with the exception of the land which has been exempted may always remain in possession and occupation as muafidar till the lifetime of me the executant and may appropriate all the collections and after the death of me the declarant executant whatever arrangement in respect of the muafi land be made by the Government (by way of assessment) he should pay it and bring the collections in his use. The said Mahant has now obtained proprietary right and became responsible for the entire loss and profits."

[10] It must be explained that the words "with the exception of the land which has been exempted" refer to the entire property exempted from Government revenue. It appears that the settlement Court had declared the village to be free from revenue during the lifetime of Thakurain Raghuraj Kuar.

[11] It is strenuously contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that notwithstanding the declaration of the purpose for which the transfer was being made, namely, in EX. 8, "for the purposes of meeting the expenses of worship of Sri Gobardhan Nathji" and in EX. 9 "for bhog of Sri Thakurji Gobardhan Nath Asthan Madhsagar" both these deeds purport to convey full proprietary rights personally to the Mahant, and therefore the property in suit cannot be held to be dedicated to the Asthan. It is argued that as Mahant Baldeo Dass's occupation in life was the worship and service of the temple the lady thought that the income from the property would be devoted to the temple; and she did not intend to dedicate the property to the Asthan but intended that the Mahant should use it as his own in any manner he pleased.

[12] We find ourselves unable to accept this contention. If the intention of the lady had been as interpreted by the learned counsel for the appellant, she would never have used the words in EX. 8, "for the purposes of meeting the expenses of worship of Sri Gobardhan Nathji" or in Ex. 9, "for bhog of Sri Thakurji Gobardhan Nath Asthan Madhsagar." Upon a reasonable construction of these two documents we are of the opinion that she clearly intended to dedicate the property to the Asthan and as the management of such property had to be carried on through some human agency she used the words that she was conferring proprietary rights upon the Mahant. We are clearly of the opinion that notwithstanding the words of limitation upon which the learned counsel for the appellant has laid so much stress the lady intended to create a trust in favour of the Asthan. In Ex. 8, the words "in time of need he may make a transfer of it to another person" would never have been inserted if the lady had not intended to create a trust. We are in complete agreement with the finding of the Court below and hold that village Baikunthpur was trust property.

[13] With regard to village Kaharjot, the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is even less plausible. There is no dispute that this property had been held by the Mahants of Asthan Madhsagar Gobardhan for over a century and a half. Exhibit 17 is a copy of the plaint filed by Mahant Ranchhor Dass in the settlement Court in 1871. The parties to that suit were Ranchhor Dass versus Raja Pirthipat Singh of Mankapur and his wife. Mahant Ranchhor Dass, in that suit, claimed the property in village Kaharjot on the allegation that it had been given by Nawab Shujauddaula as muafi for the expenses of the Thakurdwara. Exhibit 18 is the statement of Mahant Ranchhor Dass in that suit; its translation in the Paper Book is somewhat confusing. We, therefore, propose to retranslate it in this judgment. It is as follows:

"My name is Ranchhor Dass Bairagi, Guru's name Narain Dass, caste Bairagi, resident of Gonda proper, aged 40 years. I state that the above named property had been held in an enquiry in 1859 to be revenue free during my lifetime and that it is a gift by Nawab Shujauddaula Bahadur for the expenses of Thakurdwara situate in Gonda, which is subject matter of a shankalap and is a muafi, and up till today my predecessors-in-interest and I have been in possession of this property without payment of rent. Now that permanent settlement is taking place I pray that my name should be entered in the papers as a proprietor and that after my death, whatever revenue is assessed, my successors will pay from the income of the property and after payment of such Government dues they will continue to utilize or spend the remaining profits on the Thakurdwara."

The settlement Court accepted the claim of Mahant Ranchhor Dass and passed a decree in his favour. The judgment, Ex. 2, of the settlement Court shows that that decree was passed on the statement of Ranchhor Dass, which is virtually embodied in the judgment.

[14] The learned counsel for the appellant has argued that it is impossible that Nawab Shujauddaula, who was a Muhammadan ruler, would dedicate any property to a Hindu deity; it must, therefore, have been a personal gift to the Mahant of the Asthan and as much it was the property of the Mahants and not the subject-matter of the trust. We do not find ourselves impressed by this argument. Whatever may have been the nature of the gift by Nawab Shujauddaula it is beyond any doubt that the gifted property was, from the outset, regarded as trust property dedicated to the Asthan by all the succeeding Mahants. Were it not so, Mahant Ranchhor Dass would not have made the statement to which reference has already been made. But even if the argument, that a Mohammadan ruler in the 18th century would not have dedicated property to a Hindu deity, because such an act is repugnant to Islamic concepts, be accepted it does not, in our opinion, affect its present character. The property was admittedly given by Nawab Shujauddaula to the original donee for charitable purposes, who could and in fact did dedicate it to the temple. This is evidenced by the fact that every succeeding Mahant had dealt with it as a trust property and there is not the slightest suggestion that at any time any of the Mahants had used it in a manner inconsistent with it being a trust property. This being so, the strongest possible presumption arises that the property in question was dedicated to the Asthan. But assuming, however, that the property in dispute until the time of Mahant Ranchhor Dass though treated as trust property, was in fact the private property of the Mahants, we are of the opinion that the statement and declaration in the Settlement Court by Ranchhor Dass in 1871 on the basis of which he obtained a decree constituted a trust and dedication to the Asthan; and all his successors were bound to hold it as such. It may be noted that the defendants 1 and 2 admitted in the trial Court that both the properties which they allowed to go out of their possession by compromise are dedicated to the Asthan Madhsagar Govardhan. For the reasons given above we are of the opinion that the property in village Kaharjot was the property of the Asthan at the time when the dispute arose on the death of Mahant Priya Dass.

[15] With regard to the second contention relating to the misjoinder of parties and the relief sought, the learned counsel for the appellant has mainly relied on two rulings. One of them is reported in 10 Rang. 342[1] wherein it was held that:

"The scope and effect of S. 92, Civil P. C., is to provide means for obtaining the directions of the Court in connection with matters relating to the administration of public trusts, and for exposing the malpractices of defaulting or fraudulent trustees. Issues relating to the rights of third parties are outside its scope, and the plaintiffs in a suit framed under S. 92 are not entitled to claim against strangers to the trust either a declaration of title or possession or any other relief. Such persons are not necessary or proper parties to a suit framed under this section."

The other case upon which great reliance is placed by the learned counsel for the appellant is reported in 55 I. A. 96.[2]

[16] The ruling of the Rangoon High Court undoubtedly supports the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant, but the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 55 I. A. 96,[2] in our opinion, does not decide the point at issue. The facts in the latter case were that in the year 1910 a suit was filed in the Court of the District Judge of the 24 Parganas with the sanction of the Advocate-General under S. 92, Civil P. C., by some Mohammadan plaintiffs against one Rukia Bibi as defendant on the allegation that Rukia Bibi was mutwalli of certain properties which had been dedicated to a mosque, and prayed for her removal and for settlement of a scheme for the management of the said properties. The plaint in that suit was subsequently amended by the addition of all the heirs of Mohammad Jan who, it is said, had made a wakf of the properties in suit, and a further prayer for declaration that the property in suit was wakf property and not the property in suit of the defendants. No sanction of the Advocate-General was obtained for these amendments. Some time later a petition of compromise was filed in the suit on behalf of six out of the seven plaintiffs the effect of which was that the mosque and some portion of the property was to be held wakf and the remaining property in suit was allowed to be retained by some of the heirs of Mohammad Jan, the original wakif. The rest of the petition dealt with the admission of new mutwallis and future succession of mutwallis. In the year 1918 some five Mohammadans of the neighbourhood again agitated the matter by filing a suit for declaration that the property, subject matter of the suit of 1910, was wakf property and the defendants be restrained from obtaining possession either directly or from realizing rents of the said lands. The defence in the suit was (1) that the lands in suit were not wakf; (2) that the suit was not maintainable by virtue of S. 92, sub-s. (1), as no sanction of the Advocate-General had been obtained and the suit was not instituted in the District Judge's Court, and (3) that the plaintiffs were barred by the rule of res judicata in view of the suit filed in the year 1910.

[17] Their Lordships of the Privy Council, as indicated in the head-note, held that:

"A suit for a declaration that property belongs to a wakf can be maintained by Mohamedans interested in the wakf without the sanction of the Advocate-General. Section 92, Civil P. C., 1908, makes the sanction of the Advocate-General necessary only in the case of a suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-s. (1) under heads (a) to (g). Upon general principles of construction the words as to "further and other relief" in head (h) are used in connection with the specified heads (a) to (g), not in connection with the words "in the case of any alleged breach, etc.," at the beginning of the sub-section. Further, the contrary construction would cut down substantive rights which existed before the enactment of 1908, and a Code regulating procedure should not be construed as having that effect in the absence of express words.

Where in a suit, brought with the sanction of the Advocate-General, to remove the mutwalli of a wakf, there has been added (without sanction) a claim to a declaration that certain property belongs to the wakf and not to strangers to the trust then added as defendants, a compromise decree declaring that part of the property is wakf does not bar by res judicata a subsequent suit by persons not parties to the former suit for a declaration that the whole property is wakf; the additional relief prayed not being within S. 92, the suit ceases to that extent to be one of a representative character, and S. 11, Explanation 6, of the Code does not apply."

[18] From the foregoing it is clear that the issues involved in the case had no resemblance to the issues raised in the present case, nor do we understand from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council that where a person is in possession of trust property, which he does not claim to have come by bona fide and for valuable consideration without notice of the trust he cannot be made a party to the suit. We are therefore of the opinion that the case reported in 55 I. A. 96[2] does not help the appellants' case. It is true that there has been considerable divergence of views among the various High Courts in India on the question whether a third party, not in any way connected with the trust, can be properly made a party in a suit framed under S. 92, Civil P. C., but in our view the rulings supporting the law propounded by the learned counsel for the appellants are based on the facts in those particular cases. There are several recent authorities which have expressed the contrary view and which may now be examined.

[19] In 47 ALL. 867[3] a Divisional Bench consisting of Sulaiman and Daniels JJ. have held that:

"Where in a suit instituted according to the provisions of S. 92, Civil P. C., it is found that the persons named as defendants are mere trespassers having no claim to be considered as trustees of any sort, it is still the duty of the Court to go on with the suit, and if it finds that the property in suit is trust property it can appoint new trustees; but it cannot, in a suit under S. 92 of the Code, pass a decree for the ejectment of the defendants as trespassers."

The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in arriving at this decision referred to several rulings: 19 A. L. J. 236,[4] 41 Cal. 749[5], 33 ALL. 660[6] and 35 Bom 470.[7]

[20] In 39 C. W. N. 1103 : A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 805[8] a Divisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court consisting of D. N. Mitter and Rau JJ. held that:

"In a suit under S. 92 it is competent for the Court to decide the question as to whether the trust in respect of which the suit is brought is a public charitable trust or not so as to attract the application of S. 92 and a separate suit for the declaration that the property is a trust property is not necessary."

and their Lordships further held that:

"Though a stranger to a trust is not a necessary nor a proper party to a suit under S. 92, where the stranger receives money or property from the trustee which he knows to be part of the trust estate and to be paid and handed to him in breach of the trust, he is a constructive trustee of the trust property for the persons equitably entitled and therefore relief against him can be claimed in a suit under S. 92."

[21] To our mind this decision is applicable to the present case. Raja Raghuraj Singh had not a shadow of title to the villages he claimed. His application for mutation had been rejected and later by coercing the two Mahants, who had entered a contest for the succession to the gaddi, he succeeded in getting them to transfer the trust property and dedicate it to two of his own private temples and had himself appointed a trustee of the property so transferred. In our opinion Raja Raghuraj Singh and his successors were clearly constructive trustees of the property which belonged to the Asthan Madhsagar Govardhan and he and defendants 4 and 5 were proper parties to the present suit. It may be mentioned that the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court inter alia considered the case in 55 I. A. 96[2] and were of the opinion that the decision of their Lordships did not cover the point at issue and was therefore no authority for the proposition propounded.

[22] The next case to be considered is reported in A. I. R. 1936 Mad. 449.[9] This was a decision of a Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of Varadachariar and Stoddart JJ. The learned Judges held that:

"A distinction ought to be drawn between a case when an absolute stranger in possession of property alleged to belong to the trust either denies the trust or pleads adverse possession against the trust and one in which a person who has come into possession of the alleged trust property through or in the right of the settlor or of a trustee, denies the existence of the trust or the title of the trust to the property in his possession; it is not right to assimilate the position of the latter to that of a trespasser. The mere fact of a trustee de jure or de facto denying the existence of the trust or the title of the trust to the property in his possession does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 92, Civil P. C."

In this case too 55 I. A. 96[2] was considered and distinguished.

[23] In view of the authorities noticed above we are constrained with due respect to dissent from the law as laid down in 10 Rang. 342.[1] In our opinion the principle enunciated in that case is too narrow and cannot be said to be of general application. Each case must be decided on its own facts and a ruling given on the basis of different sets of facts and circumstances cannot always be held to be applicable to all cases. In a case like the present the impleading of defendants 3 to 5 cannot be said to be improper so as to render the suit bad for misjoinder of parties. With regard to the contention that no relief of declaration could be granted in a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., it may be conceded that declaratory relief simpliciter in such a suit against a third party cannot be properly granted, but there may be cases in which some of the reliefs properly claimed, declaration as to nature of the property may be imlpicit and inevitable. For example, a Court framing a scheme for management of the trust property cannot properly do so without first determining what is or is not the trust property to be administered; consequently declaratory relief to that extent is implicit in such an enquiry. This is what has happened in the present case and we do not think that the learned Judge in the trial Court has intended to go any further.

[24] We are of the opinion that the decision of the learned Additional Civil Judge in the Court below is correct, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

[25] The respondents have preferred cross-objections against the order of the Court below not granting costs against the defendants. The reason upon which the learned Judge in the trial Court refused to grant costs against defendants 1 and 2 was that they had not entered any contest and had admitted the plaintiffs' claim and with regard to defendants 3 to 5 the learned Judge was of the opinion that in the circumstances of the case it will be fair to order that the parties will bear their own costs. We have heard the learned counsel for the cross-objectors and we are of the opinion that the view taken by the Court below is not such as to warrant an interference by us. The cross-objections are dismissed without costs.

H. D. Srivastava—for Respondent.

Judgment.—These two rent appeals arise out of two suits brought by the plaintiff Mirza Mohammad Taqi Khan against Mohammad Shafi for recovery of the arrears of revenue in respect of villages Jalalpur and Deopur in the district of Lucknow for the years 1344 to 1347F. under S. 227, U. P. Tenancy Act. The only question which arises for consideration in these appeals is whether the claim in respect of the arrears for 1944F. was within time on the date of the suits. Both the Courts below have found against the plaintiff, hence these appeals.

[2] The two suits were instituted on 24-6-1940. It is not disputed that the arrears claimed were due. The only question is whether the suits for their recovery were or were not barred by the law of limitation. Section 143, Land Revenue Act, provides that the revenue for any village shall be paid in such instalments to such persons and at such times and places as may be prescribed by rules made under S. 234, and any sum not so paid becomes an arrear of revenue and the persons responsible for it, whether as cosharers or as lambardars, become defaulters. It was admitted that the revenue for these villages was payable in respect of Kharif on 15-11-1936, and for Rabi on 1-5-1937 As already stated, the suits were brought under S. 227, U. P. Tenancy Act. According to entry NO. 12 of the Fourth Schedule of the U. P. Tenancy Act, a suit by a muafidar or assignee of revenue for arrears of revenue due to him as such can be brought within three years from the time when the arrears become due. Thus the claim for arrears due for the Kharif season of 1344F became barred on 16-11-1936, and that for the Rabi season on 2-5-1937.

[3] It was contended, however, that the cause of action having arisen under the Oudh Rent Act, even though the suits were brought under the U. P. Tenancy Act, the period of limitation governing the suits should be that which was available to a plaintiff claiming arrears of revenue under the old Act. Section 132, Oudh Rent Act, provides that a suit for the recovery of an arrear of rent . . . . shall, except in the case mentioned in S. 16, be instituted within three years from the last day of the month of Jeth of the Fasli year in which the arrears fell due. The last day of Jeth of the year 1344F. corresponded to 23-6-1937 and that being a holiday, the suit instituted on the next day, that is 24-6-1937, it was argued, would be within time. It is well settled, however, that no one has a vested interest in the procedural law: see 45 Bom. 365[1] at p 375, 50 ALL. 865[2] and 56 Cal. 1117.[3] It has been held in numerous cases that the law of limitation applicable to any particular suit or proceeding is the law which is in force on the day on which such suit or proceeding is instituted notwithstanding that the cause of action may have arisen before such Act came into force. We will, however, content ourselves with referring only to two cases: 67 I. A. 251[4] and 40 I. A. 74[5] at p. 84. Chitaley and Annaji Rao in their Limitation Act, Vol. 1, at p. 136 have discussed the questions which might arise where a particular provision relating to the law of limitation is repealed by another Act. According to them the following positions may arise:

(1) "Where at the time of the new Act, a suit is barred according to the repealed Act;

(2) Where the suit is within time according to the old Act, but the new Act prescribes a shorter term of limitation than the former Act;

(3) Where the suit is within time according to the old Act but barred according to the new Act and a future date is fixed for its coming into operation and

(4) Where the suit is within time according to the old Act but barred by the new Act, and the new Act comes into force at once."

They refer to the provisions of the General Clauses Act under which where an Act is repealed, unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed; or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation as aforesaid.

[4] The reference in the work just mentioned is to the General Clauses Act 10 [X] of 1897, but the provisions of the U. P. General Clauses Act do not differ materially from the Central Act in this respect.

[5] It was pointed out that in the first case the right of action which is barred by limitation at the time when the new Act comes into force cannot be revived by the change in the law subsequently. In the second case, the general rule stated above with regard to the law of limitation applies, namely, the new Act applies to the proceeding notwithstanding that the period of limitation is shortened by the new Act. The learned Authors proceed to observe:

"The reason is, as has been seen already, that no one has got a vested right in a period of limitation which is but a rule of procedure. When, therefore, at the time the new Act comes into force there is time even according to the new Act within which the suit can be instituted, the new Act will apply."

[6] In the third case the fact that the Legislature has postponed the operation of the new Act shows that it has provided for all possible hardships and consequently the rule is that the new Act applies from the date of its taking effect.

[7] In the fourth case the result of applying the new Act would be to destroy the right to sue which was vested in the plaintiff on the date the new Act came into force. But even an enactment relating to procedure will not operate retrospectively so as to destroy vested rights, whether substantive or remedial. It follows therefore that a suit in such cases can be filed within the time fixed by the old Act.

[8] It will be noted, however, that in the case before us the plaintiff brought the suit under the U. P. Tenancy Act and not under the Oudh Rent Act. Having done so, it is not open to him to avail himself of the period of limitation provided by the Oudh Rent Act, when there is a specific period provided for such a suit by the new Act. It will further be noticed that the U. P. Tenancy Act was passed by the U. P. Legislative Assembly on 24-4-1939, and by the U. P. Legislative Council on 16-9-1939, with certain amendments which were agreed to by the U. P. Legislative Assembly on 3rd and 4th October 1939. The Act received the assent of the Governor of the United Provinces on 6-12-1939, and was published in the U. P. Government Gazette on 16-12-1939. Section 1 (3) of the Act provides that it shall come into force on such date as the Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf. The date fixed for the coming of the Act into force was 1-1-1940. Thus, it will be seen that it did not come into force at once, and the present case is one falling under the third head referred to above. We are, therefore, clear that the decision of the Courts below on the question of limitation cannot be successfully challenged.

[9] Another argument addressed by Chaudhry Akhtar Husain on behalf of the appellant was that his client should get the benefit of Act 4 [IV] of 1937, U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act. Under S. 3 of the said Act in computing the period of limitation for any suit or application of the classes specified in the schedule appended to the Act, instituted or presented after the expiry of that Act, which might have otherwise been instituted or presented during the period that Act remains in force, the period during which the Act remains in force shall be excluded. If the suit had been brought under the Oudh Rent Act it would have been one under S. 108 (18), a suit by muafidars of assignees of revenue for arrears of revenue. Such a suit does not belong to any of the classes specified in the schedule of that Act. No reliance, therefore, can be placed by the appellant upon the provision of that Act. The result, therefore, is that the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Judgment.— There has been a very lengthy litigation between the parties into the details of which it is not now necessary to enter. The suit out of which the present appeal arises was instituted in the revenue Court under S. 183, U. P. Tenancy Act, on the allegation that the plaintiff (respondent) is a statutory tenant of the plot in suit and the defendants had unlawfully dispossessed him from it. The learned Revenue Officer found that the plaintiff's allegations were not established and on 30-9-1942, he dismissed the suit. The plaintiff filed an appeal in the Court of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, on 14-11-1942. It is conceded that 27 days had been spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment from which the appeal was filed and that, consequently, the appeal would have been in time had it been filed in the District Judge's Court in the first instance.

[2] In the Court of the Commissioner it was objected that the appeal lay to the District Judge. After hearing arguments on this point, the Commissioner, on 1st February 1943 ordered the memorandum of appeal to be returned for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff did not take back the memorandum till 24-2-1943, and he filed it in the District Judge's Court the next day. The memoandum of appeal was not accompanied by any application for extension of time under S. 5, Limitation Act but on 4-8-1943, after the appeal had been fixed for hearing on two dates, an objection was taken that it was barred by time and then an application under S. 5, Limitation Act, accompanied by an affidavit, was filed. The proceedings disclose that the learned Civil Judge heard arguments on the question of limitation and thereafter adjourned the case to 9th August for "reply on limitation". On 9th August it is noted "Heard arguments. Judgment reserved". The judgment was delivered on 21-8-1943, and by it not only the question of limitation but the whole case was decided on the merits. The judgment of the trial Court was set aside and the case was remanded with directions to send particular issues to the civil Court for findings. It is this order which is challenged in appeal.

[3] A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies in view of the law laid down in the U. P. Tenancy Act as interpreted by this Court. I have heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, both on the preliminary point and on the merits, and I have come to the conclusion that no matter what my opinion as to the merits of the appeal might be, the preliminary objection must be sustained.

[4] The order which has been passed by the learned Civil Judge may be considered to be an order either under O. 41, Civil P. C. or under S 151, Civil P. C. In either view no appeal lies to this Court. If the order is considered as one passed under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., though it is difficult to see how the order in appeal can be so considered, then it is only under O. 43, R. 1 (u), Civil P. C., that an appeal lies. In 1944 O. W. N. 189[1] this Court has held that, under the Tenancy Act O. 43, R. 1 (u), Civil P. C. only permits appeals from orders passed by an Assistant Collector of the first class or a Collector and not from orders passed by a District Judge or a Civil Judge. The learned counsel for the appellant doubted the correctness of this decision but it is a decision of a Bench of this Court and, if I may say so with respect, I consider that it was rightly decided. Section 271(2), U.P. Tenancy Act, permits an appeal from an order of the nature mentioned in the clause, passed by an Assistant Collector of the first class or a Collector. The existence of a right of appeal from the kind of orders mentioned in this clause generally is clearly inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, and consequently, by reason of S. 243 of the Act, O. 43, R. 1, Civil P. C. can only be applied to the limited extent laid down in S. 271 (2). The learned counsel then urged that the last sentence of the penultimate paragraph of the judgment distinguished that case from the present case because that sentence says: "We also think that the present order is not covered by the word, 'decree' mentioned in S. 269." It is urged that in the present case the decision of the learned Civil Judge amounts to a decree within the meaning of S. 2, (2), Civil P. C., and that, therefore, an appeal does lie from it under S. 269, Civil P. C.

[5] The sentence quoted from the judgment cannot be detached from the context. It only gives an additional reason for the decision as is made clear by the use of the word, "also" and it should not be taken to mean that if an order of remand amounts to a decree an appeal should lie from it. Immediately before that sentence the learned Judges had distinctly said: "The enactment thus draws a distinction between decrees and orders which are mentioned in Ss. 104, 144 or O. 43, R. 1, Civil P. C." This signifies that, although a decision may technically come within the definition of decree contained in S. 2, cl. (2), Civil P. C., if it is of the nature mentioned in S. 47, S. 104, S. 144, or O. 43, R. 1, Civil. P. C., it must be treated as an order and not as a decree for the purposes of an appeal under the U. P. Tenancy Act.

[6] In 1945 O. W. N. 15,[2] with regard to a decision under S. 47, exactly the same argument, as has been advanced in this case, was advanced for the appellant and it was repelled by the learned Chief Judge, who said (at page 86):

"It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the appellate order passed by the District Judge must be taken to be a decree within the meaning of S. 2 (2) Civil P. C. as it was an order on the merits and involved the determination of the question under S. 47. Section 272 clearly forbids an appeal against any order passed in appeal under S. 271, while S. 269 permits an appeal against an appellate decree of the District Judge. I am of opinion that the U. P. Tenancy Act is self-contained in the matter of appeals and draws a distinction between decrees and orders."

(7) Indeed, if the contention of the appellants' learned counsel were accepted every order of remand under O. 41, R. 23, Civil. P. C. would be a "decree" because it is only when the decision of the trial Court is reversed on appeal that a remand takes place and the reversal can only be if the appellate Court decides the question on the merits, i. e., gives an adjudication on one or more of the matters in controversy in the suit. This position is obviously untenable.

(8) Coming now to a consideration of the right of appeal on the assumption that the order of remand is one under S. 151, Civil P. C, it is the decided view of this Court that no appeal lies from such an order. It is only necessary to refer to decisions in 1944 O.W.N. 50[3] and 1944 O.W.N 390,[4] both of which are decisions by Divisional Benches Here again the learned counsel for the appellant sought to draw a distinction between an order of remand pure and simple and an order of remand which decides some point raised. He contends that the latter amounts to a decree. For the reasons which I have given above, I cannot accept this contention.

(9) The result is that the preliminary objection prevails and the appeal must be, and is hereby, dismissed with costs.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S. 45 (2) — Scope of — Order under S. 151, Civil P. C. (1908).

In the case of the Encumbered Estates Act proceedings the scope of S. 45 (2) is very wide and it allows an appeal against any decree or order. These terms are wide enough to include an order under S. 151, Civil P. C. passed in proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act : 30 A. I. R. 1943 Oudh 214, Disting. [Para 4]

S. N. Roy—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Gaya Singh and Rajendrapal Singh applied on 27-10-1936 under S. 4 of the Encumbered Estates Act to the Sub-divisional Officer, Hardoi. The application was in due course transferred to the Special Judge 2nd Grade, Hardoi. There were only two opposite parties, the present respondent and one Mt. Chandra Kuar, wife of Thakur Gaya Singh applicant. On 4-3-1937, a compromise was arrived at between the applicants and the creditor Rai Bahadur Babu Bishun Sarup by which it was agreed that a decree for Rs. 11,500 in all be passed in favour of Babu Bishun Sarup in accordance with the terms of the compromise. The Court passed a decree in terms of the compromise and discharged Mt. Chardra Kuar from the array of parties. It appears that although no proceedings under Ss. 11 and 14, Encumbered Estates Act had been taken up till then nor had any property of the applicants been published in the Gazette, the Special Judge forwarded the decree to the Sub-divisional Officer and also entered in the rubkar some property as being liable to attachment, sale and mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the landlords applicants. Thereafter Babu Bishun Sarup applied under S. 151, Civil. P. C. and S. 19, Encumbered Estates Act, to the Special Judge pointing out the defects that had occurred and praying either that the decree passed under S. 11 on the basis of the mortgage should be set aside or that it should be declared by the Court what property is liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the landlords applicants. The learned Special Judge held that he had no power to entertain this application and he accordingly dismissed it although he thought that the ends of justice required him to interfere. He suggested that the Liquidation Officer might order the creditor to move the Special Judge for clarification and for determination of every point mentioned in S. 19. It appears that Mr. Bishan Sarup appealed to the District Judge of Hardoi and that he also made a second application under S. 151, Civil P. C. to the Special Judge praying that the rubkar sent to the Liquidation Officer showing some property as being liable to attachment and sale be amended. On 16-9-1942 the learned Munsif granted this application and amended the rubkar as prayed. Surprisingly the landlords applicants went up in appeal to the District Judge from this order.

(2) The learned District Judge heard both the appeals together and by two orders of 15-12-1942 he allowed the appeal of the landlords applicants as well as of the creditor and remanded the whole proceedings to the Special Judge to take proceedings under Ss. 9 and 11 of the Encumbered Estates Act and then to pass a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise.

(3) The landlords-applicants have now come up in appeal to this Court. Gaya Singh died during the pendency of the appeal and his widow Mt. Chandra Kuar has been brought on the record as one of his heirs, the other heir, Rajendrapal Singh, son of the deceased being already on the record as appellant 2. In appeal it is contended that the order of the learned Special Judge having been passed under S. 151, Civil P. C. it was not open to appeal and the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal under S.45 (2), Encumbered Estates Act. The argument was that an order under S. 151, Civil P. C. is an order not under the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, but one under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the right of appeal is, therefore, governed by that Code The learned counsel for the appellants relied upon 1943 O. W.N. 83[1] for this proposition. That case, however, stands on an entirely different footing. In that case an application was made for review of judgment and the application was disallowed. The party which had applied for review, thereupon, desired to appeal. It was held that since O. 47, Civil P. C. had been applied to proceedings under the Encumbered Estates, R. 7 of that Order was no less applicable than R. 1; and therefore, it was only on the grounds mentioned in R. 7 that appeals could lie. There are some sentences used in the judgment which lend support to the argument of the appellants' learned counsel but they cannot be taken out of the context and made applicable to an entirely different set of facts. The principal ground for holding that R. 7 was applicable was that it was not inconsistent with Encumbered Estates Act.

[4] An order under S. 151, Civil P C., passed in proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act, is no doubt an order passed under the Code of Civil Procedure but that is so only because, by reason of the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, the Code of Civil Procedure has been made applicable. It cannot, therefore, be said that such an order is not passed under the Encumbered Estates Act also and is not appealable under the provisions of that Act. If that was so, then hardly any order in the course of proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act would be an order passed under that Act. At every stage there would be orders under the Code of Civil Procedure and, in that state of affairs it is hardly necessary to incorporate in the Encumbered Estates Act, provisions for appeal and revision except in so far as they determine the forum of appeal. The Encumbered Estates Act does not restrict the right of appeal to the cases mentioned in S. 96 or any other section or Order of the Code of Civil Procedure. It lays down in S. 45, its own scheme of appeals in much wider terms than those contained in the Code of Civil Procedure. In so far as anything in the Code of Civil Procedure conflicts with that scheme it cannot have effect. In 1943 O. W. N. 83[1] it was held that there was nothing in R. 7 of O. 47 which was inconsistent with the provisions of S. 45 and it was for that reason that that rule was made applicable to the cases of appeals from an order rejecting an application for review. An order under S. 151, Civil P. C. is not appealable in civil cases because while S. 96, which provides for appeals from decrees, and S. 104, which provides for appeals from orders, do not contain any provision for appeals from orders passed under S. 151, Civil P.C. A right of appeal being created by statute, it does not exist where it is not conferred by statute. In the case of the Encumbered Estates Act proceedings the scope of S. 45 (2) is very much wider and it allows an appeal against any decree or order. These terms are wide enough to include an order under S. 151, Civil P C., and no reason appears why they should be understood in a restricted sense. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that an appeal did lie from the order of the Special Judge, 2nd Grade, to the District Judge and he committed no error of law in entertaining that appeal. The remand was required to do justice between the parties and there is nothing in conflict with any law in the District Judge having remanded the case.

[5] I accordingly uphold his order and dismiss this appeal with costs. The stay order dated 20-7-1934, is vacated.

Order.— Hiri Lal, the applicant, brought a suit against Chheda, defendant opposite-party, for recovery of Rs. 80 on the basis of a parole debt. On 15-10-1941 the suit was decreed ex parte Chheda applied on 30-10-1941 for setting aside the ex parte decree. On the same day he applied for permission to file a security bond. The permission was granted to him but it cannot be said with certainty whether the Court's order was passed on 30-10-1941 or on the next day. The point, however, is immaterial in view of what followed. Chheda was permitted to file a bond within a week but he got extensions from time to time and eventually filed a bond on 24-11-1941, which was more than 30 days after the order of the Court decreeing the suit After the filing of the bond notice was issued to Hira Lal but he contended that the provisions of S. 17, Small Cause Courts Act, had not been complied with inasmuch as leave for filing the security bond had not been obtained prior to the making of the application for setting aside the ex parte decree. The trial Court found that the application was made on the same day as the application for setting aside the ex parte decree and that permission might well have been granted at the same time. It therefore held that the application for setting aside the ex parte decree had been validly presented. It accordingly set aside the ex parte decree and proceeded to try the suit de novo and dismissed it. Hira Lal has come up in revision and the only point taken by the learned counsel is that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree since the application for setting it aside was not validly presented.

[2] The proviso to S. 17, Cl. (1), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act stipulates that the application for setting aside an ex parte decree should be accompanied either by a deposit of the decretal amount in Court or by such security as the Court may by previous order have directed. This really means not only that the application for leave to file a security bond should have been presented before but that the security itself should be filed at the same time as the application for setting aside the ex parte decree. Before the amendment of S. 17 in 1935 there was a difference of opinion between various Courts. The view that was accepted by this Court: (vide 5 Luck. 294[1]) was that it was sufficient compliance with the proviso if the security was given within limitation. This was also the view held by the Madras High Court This Court has had occasion to consider the effect of the amendment in several cases after 1935. It is not necessary to refer to them all because the law is very clearly enunciated in 1941 O. A. C. C. 151.[2] It was there held :

"Whatever doubt may have existed before the introduction of the amended proviso to S. 17 (1), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, as regards the power of the Court to extend the time for depositing the money or the furnishing of the security it seems to me to be quite clear that the mandatory nature of the amended proviso leaves no room for doubt that the Court has no jurisdiction to grant any extension of time either for making the deposit or for the filing of the security."

The same view has been adopted in 1943 O. A. 321[3] by the same learned Judge. Counsel for the opposite party wished to rely upon 1937 O. W. N. 53[4] and 1936 O. W. N. 688.[5] In those cases however security bonds were actually filed though it was subsequently found that owing to some mistake the security furnished was not sufficient to cover the decretal amount. The Court, therefore, allowed the applicant time to make good the deficiency. This case does not in any way militate against the principle enunciated in the case to which I have referred because in those cases there had been substantial compliance with the provisions of the proviso to S. 17 cl. (1) inasmuch as the security had been given for the performance of the decree of the Court. Both these cases were considered in the case in 1941 O. A. C. C. 151[2] and it was held that the language of the amended proviso now left no room for doubt that the Court had no power to extend time. That being the position the trial Court acted without jurisdiction in setting aside the ex parte decree on an application which must have been deemed to have been filed beyond limitation. I therefore set aside the order of the trial Court, setting aside its own previous ex prate decree. From this it follows that the new decree, which has been passed dismissing the suit, must also be set aside and the previous decree decreeing the suit will be restored. The applicant will get his costs of both the Courts.

Order.— This is a revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. It is directed against an order passed by the learned Temporary Civil and Sessions Judge, Lucknow, under S. 151, Civil P. C. The effect of that order was to set aside the decree passed by him in favour of the defendants-applicants under O. 17, R. 3 and to restore the suit of the plaintiff-opposite party Mt. Nur Zohra Begam.

[2] The suit was for possession of a plot of land situate on Jopling Road by the defendants on a variety of grounds. There were a number of hearings at which the plaintiff's witnesses were examined and her case was closed. The oral evidence of defendants' witnesses was commenced on 16-2-1942. The statement of the second defence witness could not be completed because the plaintiff's counsel had to attend to some professional work in this Court. The case was accordingly adjourned to 17th February but on that date also the plaintiff's counsel was absent. The Court waited till 12 noon, and eventually the witness was discharged. The third witness also could not be cross-examined on account of the absence of the plaintiff's counsel. The defence was then closed and the case was argued. The judgment was pronounced on the same date and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed, special costs being awarded against her under S. 35A, Civil P. C. Subsequently on the same date Nur Zohra Begam applied under S. 151, Civil P. C., for restoration of the case. She alleged that on 17th February a request had been made to the Court to take up the case 15 minutes later and that the refusal on its part to postpone the cross-examination of the two witnesses was unjustified. The plaintiff also preferred an appeal against the decision of the Temporary Civil and Sessions Judge. That appeal was pressed and was dismissed, but before it could be decided the trial Court set aside its judgment of 17-2-1942 and, as stated above, restored the suit to its original number and permitted the plaintiff to cross-examine the last two witnesses.

[3] Ordinarily if a party has another remedy open and it does not adopt it or negligently fails to pursue it relief under Court's inherent powers is not granted in the absence of exceptional or peculiar circumstances. The defendants, however, took up a somewhat untenable position. It was contended by their learned counsel that where another remedy is available the rule that S. 151 should not be applied is absolute. The lower Court refused to accept the proposition which was thus propounded as correct. In this Court the same contention was raised and it was sought to be supported by the decisions reported in A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 495,[1] 9 O. W. N. 430[2] and 1941 O. W. N. 1239.[3] I have examined these cases and find that they do not lay down the rule that the jurisdiction of a law Court to act under its inherent powers is lost if another remedy for the same relief can be pursued. On the other hand, in 17 Luck. 673,[4] a Division Bench of this Court held that the availability of another remedy is not an inflexible bar and does not necessarily prevent a Court from granting reliefs under its inherent powers. In A. I. R. 1943 Oudh 136[5] another Division Bench of this Court said that the view that S. 151 was intended to meet only cases for which no other provision was made in law has not been adopted in this Court.

[4] The learned lower Court gave three reasons for entertaining the application: (1) that the remedy by way of appeal would be costly, (2) that the plaintiff would not get an opportunity to cross-examine witnesses in appeal and the case would have to be argued as it stands on the record, and (3) that the cross-examination of witnesses was essential for testing the credibility of the last two defence witnesses. Obviously these reasons were considered to be exceptional enough to entitle the plaintiff to restoration. The allegation, namely, that the plaintiff made a request for 15 minutes' postponement on 17-2-1942 was not found to be correct. The lower Court was, however, over-borne by the apologetic attitude of the plaintiff's counsel. It said:

"The plaintiff's counsel has come before us in rather a sad and almost repentent mood and has apologized for his absence on 17-2-1942. In reply to our question he says that he had in fact that day sent information to us about his absence—being busy in another Court—through the pairokar of the plaintiff. But unfortunately the pairokar being deaf misunderstood him and did not deliver the message to us."

[5] It seems to me that the rights acquired by the defendants under the decree of 17-2-1942, ought not to have been lightly interfered with merely because the plaintiff's pairokar did not deliver the message to the Court. The learned Judge, however, observed:

"But then in granting this application I do not think that the defendants would be very much prejudiced because in the ordinary circumstances the D. Ws. would not have gone uncross-examined but for the natural disabilities of the pairokar. The counsel has apologised for his mistake, or rather for the mistake of the pairokar. Surely arguments help the Court quite a lot to arrive at findings. We must not forget moreover that justice must be adorned with grace just as it must be tempered with mercy. The plaintiff has not applied as a matter of right but depends only upon the grace of the Court using its inherent powers The jurisdiction under S 151, Civil P. C. is ever-flowing and can never stop as the first words in the Section are, "Nothing in this Code ....." After all, not only must justice be given but the parties must feel that justice has been given The parties must feel that they have been heard."

[6] I find it somewhat difficult to accept as true the story about the pairokar's mistake or his deafness. There is no affidavit of the advocate concerned. The deaf pairokar was not produced in Court to substantiate the case which, it may incidentally be noticed, was not even set up in the application under S. 151, Civil P. C. But assuming that the story is well founded, I am inclined to think that unless the Court had agreed to take up the case at the counsel's convenience, his absence to come to Court till noon could not be justified on any ground.

[7] There is, however, another and a more important reason why the plaintiff's application should have been rejected. It does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned lower Court that an appeal against the decree of 17-2-1942 had already been preferred and was pending decision. It was pressed to conclusion subsequently and was dismissed. The plaintiff's plea, therefore, that the recourse to the other remedy namely that an appeal would be unduly expensive was wholly unfounded. It would further seem that if Nur Zohra Begam had any legitimate ground for complaint she could have asked the appellate Court to remand the case for the cross-examination of the last two defence witnesses and for a fresh judgment. Such a course was apparently not considered necessary. The learned temporary Civil and Sessions Judge was in the circumstances not justified in setting aside his decree and taking up the case from the stage at which the plaintiff's learned counsel had absented himself.

[8] As to Court's jurisdiction to exercise its inherent powers in exceptional cases where another remedy is open, there can scarcely be any doubt but where the other remedy for the same relief has in fact been availed by the parties S. 151, Civil P. C. can no longer be invoked. There was, in my opinion, material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court below. I, therefore, allow the revision and set aside the order, dated 24-3-1942. The defendants-applicants shall get their costs of this Court from the opposite-party.

Order.—One Thakur instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif, Rae Bareli, against Ajodhia, opposite party No. 3, for a sum of Rs. 48. The plaintiff alleged that grove No. 595 situated in village Para Kalan district Rae Bareli, belonged to him and that he was in sole possession of it; that the defendant had purchased 24 Babul trees situated in this grove from the plaintiff for Rs 48 promising to pay the money when the trees were cut: that all the trees had been cut and removed and the price had not been paid. The defendant filed a written statement in which he denied the plaintiff's ownership of the grove. He also denied that he had purchased any trees from the plaintiff. He pleaded that on 15-3-1941, he had purchased 4 Babul trees on plot No. 595 and 16 on plot No. 594 from the Taluqdar owner of the village, Lala Srinath Seth for Rs. 48: that plots Nos. 594 and 595 were in the possession of the Taluqdar and the plaintiff has no concern with them: and that the plaintiff is estopped from asserting that Lala Srinath is the owner in possession of plots Nos. 594 and 595. With his written statement the defendant filed a receipt for Rs. 48 purporting to have been executed by the ziladar of the Taluqdar.

[2] On 17th November issues were framed by the learned Munsif, the first of those issues being as follows:

"Is the plaintiff tenant grove-holder of the plot in suit?"

[3] On 6-1-1942, Lala Srinath applied stating that he had sold the trees, through his servant, to Ajodhia and consequently it was necessary, for a final decision of the dispute, that he should be impleaded as a defendant. The learned Munsif has rejected this application and the Taluqdar has come up to this Court in revision. Thakur is dead and the opposite parties 1 and 2 are his sons and heirs.

[4] An objection is taken that no revision lies. It has, however, been repeatedly held that an order refusing to implead a person as a party under O. 1, R. 10, Civil, P.C. is a case decided and may properly be challenged by an application under S. 115, Civil P. C.: vide 6 O. W. N. 118,[1] 1937 O. W. N. 1118[2] and 1943 O. W N. 138.[3] It was next contended that even if a revision lies the order in the present case was passed by a Court having jurisdiction to pass it and there has been no irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. It is true that it is settled by several decisions that S. 115

"applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it. It is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved: (vide 44 I. A. 261[4] at 267.)

It must, however, be remembered that it has also been laid down that the trial of a case without impleading proper parties may amount to an irregular exercise of jurisdiction: vide 3 O. W. N. 989[5] and 1943 O. W. N. 138[3] at p. 139. Thus, if it is shown that the trial Court has not correctly appreciated the position in the case this Court may interfere with the order in revision.

[5] The lower Court has quite rightly said that it is a settled rule of law that a party should not be added so as to change the nature of the suit. If the addition of the applicant as a party would change the nature of the suit, he cannot be impleaded. It is contended that the addition of the applicant would, as held by the trial Court, result in changing a suit for recovery of the purchase money into a suit to determine title. This contention ignores the fact that in the suit as it is at present framed the question of the title of the plaintiff as a grove-holder (which is the only title he claims—vide the proceedings of 17-11-1941), has already arisen and issue 1 has been specially framed to try this. Moreover the question whether the trees are on plot No. 594 or 595 has also been raised and the Court has appointed a commissioner to determine this. Thus no new question will be raised by the addition of the applicant as a party.

[6] On the other hand, the addition of the applicant is necessary to avoid multiplicity of proceedings and to protect the rights of the present defendant who claims that he has already paid the full price to the rightful owner. If the applicant is not added as a party and the suit succeeds, the defendant will have to pay the price to the plaintiff and it will be only by a separate suit that he will be able to recover the money he has already paid to the applicant. In that suit he will have to prove independently that the trees in fact belonged to Thakur and the decision in the present suit will be of no value for proving this fact. This may result in grave injustice to Ajodhia and it is really in his interests and in order to avoid multiplicity of proceedings that the applicant should be impleaded.

[7] It is difficult to see what advantage the applicant himself will derive by being brought on the record as a defendant. He has already, according to his case, received the price and it is immaterial to him whether the plaintiff gets a decree against Ajodhia or not. He will not be bound by that decree and should as easily defend his title, if and when Ajodhia brought a suit against him. He however, not only applied to the trial Court to be impleaded but has also come up in revision.

[8] In view of what I have stated above it is necessary in order to avoid multiplicity of proceedings on the reasoning of 1943 O. W. N. 138[3] at 139 which is, mutatis mutandis directly applicable to the present case, that the applicant should be impleaded.

[9] I accordingly allow the application with costs and direct that Lala Srinath Seth be impleaded as defendant No. 2 in the suit and the trial Court should proceed to dispose of the case according to law after impleading him.

Judgment.—This is a second civil appeal. The facts are that Bafati brought a suit for possession of Plot No. 297 in village Taj Khanpur, pargana Misranpur, district Sultanpur. Bafati alleged that he was tenant of the Dera estate. Ghulam Abbas, son of defendant 1, was his sub-tenant and he had sued Ghulam Abbas for arrears of rent in respect of the Rabi 1344 Fasli and the whole of 1345 Fasli. Khuda Bux defendant 1 was doing "pairwi" in that case on behalf of Ghulam Abbas, and during the course of this litigation defendant 1 gave out that he had got a registered lease dated 10-2-1938, of the land in suit from the Dera estate. This lease is Ex. A-6. On the basis of this lease the suit of Bafati was dismissed in respect of Rabi 1345 on 11-9-1939. In the present suit Bafati claims that the execution of this lease is illegal and as he has been dispossessed of his land, he sues to recover possession from defendant 1 and the Dera estate, defendant 2. This suit was filed towards the end of October 1939 in the civil Court. Both the defendants filed written statements and took much the same pleas. The main defence was that Bafati was not a tenant, and that even if he was, he had relinquished the land, and thereupon the landlord had given a lease to defendant 1 for planting a grove and building a house. The jurisdiction of the civil Court was also questioned, and it was said that the suit should have been brought under S. 108 (10), Oudh Rent Act, and that as no suit had been brought within time under that section, this suit was time-barred. It was also pleaded that actual possession could not be given to the plaintiff in any case. There was an issue concerning special costs under S. 35-A, Civil P. C.

[2] The trial Court decreed the suit and allowed special costs Rs. 20 to the plaintiff. Defendant 1 went in appeal and his appeal was dismissed.

[3] During the course of the trial in the first Court the U. P. Tenancy Act came into force and it is claimed that by virtue of S. 296 of that Act the case falls under S. 183, U. P. Tenancy Act.

[4] The Court of first appeal has found that the plaintiff was dispossessed by defendant 1 and not by defendant 2, and that defendant 1 is a rank trespasser on the ground that defendant 1

"is a most unscrupulous man and had deceived the Manager, Court of Wards, Deara estate in misrepresenting to him that the plaintiff had relinquished the land and had obtained the patta in his favour fraudulently. In fact the plaintiff never relinquished the land in suit."

[5] The findings of fact are binding upon this Court but the question arises whether these findings can take the case out of the provisions of S. 183, U. P. Tenancy Act, which now applies or, for the matter of that, out of the provisions of S. 108 (10), Oudh Rent Act, which was in force when the suit was filed.

[6] In my opinion these facts can have no such effect.

[7] Though he was deceived, the landlord did "treat the holding as abandoned" (S. 108 (10), Oudh Rent Act) and defendant 1 was "admitted to" and "allowed to retain possession of the holding by the landholder" (S. 183, U. P. Tenancy Act). Such suits are triable under the U. P. Tenancy Act by Assistant Collectors of the first class and appeals lie to the Commissioner.

[8] The wording of S. 290 itself shows that this defect of jurisdiction cannot be cured in cases where a suit is wrongly instituted in a civil Court and an appeal lies to the Commissioner, from the decision of the revenue Court in which it should have been instituted.

[9] In A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 193[1] at p. 194 it was held:

"It has not been contested before us that the initial right of choosing the forum is with the plaintiff. He is to see in which Court his suit would lie, having regard to the facts of his case, which means the allegations in his plaint, and the valuation of the suit. When the plaintiff has chosen his forum, it will be for the Court in which the suit has been filed or application has been made to see whether, on the allegations made in the plaint or application, it is cognizable by it. If the plaint or application be cognizable by that Court, the defence, whatever it may be, will not oust the jurisdiction of the Court to try this suit. It may be that on the facts alleged and established by the defendant, it will be found that the plaintiff's allegations, as made in the plaint, are incorrect or false and that the real relief, which the plaintiff is entitled to get (if any), is not within the jurisdiction of the Court, which is seised of the case, to grant. In such circumstances, the suit will be dismissed, on the ground that the Court is not in a position to grant the relief. This initial position has not been contested before us. In fact the rule is so well established that it is impossible to controvert it."

[10] This was quoted with approval by a recent Full Bench decision of this Court: 1947 O. A. 1.[2] It was also held in that case:

"The provisions of S. 290, U. P. Tenancy Act which bear an objection in an appeal that the suit was taken in the Court of first instance, apply only to suits in which an appeal would lie to the District Judge or to the High Court or to the Chief Court if they had been rightly instituted in the civil or revenue Court."

[11] It follows that the suit must be dismissed since it was brought in the wrong Court and S. 290 cannot cure the defect of jurisdiction.

[12] I, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Court. The suit is dismissed. The appellant will get his costs in all Courts.

The provisions of S. 15 which declare the consequences of non-compliance must be regarded as mandatory and not merely directory. Section 15 must be strictly construed, and if by its force the decree becomes void and the right of pre-emption is lost at the moment when the Court rises on the last date on which the actual payment is to be made, the pre-emptor who should be aware of the procedure of he Court must take good care to see that the payment is not delayed. Where the plaintiff offered the money to the Court Nazir shortly after 3 P. M. on the last day on which payment could be made but the Nazir refused to accept the money.

Held that in view of R. 572 the refusal was wholly unwarranted and since that refusal was the direct and proximate cause for the delay, it could not be allowed to prejudice the plaintiff. [Paras 7 and 8]

Moti Lal Tilhari—for Appellants.

Hyder Husain—for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act. The controversy between the parties to this appeal relates to deposit of pre-emption money, and the question which arises for consideration is whether the sum of Rs. 700 subject to the payment of which within three months of the decree pre-emption was granted was deposited within time. The period expired on 29-11-1940. The plaintiffs-appellants, Bandhu and Jagardeo, presented a tender for Rs. 700 in the Court of the Munsif, North Sultanpur, on 28-11-1940. It was passed the same day and handed over to the appellants, but the money could not be deposited till 29-11-1940, after the Court had risen. The appellants at first attempted to deposit the money in the treasury on 29th of November shortly after 3 P. M. The accounts had by that time closed, and the money could not be taken there. The plaintiffs subsequently approached the Court Nazir twice but there also the offer was refused. Finally they got an application prepared in order to present it in Court but by the time it could be ready the Munsif had risen and left, and the application had, therefore, to be taken to him at his residence. At 5 P. M. the learned Munsif ordered that the money should be received by the Nazir, and the actual deposit was made shortly thereafter on the same date. The vendee when called upon to take the money, however, refused. He contended that the deposit did not comply with the requirements of law.

[2] The decree was passed in accordance with S. 14 which lays down that "If the Court find for the plaintiff, the decree shall specify a day on or before which the pur hase-money or the amount to be paid to the mortgagee shall be paid."

Section 15 then provides that

"If such purchase-money or amount is not paid into Court before it rises on that day, the decree shall become void, and the plaintiff shall, so far only as relates to such sale or mortgage, lose his right of pre-emption over the property to which the decree relates."

[3] The vendee's objection on the basis of the aforesaid sections was that the money was not paid into Court before it rose on 29-11-1940, and the decree in favour of the appellants had, therefore, become void, and the right to pre-empt was lost. This contention was accepted by the learned Munsif as well as by the Court of first appeal. The pre-emptors came up in second appeal, and the case was heard by a learned Single Judge of this Court. At the time of arguments it was urged on appellants' behalf, as it was urged in the Courts below, that the tender having been accepted on 28-11-1940, the payment, though actually made on 29th, must relate back to the date of acceptance. The argument was repelled, but leave to appeal under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act, was granted at the time of delivery of judgment on the oral request of the appellants' learned counsel. The point has been debated before us again.

[4] In support of the contention that the date of tender must be deemed to be the date of actual deposit, it has been urged that the appellants having offered the money by tender on 28th November are not responsible in the absence of any laches on their part for the delay occasioned in the acceptance of the money by Court. The decree, we have already mentioned, prescribed that the payment must be made on or before 29-11-1940, and in default of such payment the suit was to stand dismissed. The mere submission of the tender on 28th November could not, it is obvious, be regarded as payment on that date so as to constitute compliance either with the terms of the decree or of S. 15, Oudh Laws Act. In 23 O. C. 254[1] a learned Judge of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh said that the provisions of S. 15, Oudh Laws Act which declared the consequences of non-compliance must be regarded as mandatory and not merely directory. The facts of the case were somewhat similar. An application for depositing the pre-emption money was filed at 6-30 P. M. on the last day fixed for payment. The money could not be deposited till the next day. On these facts it was held that the presentation of the tender at the house of the Judge was not a payment as required by S. 15, Oudh Laws Act. Reliance was placed on appellants' behalf on a later decision of another Judge of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 271,[2] but that case does not appear to us to be relevant. There a sum of Rs. 80 was deposited within the period specified in the pre-emption decree. Subsequently a sum of Rs. 22 out of it was attached and withdrawn on account of the plaintiffs' decreed costs. The vendees meanwhile had filed an appeal, and the appellate Court enhanced the amount subject to the payment of which the property could be pre-empted, and the parties were ordered to bear their own costs in the event of payment being made as directed. The plaintiff thereupon paid in the difference namely Rs. 26-6-0 and obtained possession of the property. The sum of Rs. 22 which had previously been withdrawn was attempted to be deposited after the expiry of one month allowed by the appellate Court. On these facts a learned Judge of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that there was sufficient compliance with the decree. He said:

"The appellant seeks to differentiate these rulings (34 All. 596,[3] and 56 P R. 1910[4]) by the fact that in Oudh the right of pre-emption is a statutory right and payment is made in accordance with S. 15, Oudh Laws Act. This, however, does not affect the question. Section 15 says that the amount due must be paid into Court. In fact it was paid into Court, although the plaintiff treating it as money in deposit to the credit of the defendant subsequently withdrew part of it on account of costs due to him in the same case."

It will be noticed that the point which arose in 23 O. C. 254[1] did not arise for consideration in A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 271[2] and the principle which was laid down earlier was left untouched.

[5] The appellants' learned counsel has also drawn our attention to two cases of the Allahabad High Court, namely, A. I. R. 1934 ALL. 817[5] and A. I. R. 1937 ALL. 122.[6] In the first of these cases a Division Bench had to deal with the validity or otherwise of the deposit of purchase-money in Court in consequence of an auction sale, one-fourth of the money at which the auction purchaser had taken the property was deposited on the date of the sale. The remaining 3/4ths should have been deposited on 17-11-1932, before the closing of the Court. A tender was presented on that date at 3 P. M. and returned to the applicant. The deposit was not made till 18th of November. The sale was set aside by the execution Court. It was contended in revision that the tender amounted to payment, and the applicant should be deemed to have paid the full purchase money on 17-11-1932. The learned Judges constituting the Bench observed that a bona fide tender amounted to payment, and since there was no suggestion that the applicant was not in a position to make the payment at the time when he filed the tender in Court the offer to pay should be deemed to be payment of the amount. The view expressed was that the cumbersome procedure laid down for depositing money in Court was for the Court's own convenience, and if that procedure resulted in non-compliance with the provisions of law without any circumstance to indicate that the depositor was at fault, he should be deemed to have fulfilled the requirements of O. 21, R. 85, Civil P. C. In the next case cited a similar view was taken. The validity of tender, it was said, depended upon the fact whether it was a real tender in the sense that the tenderer was able and willing to pay in the money at the time when the tender was made. If it was fictitious in the sense that there was neither an intention on the part of the tenderer nor a possibility to pay the money, the tender could not be a bona fide tender and would not amount to a deposit of the sum which had been paid. The decree in that case was a pre-emption decree and the payment was held to be valid even though the actual deposit was made beyond the specified period. It is to be noticed that S. 15, Oudh Laws Act did not fall to be considered in these cases. The section expressly lays down that the money must be paid into Court before it rises on the last day of the period allowed for payment, and it is difficult to assume that the Legislature only intended that only tender must be presented to the Court on such day. No doubt the language of O. 21, R. 85, Civil P. C. also requires the payment to be made by the purchaser into Court before the Court closes on the 15th day. It does not, however, go on to say that on failure to make the deposit as required by the rule the sale shall become void, and the auction purchaser shall lose all rights over the property. Section 15, Oudh Laws Act must be strictly construed, and if by its force the decree becomes void and the right of pre-emption is lost at the moment when the Court rises on the last date on which the actual payment is to be made, the pre-emptor who should be aware of the procedure of the Court must take good care to see that the payment is not delayed.

[6] It remains, however, to determine whether the actual payment on 29th November was unduly delayed. Rule 572 of the Oudh Civil Rules has to be considered in this connection. That rule occurs in Chap. 14 and is preceded by R. 568 (1) in which the various heads of accounts maintained by civil Courts are classified. The first classification relates to certain deposits and repayments. They include sums which may be deposited under O. 20, R. 14, Civil P. C. Order 20, Rule 14 deals with decrees in pre-emption suits. Rule 572 says that notwithstanding the fact that the money is tendered after the hour prescribed in R. 574, it must be received when tendered under the first head of account if the sum is payable into Court amongst others under O. 20, R. 14, Civil P. C. Rule 574 refers to the time during which the cash payable into Court may be received. This is from the opening of the Court until a time which shall be one hour in advance of the time fixed for the closing of the treasury to the public.

[7] In the case before us Bandhu and Jagardeo offered the money to the Court Nazir shortly after 3 P. M., and in view of R. 572 there was no conceivable justification for refusal to accept it.

[8] The only objection urged on respondents' behalf is that the point, though raised in the memorandum of second appeal, was not pressed before the learned Single Judge. On the principle enunciated in a series of decisions of this Court such point, it was said, cannot be considered in appeal under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act. The principle invoked is now well settled and the latest case where it has been acted on is 1946 O. W. N. 331.[7] We think, however, that the principle should not be allowed to be stretched too far. The question whether the plaintiffs-appellants were responsible for the delay was definitely raised before the learned Single Judge. Two cases of the Allahabad High Court were cited in that connection. There can be no doubt that the refusal of the Nazir to accept the money on 29th November when it was first offered to him was the sole cause for the delay. The refusal was wholly unwarranted by the rules, and since that refusal was the direct and proximate cause for the delay, it cannot be allowed to prejudice the appellants.

[9] We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the orders passed by the learned Single Judge and the Courts below and overrule the vendee's objection. The appellants are entitled to their costs of this Court and of the lower Courts.

Second Civil Appeal No. 33 of 1942, Decided on 12-2-1947, from order of Addl. Civil Judge, Unao, D/-4-11-1941.

(a) U. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1916), S. 97 — Contract with Municipal Board—Seal of Board not necessary.

Section 97 does not require that a contract with the Municipal Board should bear the impress of the seal of the Municipal Board. It merely requires that a contract should be in writing and signed by the officers or persons mentioned in the section : 19 A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 193 (F.B.), Expl. [Para 4]

(b) U. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1916), S. 326 (3)—Suit for balance due for work done under contract—Limitation—Notice period under S. 326(1) —Deduction of—Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 15 (2) and 29 (2) and Art. 56.

The plaintiff sued a Municipal Board on 21st October 1940 for the balance due for work done under a contract between the parties. It was not disputed that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on 21-3-1940 when a cheque was sent purporting to be in full satisfaction of his bill, though it did not represent the amount for which he had submitted his bill. It was admitted that notice required under S. 326 (1) was served on the Board:

Held that whether the rule of limitation in S. 326(3), U. P. Municipalities Act which was 6 months applied or the ordinary law of limitation which was 3 years applied, the suit was not barred. If the former applied the plaintiff was entitled under Ss. 15 (2) and 29 (2), Limitation Act, to deduct the two months required for the notice: 25 A. I. R. 1938 All. 540 and 23 A. I. Judgment.—This second civil appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed a sum of Rs. 525 against the defendant Municipal Board, Unao, for work done by him, to wit, constructing a tin-shed for the Board.

[2] The facts appear to be that the plaintiff appellant entered into a contract with the Municipal Board, Unao, to build a tin-shed initially for a sum of Rs. 3,720. Subsequently the amount was increased to Rs. 4,245 and embodied in an agreement, paper No. 28, which is to be found in the file of the Municipal Board, marked Ex. A2. After the work was completed, the Municipal Board sent a cheque to the plaintiff appellant for a sum of Rs. 3,720 only instead of the full amount Rs 4,245 along with a letter dated 21-3-1940 in which it was said that the cheque was being sent in full satisfaction of the bill. There was some correspondence between the Municipal Board and on behalf of the appellant. The latter wanted to know the reason for withholding the amount of Rs. 525 which had been subsequently agreed to by the Board and demanding full satisfaction of his bill. It seems that by two resolutions one dated 11-6-1940 and the other 20-6-1940, the Board declined to pay the amount demanded. The plaintiff appellant thereafter filed the present suit for recovery of the amount on 21-10-1940, alleging that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on 15-1-1938 when the work was completed and on 21-3-1940 when on behalf of the Municipal Board the cheque was sent accompanied by the letter in which it was said that it was being sent in full satisfaction of the bill.

[3] The defence raised by the Municipal Board, Unao was that the suit was barred by limitation for in terms of S. 326 (3), U. P. Municipalities Act the suit should have been brought within six months of the completion of the work.

[4] The learned Munsif in the first Court decreed the claim of the plaintiff. In appeal the learned Additional Civil Judge, Unao reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit. One of the reasons which influenced the learned Additional Civil Judge in reversing the decision of the Court of first instance was that in his opinion the contract was invalid because it did not bear the seal of the Municipality. It may be mentioned that this particular point was not in controversy in the first Court. The learned Judge arrived at the conclusion that a contract to be valid must bear the seal of the Municipality from a passage in the judgment of Sir Saiyid Wazir. Hasan C. J. in a Full Bench case reported in 9 O. W. N. 461[1] at p. 465. I have read this passage and I am clear that the learned Additional Civil Judge has clearly misinterpreted it. The passage in question runs as follows:

"It was agreed that the contract on which the plaintiff relies and which is stated in para 2 of the plaint and is embodied in Ex. 11 was a contract the value whereof exceeds Rs. 250, it was also agreed that it was reduced to writing as is evidenced by Ex. 11 and it was further agreed that it was not signed by any person specified in cls. (a) and (b) of sub-s (2) of the section The learned Advocate for the defendant therefore contended that the contract was wholly void and illegal by reason of the provisions of sub-s. (3) and as such was not binding on the Board. For the sake of brevity the contract was treated in the course of argument, and I propose to follow the same course in my judgment as a contract not under seal and void as the statute required it to be under seal.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff admitted at the very threshold of his opening address that the contract in question was not under seal and that the statute, that is S. 97, Municipalities Act, was mandatory in its terms that the contract must be under seal."

The term "under seal" in that judgment has been interpreted by the learned Judge in the lower Court as meaning an impress of the actual seal on the contract which from the context is untenable. Section 97, Municipalities Act, 1916, to which a reference was made in the passage quoted above runs as follows:

"(1) Every contract made by or on behalf of a board whereof the value of the amount exceeds Rs. 250 shall be in writing. (2) Every such contract shall be signed—(a) by the chairman or a vice-chairman and by the executive officer or a secretary or (b) by any person or persions empowered under sub-s.(2), or (3) of the previous section to sanction the contract if further and in like manner empowered in this behalf by the board. (3) If a contract to which the foregoing provisions of this section apply is executed otherwise than in conformity therewith it shall not be binding on the board.'

Section 97, Municipalities Act clearly does not require that the contract should bear the impress of the seal of the Municipal Board. It merely requires that a contract should be in writing and signed by the officers or persons mentioned in the section. Obviously when the learned Chief Judge said that for the sake of brevity he would use the term 'contract under seal' he clearly meant 'duly signed or executed' in the terms of the section. In the present case all the requirements of S 97 are admittedly fulfilled. The learned counsel for the respondent was forced to admit this and virtually conceded that he could not maintain the position taken up by the lower Court.

[5] The next and more serious ground upon which the suit has been dismissed by the Court below is the question of limitation. In the plaint it was distinctly alleged that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on 21-3-1941, when the cheque was sent purporting to be in full satisfaction of his bill, though it did not represent the amount for which he had submitted his bill. The learned counsel for the defendant does not dispute this date as giving rise to the cause of action. He, however, contends that under S. 326 (3), Municipalities Act, the period of limitation provided is six months and computing this period from 21-3-1940 the suit is clearly barred by time.

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant has refuted this contention on two grounds. He firstly contends that the rule of limitation in S. 326 (3), Municipalities Act is not intended to govern suits of the present nature but it comes within the ordinary law of limitation which is three years and for this proposition he relies on A. I. R. 1938 ALL. 540 : I L. R. 1938 ALL. 823[2] wherein a Divisional Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that :

"A suit claiming the balance due for work done under a contract between the parties is not a suit falling within S. 326 (1) and the action can proceed without any notice under S. 326 (1). Limitation for such a suit is three years and not a period of six months as prescribed by S. 326 (3)."

The law was exhaustively reviewed in that case and the learned Judges forming the Divisional Bench relied upon a Full Bench decision of the same Court reported in 58 ALL. 569[3] in which an analogous section in District Boards Act couched in the same terms as S. 326 (3), Municipalities Act was interpreted.

[7] In the alternative the learned counsel for the appellant argues that assuming that the present case fell within the purview of S. 326, Municipalities Act, he is still within limitation inasmuch as sub-s. (1) of S. 326 requires that :

"No suit shall be instituted against a Board, or against a member, officer or servant of a Board, in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done in its or his official capacity until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been in the case of a Board left at its office and in case of a member officer or servant delivered to him or left at his office or place of abode, explicitly stating the cause of action the nature of the relief sought the amount of compensation claimed. ....."

In the present case, it is admitted that the required notice was served upon the Board. The learned counsel for the appellant has contended that under S. 15 (2) and S. 29 (2), Limitation Act, he is entitled to deduct the two months required for the notice and if this is done the suit is still well within limitation. The learned counsel for the respondent has felt himself unable to meet the argument.

[8] In my judgment, the learned Additional Civil Judge has erred in reversing the decision of the trial Court for it matters little which of the two views is accepted the suit is not barred by lapse of time. I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance with costs.

Judgment.—This appeal is filed by the minor and his mother against the minor's father and arises out of guardianship proceedings. The case has had a chequered history and affords a typical instance of the manner how the process of the Court has been abused for a long number of years.

[2] There has been unpleasant litigation between Wafati respondent and his former wife Rasoolan. She was married in 1931 and divorced in 1938. There were two issues of the marriage Nur Muhammad and Muhammad Siddiq, the former being elder of the two by a couple of years. Mohammad Siddiq was born on 23rd September 1936. Wafati has remarried and has got two children from the second wife.

[3] Rasoolan obtained a decree for Rs. 4 as maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C. some time in 1938. On 30th November 1938, she applied for maintenance of her minor son Mohammad Siddiq. She got a decree of Rs. 5 but this was reduced to Rs. 3 by the appellate Court on appeal by Wafati. This amount was not regularly paid and when it was, it was deposited in the Magistrate's Court and not paid direct to Rasoolan. Rasoolan got a decree for Rs. 500 for dower against Wafati on 6th May 1940. Admittedly this has not been paid up today. On 11th July 1940, Wafati was declared an insolvent upon his own application. He remained an insolvent for nearly five years and was discharged in 1945 without paying his debts. The elder boy Nur Muhammad has been living with Wafati from the beginning but Muhammad Siddiq has been living with his mother who stays with her parents and her three brothers. Her father is a tailor. Wafati began his attempts to get Muhammad Siddiq under his own custody. His first application for guardianship was dismissed on 2nd April 1942, the second application on 14th September 1942, and the third application on 20th December 1943. It may be mentioned that in one of the applications Wafati in resisting the custody of Rasoolan imputed immorality to her but this was found unproved. Against the dismissal of his third application he filed an appeal in this Court which was dismissed on 7th February 1945, by the late Chief Judge awarding Rs. 25 as costs. There is no evidence whether these costs were paid. The learned Chief Judge in his judgment says that Wafati got himself declared insolvent in order to deprive Rasoolan of the dower decree. He expressed the opinion that Wafati had not been honest in his dealings. He further observed that Muhammad Siddiq is well kept by his mother and in view of the strained relations between husband and wife he did not think that the step-mother will be keen to look after Muhammad Siddiq. The learned Chief Judge, in order to put a stop to frivolous applications by Wafati, awarded special costs of Rs. 25 against him. Unfortunately this order proved no deterrent. Wafati did not stop here. He applied for a review of the order and this was dismissed on 2nd May 1945, with Rs. 10 costs. These costs were not paid. My learned predecessor observed that Muhammad Siddiq was studying in a primary school at Pul Jhahu Lal and if Wafati was keen to have him educated in a better school he was prepared to reconsider the position provided he deposited a year's fee in advance. These were deposited in Islamia School. There is yet another order of the learned Chief Judge dated 3-8-1945, which shows that Muhamad Siddiq was admitted into Class III in the Aminabad High School. Mr. Siraj Husain, counsel for Wafati, had stated before the Court that Wafati will deposit the whole year's school fees. This was not done.

[4] The application which gave rise to this appeal was filed on 6-10-1945, under S. 8, Guardians and Wards Act by Wafati in person. The application is in English. It refers to his three applications previously made and dismissed. It again imputes immorality to Rasoolan, an allegation which was previously found to be false. The application states that Wafati being the father is the natural guardian under the Mahomedan Law and yet he asked that he should be appointed guardian of the minor's person. Several grounds are stated in the application which have furnished him with a fresh cause for making the application. These grounds in substance refer to his better financial position, to the unsatisfactory bringing up and education of Mahammad Siddiq under his mother's care, neglect in education, deterioration in his health and undertaking to educate Mahammad Siddiq along with his other brother under more satisfactory conditions.

[5] Counsel for both parties agree that a father being the natural guardian of his minor son is not entitled to apply for guardianship under the law: see 49 ALL. 773.[1] The District Judge took evidence of the parties and allowed the application for guardianship. He observed that:

"Whatever the circumstances may have been in the past however reprehensible the conduct of Wafati may have been towards his wife whom he has divorced, it is now proved that after his discharge from the insolvency he has been doing business of his own and has been comparatively prosperous."

He held that it was for the welfare of the minor to remain with his father. He, however, added the following rider:

"But I consider it necessary to add the direction that for the present Muhammad Siddiq the minor shall stay with his mother during the night time if his mother so desires. He shall go to school with his elder brother Nur Muhammad and spend the day with him in the school and thereafter with their father till they have had their evening meals. The two boys shall remain together during the day time."

This order may well be regarded as one for dual guardianship. It may also be mentioned that the learned District Judge did not consider the previous order dated 7-2-1945, as a bar to the entertainment of the application for guardianship.

[6] I may at once dispose of the latter argument. Section 48 on which the contention is founded runs as follows:

"Save as provided by the last foregoing section and by S. 622, Civil P.C. an order made under this Act shall be final, and shall not be liable to be contested by suit or otherwise."

All that the section in my judgment means is that once an order of the kind mentioned under the Act is passed it can either be set aside by an appeal under S. 47 or by revision under S. 115, Civil P.C. but it cannot be contested in a regular suit or in any other manner, see A. I. R. 1941 Mad. 569,[2] but this does not, however, mean that an application upon fresh facts being established cannot be maintained, for instance an application under S. 25. The result of entertaining such an application and deciding it on the merits will not affect the finality of the order previously passed as laid down by S. 48. This position was recognised in A. I. R. 1941 Bom. 103[3] where it was held that orders as to the custody of a child being always of a temporary nature those interested in the minor are at liberty to apply to the Court at any time for the change of the minor's custody. That was a case in which the child had been in the custody of the mother and the father had applied under S. 25 asking for the return of the child to him. I am of opinion, therefore, that S. 48 is no bar.

[7] The further question whether there should be any change of custody now at the instance of the father appears to me to present no difficulty. Although the application purports to have been made under S. 8, counsel has treated it as one under S. 25 and has argued that the learned District Judge having found that it was for the welfare of the ward to return to the custody of his father, the natural guardian, the order cannot be interfered with. There is no doubt that the welfare of the minor is the paramount consideration which should influence the Court in deciding to whom the guardianship of the minor should be assigned. Having regard to the consistent course of conduct, followed by Wafati throughout these proceedings combined with a singular pertinacity in litigating in Court a matter which could easily have been composed by private arrangement, I am of opinion that he is not a fit person to be entrusted with the guardisanship of the minor. Beaumont C. J. in the above Bombay case observed as follows:

"I think the law on questions of this sort is the same in this country as in England, though of course social habits may be different. The modern view of Judges in England is that it is impossible in the case of a young child, to find any adequate substitute for the love and care of the natural mother. If the natural mother is a suitable person, the Courts in England will as a general rule hand over the custody of a child of tender years to the mother. The mother's position is regarded as of much more importance in modern times than it was in former days, when a wife was regarded as little more than the chattel of her husband. The view of society in India as to the position of women may not have advanced so far or so fast as in England, but at the same time the right of the mother to the custody of her young children is undoubtedly recognised in this country: see for example, 24 Bom. L. R. 779.[4] However the paramount consideration is the interest of the child rather than the rights of the parents. Human nature is much the same all the world over, and in my opinion if the mother is a suitable person to take charge of the child, it is quite impossible to find an adequate substitute for her for the custody of a child of tender years."

I am in respectful agreement with the view expressed. The fact that these observations were made in a Hindu case can make no difference in the principle. In my opinion they are of universal application.

[8] Reference was made to a Full Bench decision in 1935 O. W. N. 1096.[5] There it was held that the father remains the guardian of the person of the minor in spite of the fact that she is in the actual physical custody of her grandmother and where the minor was sent by the father along with her mother to her mother's house and stayed there with her grandmother after the death of the mother, it was held that she had left or had been removed from the custody of his father and the latter could apply for return under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act. Neither of these questions arises here. Upon the merits, the order was made in favour of the father particularly on the ground that the maternal grandmother had refused the father access to the daughter and he was thus deprived of all control over the education and upbringing of the child. The facts in the present case are entirely different. The contest here is between the father who has remarried and has children by the second wife on the one hand and the mother herself who has been divorced and has not remarried. The father has kept the elder boy with him. He was admittedly a man of small means getting, according to his own admission, Rs. 11 per mensem as a servant at an ice-vendor's shop. When his wife obtained an order for maintenance of Rs. 5 from the Magistrate's Court despite his contest, he had it reduced by appealing to the District Magistrate. When asked whether he had stated his income to be Rs. 4 before the Magistrate, he said that he did not remember. He admitted that he did not pay anything for the maintenance of the boy for a whole year when the guardianship case remained pending. In his application for insolvency he stated that he had no property of any kind. He valued his assets at Rs. 125 and his liabilities varied between Rs. 2000 to Rs. 3000. From 1939 till his discharge in 1945 he continued to get the same pay of Rs. 11 per mensem. According to him, he started the business in cement and lime in 1946 and earned about Rs. 100 in December. He admits, however, that the rent of the shop is paid by his previous employer. There is no reliable evidence to show that Wafati is a prosperous business man. He owns no house of his own. Muhammad Siddiq, when examined, expressed his clear preference to live with his mother. Rasoolan lives in the house of her parents. She has three brothers and all of them appear from the evidence to be fairly well off. It is true that the boy has not made much progress in the school as compared to his elder brother, but the obvious explanation of this is to be found in the fact that his mother has been continuously harassed over the custody of the boy and it is easy to conceive that the boy could not have improved under these unfavourable conditions. Wafati imputed immorality to Rasoolan and adduced no evidence to substantiate it. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I am convinced that Wafati is unfit to be guardian of the person of the minor (S. 19 (b), Guardians and Wards Act).

[9] The case in A. I.R. 1929 Mad. 81[6] is distinguishable on the facts. That case itself recognises that the decision of the question whether it would be for the welfare of the child to return to the custody of the guardian depends entirely on the circumstances of each case. In (1945) 2 M. L. J. 463[7] the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court held that where a husband makes a false allegation of immorality against his wife and is unable to prove it, that itself is an indication that the father is not a proper person to have the custody of his child. The rule that the father has got the natural right to the custody of his children is not a rigid and inflexible rule and must give way where the minor's welfare demands otherwise.

[10] On a consideration of the entire circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that the order of the learned District Judge cannot be supported. I allow the appeal with costs, set aside the order and direct that the minor Muhammad Siddiq shall continue to remain with his mother. It will be open to Wafati to contribute such expenses towards the maintenance and education of the minor as his circumstances permit. Wafati's conduct throughout the proceedings has been nothing short of reprehensible and dishonest, to use the words of the late learned Chief Judge. I, therefore, allow Rs. 50 as special costs against the respondent.

First Appeals Nos. 86 and 135 of 1941, Decided on 4-11-1946, against decree of Civil Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow, D/- 13-1-1941.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 188—Power of attorney —Construction—All clauses must be read together.

In order to determine what powers a power of attorney purports to grant the whole must be read together. It would be an entirely incorrect mode of construction to take a few sentences or clauses and to consider them removed from the context. [Para 21]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 188 — Power of attorney — Construction — Power of attorney given for various purposes, governing object being power to sell—All other purposes must be read as ancillary to governing object.

Where a person was appointed as agent under a power of attorney for the purpose of selling certain property of the principal and the power of attorney also provided for other purposes and the words conferring powers for the other purposes were quite general :

Held, that the governing object of the power was the dealing with or disposing of the property by sale and the other purposes for which the power was executed must therefore be read as ancillary to this object and even the general words conferring these powers must be so construed as to restrict them to what may be required for the performance by the agent of his duty to sell. [Para 22]

(c) Contract Act (1872), S. 237 — Third party not caring to read written power of attorney—Principal is not bound if agent has acted in excess of authority.

Where an agent holds a power of attorney and the person dealing with the agent does not care to ask for the power of attorney to see if the transaction was warranted by it, the principal cannot be bound by the transaction if it is in excess of the agent's authority : 9 Cal. 1, Foll. [Para 20]

(d) Contract Act (1872), S. 187—Implied authority — Power to sell implies power to clarify title and settle disputes necessary for effecting sale.

When a power of attorney confers a power to sell and there are no words limiting the power, a power to clarify title and to settle disputes, in so far as it is necessary for effecting a sale would be implied, in view of the duties imposed on a seller under S. 55, T. P. Act. [Para 24]

(e) Compromise—Binding nature — It stands on same tooting as family settlement.

There is no reason to treat a compromise settling doubtful rights on a footing different from a compromise between members of a family. In each case the basis is a compromise and principles governing compromises must be the same no matter who the parties to the compromise may be. [Para 28]

(f) Evidence Act (1872), S. 91 — Compromise—Correspondence preceding compromise is admissible.

When a compromise is arrived at by means of correspondence the final document executed is the result of negotiations which preceded it and the whole must be considered to determine what the compromise is. In such a case, there is no question of varying the terms of a document but only of determining the circumstances under which it came into existence : Case law reviewed. [Para 30]

(g) Contract Act (1872), S. 20 — Compromise of doubtful claims — Subsequent inquiry revealing title in one person—Such person cannot resile from compromise on ground of mistake.

Compromises are usually entered into only where there is some doubt in the minds of the parties to it as to their respective rights This does not mean that the title itself is doubtful: the title always lies in some one or other. Thus one or other of the parties has title but it is not certain which. A compromise is thus usually arrived at in order to settle in whom the title lies and the parties agree to settle their differences privately in order to prevent or cut short litigation. If it were open to the person whom subsequent enquiry reveals to have title to resile from a compromise deliberately entered into merely on the ground that the result of a subsequent litigation has shown his title to be clear and that, therefore, the compromise was not proper but was induced by a mutual mistake as to rights or was merely the admission of the title of another it would lead to an impossible result. The person subsequently found to have title or a particular title, would never be bound if there was any derogation from it and only the person who had no title would be bound by it, which, on the face of it, is a wholly untenable proposition: Case law reviewed : 26 A. I. R. 1939 Lah. 511, Dissent. [Para 32]

(h) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 105—Perpetual lease—Lease held to be perpetual.

Where (1) the land was given on lease at the same time as the building upon it was sold for residential purposes to the lessee and (2) no period was fixed for the lease and (3) the land was held at a uniform rent for 69 years and (4) several transfers had taken place and the transferability of the lessee rights was clearly recognised and (5) the lessor never claimed that the lease was terminable :

Held, that although none of these facts taken by itself was sufficient to establish the fact that the lease was a permanent one, the cumulative effect of all of them taken together was to establish that the land was held under a perpetual lease. [Para 55]

(i) Evidence Act (1872), S. 13 — Recital in document — Admissibility.

A document is admissible in evidence if it is a transaction by which a right is asserted or claimed. Recitals in it are not however admissible except to the limited extent laid down in 29 Cal. 187 (P. C.) and 18 A.I.R. 1931 P. C. 89. Recitals of previous transactions are not admissible : Case law discussed. [Para 74]

(j) Evidence Act (1872), S. 13 — Section does not tell how facts are to be proved.

Section 13 occurs in Chap. II, Evidence Act, which is headed "Of the Relevancy of Facts" and it says only:— "Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant". It does not say how these relevant facts are to be proved ; for that one has to look to other provisions of the Evidence Act. [Para 74]

(m) Evidence Act (1872), S. 110 — Section does not apply when initial title of another person is established.

The effect of S. 110, Evidence Act, is that if a person is in possession his title is presumed until the title of some other person is proved. Once the initial title of another person is established S. 110 no longer applies and the possessor must prove that that title has somehow or other been terminated. [Para 77]

(n) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144 — Adverse possession—Essentials — Possession must be adequate in continuity, publicity and extent.

The classical requirements of adverse possession are that the possession must be nec vi nec clam nec precario, that is to say it must be adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. But a mere exercise of exclusive and continuous acts of possession would not be enough and it must further be shown that the possession was not permissive and that a vigilant owner would have known of it. Further, if a person in possession recognises the superior title of the true owner, e. g., by the payment of rent, no length of time and no amount of assertion will oust the title of the true owner. Moreover the exclusion of the true owner must be complete and partial possession by him keeps his title alive. [Para 78]

Annotation: ('42-Com.) Lim. Act, Arts. 142 and 144 N. 16.

(o) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144 — Adverse possession—Tacking — Person seeking to tack on must be successor-in-interest.

If a person claims adverse title not only by reason of his own possession but also by reason of possession by another person he can only succeed if he establishes that he is the successor-in-interest of the previous possessor. There can be no tacking on of the possession of independent trespassers. [Para 79]

(p) Contract Act (1872), S. 196—There can be no ratification of illegal act without knowledge of illegality.

There can in truth be no ratification without an intention to ratify and there can be no intention to ratify an illegal act without knowledge of the illegality: 25 A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 284, Foll. [Para 82]

(q) Contract Act (1872), S. 228 — Compromise by agent partly within and partly in excess of authority—Parts inseparable—Whole compromise fails.

When an agent entered into a compromise of doubtful rights with regard to a certain property of his principal and it was found that with regard to a major portion of the property there was no dispute as to principal's title and consequently the agent had no authority to enter into the compromise and the various portions of the compromise could not be separated:

Held, that the whole compromise failed and the parties must be relegated to the position they would have occupied but for the compromise. [Para 81]

Nasirullah Beg, Govt. Advocate — for Appellant.

Ram Bharosey Lal and M. M. Lal — for Respondent.

Judgment.—These two appeals arise out of two suits disposed of by one judgment by the Civil Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow. They relate to four pieces of land, namely the whole of plot No. 287 and portions of plots Nos. 282, 288 and 296, measuring in all 2 bighas, 16 biswas, 6 biswansis 15 kachwansis situated in muhalla Khas Bazar on the Bisheshwar Nath (formerly Banks) Road, near the Kaiserbagh Circus in the city of Lucknow. Part 1 of this land is covered by buildings formerly occupied by the Church Mission Birkett High School and the rest of it is open land forming part of the school compound. The school was run by the Church Missionary Society while the property was under the control of the Church Missionary Trust Association Ltd., (hereinafter called the Association), a company registered under the English Companies Act which was formed solely for the purpose of holding, dealing with or disposing of the property of the Society: vide Ex. A-67.

[2] The Association had been in possession of this land for a long time and as early as 1922, if not earlier, (vide, Ex. A-6), it had decided to dispose of the whole property of the school. It accordingly appointed some persons including the Rev. Carpenter, as its agents to sell this property authorising those persons, or any of them, to substitute others in their place. In pursuance of this authority, the Rev. Carpenter, by a power dated 11-9-1923, (Ex. A-7) appointed the Rev. Mukand, then principal of the school, to act as agent. The extent of the authority conferred by this power and the object of the appointment are questions of importance arising for determination in this appeal.

[3] After some correspondence commencing in 1928, a lease was executed on 4-10-1932, on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council by which the four pieces of land in suit were demised to the Association to be held by it for so long as the land was required for educational purposes. This lease reserved an yearly rent of Rs. 70-6-9 and it was to come into operation with retrospective effect from 1-4-1930. It was signed, on behalf of the Association, by the Rev. Mukand as its agent and attorney.

[4] The Church Mission School was closed from the month of June 1935. Consequently, the Lucknow Improvement Trust, which was managing Nazul properties, on behalf of the Government, gave a notice to the Association, through the Rev. Mukand, on 18th May 1936, terminating the lease and asking for vacant possession of the land covered by it by 30th June 1936. The premises were not vacated, and on 27th September 1937, the United Provinces Government (hereinafter referred to as the Government) filed a suit in the Court of the Munsif, South, Lucknow, against the Association, claiming vacant possession of the land and some money as rent and damages. The suit was found to be beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif and the plaint was orderded to be returned. It was returned on 28th March 1938, and the next day, 29th March 1938, it was filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Malihabad at Lucknow. This suit was numbered as Suit No. 28 of 1938 and Appeal No. 135 of 1941 arises out of it.

[5] The plaint was a very short one and simply stated that the whole of the land was held by the respondent under a lease for educational purposes; that it had ceased on 30th June 1935, to be used for any educational purpose; that the lease had been terminated by notice from 30th June 1936; and that the defendant had refused to vacate the land. Hence the suit was filed and the following reliefs were claimed: (a) Vacant possession of the land be delivered to the plaintiff; (b) Rupees 17-9-9 be decreed as rent for the period from 1st April to 30th June 1936; and (c) Rupees 2464-12-3 be decreed as damages for use and occupation of the land from 1st July 1936 to 30th March 1938, at the rate of Rs. 1408-7-0 per year.

[6] The Association resisted the claim and filed a very elaborate written statement in which, among other pleas, it set up title to each of the plots in suit quite independently of the lease (vide paras. 10 to 20 and 29 to 32 of the written statement and paras. 23 (a) to (g) inserted by application dated 15th December 1938). The question of title was further elucidated by the parties in the oral pleadings of 23rd January 1939. The details of the defence with regard to each plot will be mentioned when the question of title is being considered. The Association further pleaded that the Reverend Joseph Mukand had no authority to take the lease (para. 23); that both the parties acted under a mutual mistake (paras. 21, 22 and 25) or, at least, that the Reverend Mukand was acting under a mistake induced by misrepresentations on behalf of the plaintiff (para. 24); that, on the determination of the lease, the old title of the defendant revived and it was entitled to continue in possession under that title (para. 26); that, in any case, it had been in possession at the date of the lease and was entitled to continue in possession as before (para. 27); that, even if the Reverend Mukand had authority to enter into the transaction of lease and to admit the title of the plaintiff, the admission made was gratuitous and the defendant was entitled to withdraw it (para. 28): and that the respondent was not liable to pay any rent under the lease. Consequently, it was prayed that the suit be dismissed.

[7] The Government filed a replication in which it denied that the Association had title to any of the plots in suit independently of the lease. Its position was further clarified in the oral pleadings of 23rd January 1939. It was asserted that there was no misrepresentation or mutual mistake: that the Reverend Mukand had full authority to enter into the transaction of lease: that the admissions contained in the lease are binding on the defendant; that the lease was in reality a compromise of disputes relating to title and that the Association had ratified the lease and was bound by it.

[8] On the pleadings the trial Court framed the following issues:

"1. Is the lease (Ex. 1) dated 15th October 1932, invalid for having been brought about under misrepresentation and under mutual mistake of facts as alleged by the defendants in paras. 24 and 25 of the written statement? If so, its effect? 2. Whether the Reverend J. Mukand had no authority to sign the lease for the defendant as alleged by the defendant in para. 23 of the written statement? If so, its effect? 3 (a) Was the lease ratified by the defendant as alleged by the plaintiff in paras. 23, 27 and 28 of the replication? (b) If so, its effect? 4. Is the plaintiff entitled to any and what amount for use and occupation of the land in suit as alleged in para. 5 of the plaint? 5. To what arrears of rent, if any, is the plaintiff entitled? 6. Is the plaintiff entitled to get vacant possession of the land in suit as alleged by him? 7. Is the suit undervalued and is the court fee paid insufficient?"

[9] The defendant's counsel pressed for an issue to determine title to the land in suit but the plaintiff's counsel urged that the suit was based solely on the lease and there was no claim on the basis of title. This was accepted by the learned Judge and he held that the suit depended entirely on the validity of the lease and that no question of title arose. He accordingly refused to frame any issue on the question of title. As a result of this refusal, the Association felt compelled to institute a suit to determine the question of title. Accordingly, it itstituted Suit No. 24 of 1939 against the Government, in the Court of the Civil Judge, Malihabad, on 20th February 1939. Appeal No. 86 of 1941 arises out of this suit.

[10] The parties took up the same position in the suit which they had taken up in the previous suit and the reliefs claimed were: (a) A declaration that the lease dated 4/15th October 1932 is null and void; (b) In the alternative, the lease be set aside; (c) A decree for refund of Rs. 385-0-6 paid under the lease be passed. In this suit the following additional issues were framed:

"1. Is the plaintiff proprietor of the disputed land as alleged? or Is the plaintiff a perpetual lessee of the same land? or Does the plaintiff hold heritable and transferable rights in respect of that land?

2. Has the plaintiff perfected any of the rights covered by Issue No. 1 by adverse possession in the land in suit?

3. What are the rights of the plaintiff in 282 in suit?

4. Is the plaintiff estopped from denying the title of the defendant in respect of the land in suit as alleged?

5. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?"

The two suits were consolidated by an order of the Court dated 26th April 1939, and they were tried together. The learned Civil Judge dismissed the suit of the appellant in its entirety and decreed the suit of the respondent, on the following findings:

"(1) That the Reverend Carpenter was not given any authority under the power of attorney in his favour (Ex A-6) to execute the lease in question on behalf of the Association. (2) That the Reverend Carpenter could and did invest the Reverend Mukand only with the powers which he himself possessed under Ex A-6. (3) That the Association is the owner of plot No. 282 by virtue of a permanent transfer from the Government. (4) That plot No 296 is owned by the Government and the Association has no title to it. (5) That the Association had, before the lease in dispute, the rights of a permanent lessee in the plot No. 287. (6) That the Association is the proprietor of plot No. 288 and if there was any defect in the title it has been made good by 60 years' adverse possession. (7) That it was by reason of a mutual mistake of fact that it was agreed between the Nazul department and the Reverend Mukand that the proprietary rights in the four pieces of land vested in the Nazul. (8) That if the true facts were known to the Nazul department, they were at least not known to the Reverend Mukand and so there was misrepresentation by the Nazul (9) That the lease was void under S. 20, Contract Act and voidable under S. 19 of that Act. (10) That there is no evidence to prove that the lease was ratified either by the President or Secretary of the Association or by the Association itself. (11) That for the applicability of S. 116, Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the person should have obtained possession under the lease but there is no estoppel in the present case. (12) That there can be a compromise only of doubtful rights and, in the present case, the title of the Association being clear, there could be no valid compromise."

[11] The Government has filed these two appeals from the decrees in both cases and the grounds taken in appeal are identical. The learned Government Advocate, who appears for the Government has not argued that any estoppel under S. 116, Evidence Act arises. He has divided his arguments into four heads. He argues, firstly, that the Reverend Mukand had full authority to enter into the transaction of lease on behalf of the Association; secondly, that, even if he had no such authority, the circumstances are such as to justify the application of S. 237, Contract Act or, in any case, the lease was ratified by the Association; thirdly, that the Government has title to all the land in dispute; and, fourthly, that there was no mutual mistake or misrepresentation.

[12] The learned counsel for the respondent controverts all these pleas and urges that the title of the Association to all the land in suit is made out quite apart from the lease of 1932.

[13] On the first point the argument is that the lease in suit, Ex. 1/1, is in reality a settlement or adjustment of claims by which the Reverend Mukand, on behalf of the Association, recognized the Government as the owner of the property and the Government, in consideration of this, allowed the Association to continue in occupation of the property on a specially favoured rental so long as the land continued to be used for educational purposes. It is urged that, in the trial Court, even the counsel for the Association admitted that "technically" the lease "may be called an adjustment of a claim." He, therefore, argued that this lease came within the authority conferred by the Association on the Reverend Carpenter by EX. A-6 and by the latter on the Reverend Mukand by EX. A-7, whether the said powers are construed in the wide sense of enabling the agent to exercise powers generally in all matters or in the narrower sense of being exercisable in connection with the sale of those properties. He also relied upon Ss. 186 to 188, Contract Act to make good any deficiency that may exist in the working of the powers.

[14] On the other hand the learned advocate for the Association contended that the power conferred by EX. A-6 upon the Reverend Carpenter must be strictly construed and that it did not confer upon him power to be a party to a lease or to enter into any adjustment, settlement or compromise on a question of title. The Reverend Carpenter was only given power to sell the property as it stood because para. 1 of EX. A-6 clearly indicates that there was, in the mind of the Association, no doubt as to its title to all the properties sought to be sold. He urged that the dominating object of the power was the sale of the properties and all other powers conferred must be referred back to it. He proceeded further and contended that the proceedings mentioned in para. 5 and the adjustment etc. mentioned in para. 6 related back to paras. 2 and 3 and to anything that might be done after the sale in order to give effect to it and not to anything done before the sale.

[15] It is obvious that the Reverend Carpenter could not confer upon the Reverend Mukand any power which he did not possess, though he may not have conferred even all these powers. We have, therefore, first of all to consider what powers EX. A-6 conferred upon the Reverend Carpenter. Before doing this, however, it is advisable to remind ourselves of the principles in the light of which powers of attorney should be construed.

[16] Advocates for both the parties agreed that powers of attorney must be strictly construed but with regard to other matters they placed a large number of authorities before us. It is unnecessary for us to consider all of them because the principles are well settled. In Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on the Contract Act, 7th (1944) Edn. p. 539, the following passage occurs :

"Another rule is that where special powers are followed by general words, the general words are to be construed as limited to what is necessary for the proper exercise of special powers and as enlarging those powers only when necessary for the carrying out of the purposes for which the authority is given."

The principles applicable have been very clearly and succinctly summarised in Bowstead's "Agency", 8th Edn., Art. 34 p. 73 (corresponding to Art. 36 of the 9th Edn.) :

"Powers of attorney must be strictly pursued, and are construed as giving only such authority as they confer expressly or by necessary implication. The following are the most important rules of construction : (1) The operative part of the deed is controlled by the recitals. (2) Where authority is given to do particular acts, followed by general words, the general words are restricted to what is necessary for the proper performance of the particular acts. (3) General words do not confer general powers, but are limited to the purpose for which the authority is given, and are construed as enlarging the special powers when necessary, and only when necessary for that purpose. (4) The deed must be construed so as to include all medium powers necessary for its effective execution."

[17] It was laid down in 1935 O. W. N. 490[1] (at pp. 493-494) that a power of attorney must be strictly construed as giving only such authority as it confers expressly or by necessary implication and, in order to see what was intended by certain words in a power of attorney, they must be considered in the context in which they are placed and the general object of the power must also be borne in mind. In the same case it was further laid down at p. 494, that when the agent is appointed by a written deed "there seems to be no question of any implied agency. The powers conferred upon him as agent have been definitely set forth in the written mukhtarnama" and there is no justification for going outside its terms.

[18] In 43 I. A. 48,[2] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say at pp. 54 and 55 :

"Applying to the power in the present case the canon of construction laid down in (1893) A. C. 170[3] at p. 177, namely, 'that where an act purporting to be done under a power of attorney is challenged as being in excess of the authority conferred by the power, it is necessary to show that on a fair construction of the whole instrument the authority in question is to be found within the four corners of the instrument, either in express terms or by necessary implication,' their Lordships consider that the authority to enter into transactions of the nature in dispute is to be found in the document itself by necessary implication from the nature of the business, with the general management of which the agent was entrusted. Without such authority it would hardly have been possible to carry on the business of a money-lender and financier."

Further their Lordships say :

"It was urged on behalf of the defendant that it was not shown he had received any benefit from the transaction in question. Their Lordships think that if authority is established the mere fact that the principal did not receive any benefit does not rid him of his liability."

In 9 Cal. 1[4] it was laid down by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court at page 8:

"One very fair test, as it seems to me, whether the plaintiff ought to be bound by the transaction, is this. If the defendant had looked at the transfers, as he ought to have done, and had seen that they were transfers made of the Muir shares and on the plaintiff's behalf, and if he had then asked to see the power-of-attorney, ought he not, and should he not, at once as a reasonable man have seen, on looking at the power, that the transaction into which he was entering was one which the power-of-attorney did not warrant."

The learned Government Advocate also argued that if the terms of the power of attorney are ambiguous and it is not certain whether they did or did not authorise the lease or a settlement of claims etc. the Association must be held bound by acts which the agent did in the bona fide belief that the power had been conferred upon him. In support of this proposition, he relied upon the following authorities: (1886) 32 Ch. D. 625,[5] (1916) 85 L. J. K. B. 1187[6] and (1920) 2 K. B. 186.[7]

[19] Though apparently these authorities support his contention, they are not directly applicable to this case because in none of these cases was there any power of attorney to interpret and the only question was whether an agent could bind his principal if he carries out a particular direction given to him by his principal in a particular manner which was not justified by the direction in question but which he bona fide believed to be justified. Further, the authorities which have been referred to earlier in this judgment clearly show that, in the words of Lord Macnaghten in (1893) A. C. 170[3] at p. 177:

"Where an act purporting to be done under a power of attorney is challenged as being in excess of the authority conferred by the power, it is necessary to show that on a fair construction of the whole instrument the authority in question is to be found within the four corners of the instrument."

Moreover, in the present case, we shall presently show that there is no such ambiguity as would call for the application of the principle invoked by the learned Government Advocate.

[20] We may note that in the present case the Nazul Department did not try to ascertain the extent of the Rev. Mukand's authority though it could easily have done so by asking to see his power. It is no doubt true that, in his capacity of Principal of the School, he was in charge of the property of the Association at Lucknow but this, the Nazul Officer himself realised, was not sufficient because he wrote and asked the principal, "the name and the designation of the officer who will sign the lease on behalf of the school" (vide Ex. 13). The Rev. Mukand wrote back that he would sign as "agent and attorney, Church Missionary Association, Ltd., London and Allahabad": vide Ex. 14. The Nazul thereafter, instead of asking for the power of attorney, accepted this and proceeded to get the lease signed by the Rev. Mukand. Applying the test laid down in 9 Cal. 1[4] to this case, the Association cannot be bound by the action of the Rev. Mukand if it is in excess of his authority.

[21] We come, therefore, to a consideration of the power of attorney, Ex. A-6, itself. In order to determine what powers it purports to grant the whole must be read together. It would be an entirely incorrect mode of construction to take a few sentences or clauses and to consider them removed from the context. The relevant portion of Ex. A-6 reads as follows:

"Whereas among the objects for which the company is established is to act as and allow its name to be used as trustee whether alone or jointly with any person or persons for the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East (hereinafter called the Society) whose office is situate in Salisbury Square aforesaid and accordingly to hold and deal with the disposal of lands, buildings investments and property of any kind real or personal moveable or immoveable in any part of the world belonging to the said Society. And whereas by a resolution passed at a meeting of the General Committee being the governing body of the Society on the thirteenth day of September 1922 the said committee authorized and directed the company to issue a power of attorney to the effect and for the purposes hereinafter more particularly expressed. Now these presents witness that in compliance with the said resolution and direction and for effectuating the same company doth hereby make, constitute and appoint the Reverend James Nelson Carpenter of Allahabad in the province of Agra in the United Provinces in India and Arthur Gordon Dallimore of Allahabad aforesaid Office Manager to the Society (who and the survivor of them are hereinafter included in the expression the attorneys) jointly and each of them severally to be the true and lawful Attorneys and Attorney of the company for the purposes following namely:

1. To sell, convey, transfer and assign absolutely unto the purchaser or purchasers thereof at such price and prices and upon such terms and upon such conditions as the attorneys shall think fit all or any part or parts of the premises next hereinafter described namely:

(a) The land, buildings and other property of the Society commonly known as the Oxford and Cambridge Hostel at Allahabad in the province of Agra with the Warden's Bungalow Lodge Offices other buildings, playing fields and other appurtenances.

(b) The land, buildings and other property of the Society commonly known as the Birkett High School at Nos. (Ahlea Manzil) and 2 (Khas Manzil) Banks Road Mohalla Khas Bazar Thana Hazratganj (formerly Ganeshganj) Lucknow or elsewhere with Bungalow Offices, out buildings and other appurtenances.

(c) The land, buildings and other property of the Society commonly known as the High School Hostel Nazar Bagh. Husainganj also at Lucknow comprising Hostel and Warden's bungalow in one Courtyard three large playing fields two shops and numerous houses some of which are let to tenants near the High School Hostel or erected on land held therewith.

2. To ask, demand, sue for, recover and receive the purchase monies and all other sums of money and property whatsoever and give effectual receipts, releases and discharges for the same respectively.

3. To redeem any lien, charge or burden affecting any part or parts of the property sold which the attorneys may think fit to redeem upon such terms as the attorneys shall think fit or to make any sale or sales subject to any such lien, charge or burden.

4. To pay any sums which the attorneys may deem to be due from the company or expedient to pay.

5. To institute any proceedings in any Court of Justice and to appear, defend or intervene in any proceedings brought by other persons and to take such steps in any such proceedings as the attorneys shall think fit.

6. To settle, adjust, compound, submit to arbitration and compromise all actions, accounts, claims, and demands whatsoever which now or hereafter shall be depending between the company and any person or persons in such manner as the attorneys shall think fit."

[22] In considering EX. A-6, the first thing to be noticed is the recital which mentions that one of the objects of the Association is "to hold and deal with and dispose of lands, buildings investments and property of any kind . . . ." Then follows another recital and the various powers which are conferred upon the agent, the first of which is to sell the property described in the paragraph numbered 1. This is a clear indication of the fact that the governing object of the power was the dealing with or disposing—in this case by sale—of lands and buildings. All the other "purposes" for which the power is executed must, therefore, be read as ancillary to this object and even the general words of paras. 5, 6 and 8 must be so construed as to restrict them to what may be required for the performance by the agents of their duty to sell.

[23] This brings us to the second line of argument, namely, that, no matter where the title to the properties lies, the right of the Association was of a doubtful nature and the land on which the school buildings stood could not be sold without a clarification of the title and the production of proper title deeds for the satisfaction of intending purchasers. Thus, it is argued, that since the agreement of lease was executed in pursuance of the idea of clearing title in view of the claims made by the Lucknow Improvement Trust, it was such a settlement, adjustment, compounding or compromise of claims as came within the purview of para. 6 of EX. A-6. It is further argued that, even if this were not so, the Rev. Mukand, as the agent charged with the sale of the property, had implied authority to enter into such agreements as might be found necessary for proceeding with the sale. The contract of lease is sought to be sustained on this ground also.

[24] As we have already stated, the learned advocate for the Association strongly contends that EX. A-6 conferred no authority on the Rev. Mukand to clarify title; he had power only to sell whatever title the Association had. We cannot agree with this contention and our construction is that paras. 5 and 6 of EX. A-6 cannot be co-related only to paras. 2 and 3 but must be referred to the governing object of the power of attorney, namely, the sale of the property. There are no words limiting the power and, in accordance with the principles which the authorities discussed by us have laid down, the power to clarify title and settle disputes, in so far as it was necessary for effecting a sale, would be implied even if it were not expressed, in view of the duties imposed upon a seller by S. 55, T. P. Act. When, therefore, the authors of the power of attorney confer upon the agent authority to adjust and settle claims, there is every reason to think that they were empowering him to place himself in the position of being able to satisfy intending purchasers of title to the property to be sold. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the power of attorney, EX. A-6, did not confer upon the Rev. Carpenter any power of adjustment, settlement or compromise of claims beyond such as might be necessary for carrying out the sale to effect which it was principally executed.

[25] Coming now to EX. A-7, we find that the Rev. Carpenter says:

"I do hereby appoint Joseph Newman Mukand Clerk in Holy Orders, resident in the city of Lucknow, my substitute to sell all or any of the properties, to execute deeds of sale and to do all or any of the things I am entitled to do by the within aforementioned powers of attorney . . . . . ."

These words are very wide and clearly indicate that the Rev. Mukand had conferred upon him all the powers which the Rev. Carpenter had.

[26] We thus come to the next question argued before us, namely, whether the lease can be considered to be a "settlement, adjustment . . . . compromise" within the meaning of para. 6 of EX. A-6. The learned Advocate for the Association contended that, in the present case, there had been no claim or contest at all but that the Rev. Mukand had surrendered himself entirely into the hands of the Improvement Trust, seeking guidance from them and allowing them to dictate his action. Thus there was no settlement of rival claims. He further argued that any settlement in the present case could only be effectuated by a conveyance,—from the Rev. Mukand, since the title was that of the Association. It is nothing more than a gratuitous admission which can always be withdrawn. He also urges that the lease does not mention the existence of any dispute and its settlement and that for this reason also it cannot operate as a compromise. He relies upon 15 W. R. 16[8] and 26 Cal. 81[9] in which it was laid down that title can pass from one person to another only by a conveyance and, unless a conveyance was executed, there was nothing more than a mere admission which could be withdrawn. In the first mentioned case, on an objection being made to her not being impleaded, Mt. Ladoo had made an application in Court that she was neither the guardian of the minor plaintiff nor had she any interest in the property. This was held not to affect any right which she might have had in the property or which she might subsequently acquire. In the second case, the repeated assertions by a taluqdar of Oudh that his uncle was malik were held in the absence of a conveyance of his undisputed rights not to confer any title upon the uncle. Neither of these cases related to any settlement relating to disputed rights and they can be of no assistance to the Association.

[27] There are a large number of cases relating to family settlements in which it has been held that a compromise of disputed claims may operate only as recognition of pre-existing title and will be binding on the parties even if no duly registered deed of conveyance is executed but the learned Advocate for the Association distinguishes those cases on the ground that the settlement of family disputes is such a laudable cause that things are permitted to be done to achieve that object which are not otherwise permitted. Further he differentiates the authorities on compromise relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant on the ground that in all these cases the compromise was followed by a decree or order of Court.

[28] We see no reason to treat compromises settling doubtful rights on a footing different from compromises between members of a family. In each case, the basis is a compromise and the principles governing compromises must be the same no matter who the parties to the compromise may be. As to the second point we find that, in the present case also, the settlement of disputes was followed by a lease which was executed by both the parties, being an acknowledgment by the Rev. Mukand of the proprietary rights of the Government and an agreement by the Government to allow the Association to continue in possession at a favourable rent for such time as the land may be required for educational purposes.

[29] In 8 I. A. 215[10] two wills and a deed called an acquittance roll were treated as a compromise without the necessity either of a deed of conveyance or a decree of Court. In A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 54,[11] a will although invalid as a will, was held to be good evidence of a family arrangement which their Lordships deduced not only from a consideration of the documents themselves but also from the surrounding circumstances. In A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 69[12] a petition of compromise presented in execution proceedings was held to be sufficient evidence of a compromise. In 34 Bom. 139[13] a document embodying a compromise was neither registered nor followed by a decree. Each party acknowledged the existence of certain rights in the others, and neither party conveyed any rights to the other nor did the document mention that there were any disputes between the parties to be settled. It was held that the document was good evidence of a compromise which bound the parties.

[30] The learned counsel for the Association drew our attention to A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 122[14] and tried to pursuade us to hold that the correspondence which preceded the execution of the lease could not be considered for determining whether there had been a compromise. We do not agree with this view. When a compromise is arrived at by means of correspondence the final document executed is the result of negotiations which preceded it and the whole must be considered to determine what the compromise is. In such a case there is no question of varying the terms of a document but only of determining the circumstances under which it came into existence. In the case to which the learned Advocate referred, their Lordships quote with approval the following passage from the judgment of the High Court as laying down "a correct appreciation of the functions of a Court in construing a document of title submitted to it for consideration:"

"I took the view that in order to understand what was actually settled it was necessary to deal with certain documents on which the settlement was based, not to contradict any of the terms of the settlement, but to identify the thing demised."

In the present case also the correspondence which preceded the granting of the lease in 1932 —EXS. A-9, A-73, A-10, A-11 and 9 — may be considered not for contradicting or varying the terms of the lease, but in order to understand what it was that the contract of lease actually determined. (It may be noted that the Association itself produced most of the documents to a consideration of which it now objects.)

[31] We, therefore, hold that the lease, EXS. 1/1 well may, and in the present case does, evidence a settlement or adjustment of claims between the Government and the Association. The correspondence which precedes the lease and the evidence of the Rev. Mukand as D. W. 7 leaves no room for doubt that the Rev. Mukand was trying to get clear evidence of the title of Association to the property to be sold. The Rev. Mukand says :

"I wanted to purchase also the land which might be proved to belong to the Nazul about 1928. I wanted to do it in order to consolidate my rights so that it may be made freehold, as the question of sale, although postponed, was still there. I wrote or spoke about the Nazul noting down on the receipt for what they had charged Rs. 6-4-0 from the school. I was under the impression that I could take a lease as well as that I could buy. Exhibits A-9 and A-11 were written in continuation of the correspondence I began with a view to buying the land from Nazul. That correspondence resulted in the execution of the lease I entered into this lease in the interest of my principals to the best of my ability."

At this stage, it is necessary for us to consider another argument which has been strongly pressed before us by the learned advocate for the Association and which was accepted by the learned trial Court and that is that the lease in question evidences not an adjustment or a settlement or compromise ot disputed claims but only a gratuitous admission by the Rev. Mukand of the claim of the opposite party. The trial Court has proceeded to consider all the evidence adduced in the case and, after an elaborate examination of that evidence, which led it to conclude that the Association had title to all the plots in suit (except NO. 296), it held that the rights were not doubtful and that, therefore, there could be no compromise in the true sense of the word.

[32] The approach made by the learned Civil Judge to the question of title is entirely incorrect and, if it were sanctioned, no compromise at all could be sustained. Compromises are usually entered into only where there is some doubt in the minds of parties to it as to the respective rights. This does not mean that the title itself is doubtful : the title always lies in some one or other. Thus one or other of the parties has title but it is not certain which. A compromise is thus usually arrived at in order to settle in whom the title lies and the parties agree to settle their differences privately in order to prevent or cut short litigation. If it were open to the person whom subsequent enquiry reveals to have title to resile from a compromise deliberately entered into merely on the ground that the result of a subsequent litigation has shown his title to be clear and that, therefore, the compromise was not proper but was induced by a mutual mistake as to rights or was merely the admission of the title of another it would lead to an impossible result. The person subsequently found to have title or a particular title, would never be bound if there was any derogation from it and only the person who had no title would be bound by it, which, on the face of it, is a wolly untenable proposition.

[33] In order to arrive at this conclusion the learned Civil Judge has relied upon the following authorities, which are the only ones which the learned advocate for the Association has placed before us, on the point: A I.R. 1937 Pat. 65;[15] A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 511;[16] A. I R. 1938 Rang. 227;[17] A. I. R. 1940 Oudh 409;[18] 26 Cal. 81.[9] None of these cases except the Lahore case, related to compromises. The decision in the Lahore case was based on the fact that the party relying upon the compromise had not carried out its terms. There is no doubt, however, that the learned Judge also considered Ss. 19 and 20, Contract Act, and held that, in that case, in circumstances similar to the present, the parties were under a mistake of fact essential to the agreement and that, for that reason also, the compromise should be set aside. If this principle is accepted, then no compromise can ever be upheld because it is only when the parties are not fully aware of their respective rights in the subject-matter of the dispute, owing to mistakes either of fact or law, that compromises are arrived at, except in the limited number of cases in which one of parties, although fully aware of his rights, is prepared to concede something to the other in order to purchase peace. In our opinion, in considering a compromise, it is not the title or the facts upon which that title is based that are essential but the fact of the existence of a bona fide dispute is the only thing essential to the settlement of the dispute.

[34] In A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 198[19] the Secretary of State had sued to recover possession of certain plots of land in the possession of Nabi Bakhsh. Nabi Bakhsh denied the title of the Secretary of State. Subsequently the parties came to terms and it was agreed that Nabi Bakhsh should recognise the title of the Secretary of State but continue to hold on a lease on payment of Rs. 20 a year as rent. A decree was passed in terms of the compromise and subsequently a lease and kabuliyat were executed. Then came the decision in 21 O. C. 33[20] in which the whole question of title to lands in the City of Lucknow was decided. Nabi Bakhsh failed to pay rents and the Secretary of State brought a suit for arrears. It was pleaded by Nabi Bakhsh that the compromise, lease and kabuliyat were void by reason of a mutual mistake of the parties as to title in view of S. 20, Contract Act. This plea was rejected by a Bench of this Court and the compromise was upheld. The learned Judges say :

"The agreement contained in the compromise and in the subsequent deeds following it was not conditional on the existence of title, as a matter of fact, in the Secretary of State. The essence of the compromise was the recognition of antecedent title independently of the fact as to whether it actually existed or not. Thus the matter that the title actually lay in the Secretary of State was not a fact essential to the agreement."

[35] The case was followed in A. I. R. 1934 Oudh 442,[21] in which Ziaul Hasan J., held that S. 20, Contract Act, was not applicable and he quoted with approval the following passage from p. 335 of Kerr on Fraud :

"Mistake in law is not a ground for setting aside a compromise, if the parties to the transaction were in difficulty and doubt, and wished to put an end to disputes and to terminate or avoid litigation. If one or more parties having, or supposing they have, claims upon given subject-matter or claims against each other, agree to compromise these claims, and the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of each of them with respect to the mode in which, and the circumstances under which, his claim arises, stand upon an equal footing and there is an absence of fraud or misrepresentation, the transaction is binding although the conclusion at which the parties may have arrived is not that which a Court of justice would have arrived at had its decision been sought. The real consideration which each party receives under a compromise being, not the sacrifice of the right, but the settlement of the dispute and the abandonment of the claim, it is no objection to the validity of the transaction that the right was really in one of the parties only and that the others had no right whatever. If, for instance, two parties claim adversely to each other the inheritance of a deceased person, and, in order to avoid litigation, agree to divide the inheritance it is no ground for setting aside the agreement that only one was heir and that the other gave up the right which he really possessed. The fact that the one may have had no claim is immaterial, if he was honestly mistaken as to his claim. It is enough if, at the time of the compromise, he may have believed he had a claim, and that the parties have, by the transaction, avoided the necessity of going to law. To render valid the compromise of a litigation, it is not even necessary that the question in dispute should really be doubtful, if the parties bona fide consider it to be so. It is enough to render a compromise valid, that there is a question to be decided between them. A compromise of doubtful rights will not be set aside on any other ground than fraud."

There was an appeal from the decision of Ziaul Hasan J. in A. I. R. 1936 Oudh 97[22] and a Bench of this Court affirmed the view he had taken and again followed A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 198,[19] holding that "such a compromise of disputed title is not affected by a later decision upon that title."

[36] The same view was taken by the Patna High Court in A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 406.[23]

[37] A consideration of all these authorities leads us to the conclusion that the crucial moment of time to be considered in judging of the validity of a compromise is the time at which the compromise was arrived at. In the present case, since one of the parties was only an agent with limited powers, we must also consider whether the compromise or adjustment fell within the scope of his authority, that is to say, whether the compromise was necessary for the purpose of proceeding with the sale. This requires a consideration of the state of title as it must have appeared to the Rev. Mukand and to the Nazul Officer in 1928 to 1932 quite apart from what we may now find it to be. Since, however, it is necessary for us to determine, for the purposes of the Association's suit, where title actually lies we will consider both aspects of the question of title at one and the same time.

[38] Plot No. 282 may first be disposed of. With regard to this plot, the learned Government Advocate wished to argue that there was no valid deed of transfer of this plot by which title passed to any one from the Government and consequently the Association ought not to be granted the declaration for which it prayed. He based his arguments on the provisions of 21 and 22 Vict. Chap. 106, S. 40 as modified by 22 and 23 Vict. Chap. 41, S. 1, and upon the interpretation placed on them in A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 268.[24] He contended that those sections authorised only an officer entrusted with the government of a district to convey property belonging to the Crown and he urged that, in the present case, the proper officer to convey plot No. 282 would have been the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow. We find, however, that it is not only the officer charged with the administration of a district who can make a transfer but "any officer for the time being entrusted with the Government, charge, or care of any presidency, province, or district of India." Thus the officer charged with the government of the Province of Oudh was also competent to make the transfer and, in the present case, the sanction of the Government of North-Western Provinces was given (vide Ex. A-69 and Ex. A-2/D. W. 1). We are, however, not called upon to determine the true meaning of the Statutes mentioned or whether they have been complied with in the present case because in para. 9 of its written statement in suit No. 24 of 1939 the Government clearly admitted that a transfer had been made to the principal of the school for the benefit of the school, though it denied that the Association had acquired any rights thereby or that even the principal had acquired proprietary rights. It is not open to the learned Government Advocate to resile, on a question of fact, from the position which his client adopted in the written statement. The effect of the transfer remains to be considered. The transfer is of a permanent nature and no conditions are imposed, no rent is reserved and no right of re-entry is provided for. We can find nothing in the correspondence relating to this piece of land which would in any way limit full proprietary rights and make the land liable to resumption on the school ceasing to exist. Indeed it appears to us that, at that time, it never entered into any one's head that the school might cease to exist. Even when the Government made grants of money to the school for building purposes it only stipulated for some return if the school ceased to exist within 20 years (vide Exs. A-26, A-27, A-28 and A-29). In the present case there is no such stipulation and it is clear that the grant is a permanent one. We find, therefore, that the Church Mission High School became the owner of the portion of plot No. 282 now in suit. There is, however, no evidence of any transfer to the Association and it is agreed by the parties that the Church Missionary Society, which runs the school, is not the same thing as the Association. Thus a grant to the school is not a grant to the Association and the latter has not proved its title to the portion of plot No. 282 granted to the school but, at the same time, the Government also had no title to this plot.

[39] With regard to plot No. 296, the Association was not at all clear as to its position. In para. 17 of its written statement it said :

"That to the south of No. 287 is khasra No. 296 which was the property of the Nazul. It seems that at some time in adjusting the boundary, some portion of No. 296 was included within the area of the kothi and it seems probable that a perpetual lease in respect of the land so included was given by the Nazul to either Raja Sarabjit Singh or Mohiuddin at an annual rent of Rs. 6-4-0."

Again, in para. 36 it is said :

"That as to a portion of plot No. 296, now in suit, the Church Missionary Trust Association Limited set up the title of a perpetual lease on a payment of Rupees 6-4-0 per annum as it appears highly probable that such a lease was granted by the Nazul."

These pleas are repeated in paras. 4 and 23 respectively of the Association's plaint in identical terms. The Government denied any perpetual lease and alleged that the plot was Nazul property. This uncertainty in the minds of the responsible officers of the Association existed even when the present suit was filed, and it must also have existed in 1928 to 1932 when negotiations were going on between the Rev. Mukand and the Nazul Department. The trial Court has found that this plot was owned by the Government and the Association had no rights in it. In appeal, the only argument advanced is that, though the title of the Association is not proved, the narrow strip of land has for long past been treated as a part of plot No. 287 and should be deemed to be an accretion. Exhibit A-28, a deed executed by the Association in favour of the Government, shows that the present compound wall was built in 1914. It appears probable that the strip of land was included in the school compound at that time. There is no proof of an earlier possession by the school. Thus the school has not been in possession for a sufficient length of time to acquire title, and in this piece of land, the association has no title at all and the property remains that of the Government.

[40] We will now take up Plot No. 287 which comprises by far the largest portion of the land in suit, measuring 2 bighas 2 biswas, 17 biswansis and 12 kachwansis. It is as well to bear in mind that the building situated on this plot was called Khas Manzil (and later No. 2 Banks Road), since reference is made in most of the documents not to Plot No. 287 but to 'Khas Manzil.' With regard to this plot and the buildings situate upon it, the Association pleaded that it had acquired title from Mohiuddin, who had obtained it by gift from Raja Sarabjit Singh, that Raja Sarabjit Singh was entered in the khasra of the city of Lucknow as full proprietor ; that the Association and its predecessors had been in full proprietary possession of it for over 60 years and that, consequently, it had become the absolute owner of this plot. The position which the Government took up was that the building had been sold in 1861 by the Government to Mrs. Johannes, mother of Mrs. Quieres, and that Mrs. Johannes had agreed to be a lessee of the site at a rental of Rs. 6-4-0 per annum. It was then pleaded :

"Mrs. Johannes paid rent to the Nazul from 1861 to to 1868 and from 1868 to 1876, Raja Sarabjit Singh paid the same to the Nazul. When Raja Sarabjit Singh gifted the building to Mohiuddin, the latter paid rupees 6-4-0 by way of rent to the Nazul from 1877 to 1893. In the sale deed executed by Mohiuddin in favour of the defendant, it is clearly mentioned that the latter shall pay Rs. 6-4-0 by way of rent to the Nazul and the defendant regularly paid this rent to the plaintiff till 1932 in which year it executed the lease in question in the Government's favour. Hence the possession of the defendant had all along been that of a leseee and all its predecessors in title were only lessees of the plot in question."

[41] In this reply, although a lease was pleaded as negativing the proprietary right of the Association, the nature of the lease i. e., whether it was one from month to month, or for an undetermined period or a permanent one, was not stated. On the filing of this replication, the Association sought leave to amend its written statement and added paras. 23 (a) and 23 (b) in which it was denied that the sale of the buildings had been made to Mrs. Johannes, that she had agreed to take a lease and that she had made payments in respect of plots Nos. 286 and 287. It was then pleaded

"that even if it is found that Mrs. Johannes became a lessee of plots Nos. 286 and 287, the alleged lease must have been a perpetual one and in case Raja Sarabjit Singh and his successors and the defendant are found not to be proprietors of plot No. 287, they were and the defendant is or its predecessors were at least perpetual lessees of the said plot."

[42] After these pleas had been taken we find that, in the oral pleadings of 23rd January 1939, the Advocate for the Government reiterated the position which had been taken up in the replication in the following words :

"Plot No. 287 is also Nazul land. It was also let to Mrs. Johannes along with No. 286 orally. His interests in the plot were transferred to the aforesaid Raja in the manner his interest in No. 286 were transferred. The Raja made a gift of his interests in the plot to Mohiuddin, who sold his rights to the defendant. Both the plots Nos. 286 and 287 were let originally on an annual rent of Rs. 6-4-0. The original oral lease which was effected on 21st December 1861 was an ordinary monthly lease although the rent was to be paid yearly. The oral lease was not a perpetual lease either in fact or in law."

[43] The position thus adopted by the Association was that it was owner of absolute rights by transfer from the donee of Raja Sarabjit Singh, whose name is entered in the khasra of Lucknow as the owner of the plots and, in the alternative, that it had acquired full proprietary title by adverse possession. The trial Court has found and this finding has not been challenged in appeal, that the Association has been paying a sum of Rs. 6-4-0 per annum as rent in respect of this plot. There can thus be no case of the acquisition of proprietary right by adverse possession.

[44] It has, however, been contended that, though Rs. 6-4-0 per annum is paid for this plot, this is not rent but a mere tax which does not affect the proprietary nature of the rights of the Association. It is urged that the entry in the khasra of the city of Lucknow, of which an extract has been filed as EX. A-1, shows that Raja Sarabjit Singh entered as owner and there is no entry of the proprietorship of the Government or Nazul. It is, therefore, argued that, the khasra being a document of title, the ownership of the Raja is proved and the payment of Rs. 6-4-0 annually is only by way of tax resembling land revenue. The learned advocate for the appellant strongly relies upon EXS. A-81 and A-80. By EX. A-81, which is dated 28th July 1868, the Commissioner of Lucknow proposed that 'land occupied by houses be given to the proprietors of the houses without calling upon them to prove that in each instance the land had been purchased.' In his reply, EX. A-80, dated 7th August 1868, the Financial Commissioner of Oudh wrote 'I am of opinion that land occupied by houses in the city of Lucknow should not be recorded as Nazul, but be considered the property of owners of the house, in possession, liable hereafter for purposes of taxation, to a ground rent.'

[45] The trial Court has held that these letters do not in any way affect lands which, at the time of the correspondence vested in the Government and which were held by other persons on rent from the Government. In doing so, it has relied on the decision of Hamilton J., in Second Appeal NO. 351 of 1937,[25] which, though properly speaking, is not evidence but only an authority, has been produced in this case and is numbered as EX. 73. We agree with the trial Court's view of the matter.

[46] The house in question and the land under it was the property, not of any private individual, but of the King of Oudh. On annexation it vested in the British Government. Even if it did not, the British Government acquired title to it by virtue of the confiscation effected by Lord Canning's Proclamation of March 1858: vide 6 I. A. 63.[26] It is further settled law that all who claim title in any land in Oudh must either claim through the Government or must prove 60 years' adverse possession counting from Lord Canning's Proclamation. We must also remember that in those days there was no law of Registration in force in Oudh and transfers were often made without the execution of any formal conveyance. In the case of Government grants, except the sanads issued to taluqdars which too do not give any lists of property granted, the evidence usually consisted of entries in the Government records, e. g., a decree of a settlement Court or entries in khewats or khasra or some letter or other similar evidence. This is a well-established position in Oudh and should have been known to any one concerned with an enquiry into titles in Oudh. This position was well known to the Rev. Mukand as is clear from EX. A-73, in which he says:

"I had requested you to have plans prepared at Mission expense showing what actually is Nazul land, not according to the office but according to the settlement of 1867, the only authority which can be acceptable."

In considering the actual question of title to Plot NO. 287 as well as the state of title as it appeared in 1928 to 1932 we must bear these facts in mind.

[47] The question of the effect of the letters of the Commissioner of Lucknow and the Financial Commissioner, EX. A-81 and EX. A-80, and of the entry in the settlement records was elaborately considered in 24 O. C. 33[20] in which it was laid down that entries in the khasra should be presumed to be correct but that they could be shown to be wrong. At p. 45 the Judicial Commissioners say:

"But the presumption must yield to positive and convincing evidence that the records do not represent the actual state of things."

In this view of the matter, the Judicial Commissioners held that, although the Government was entered in the khasra as proprietor, that title was negatived. Thus, if, in this case, the evidence establishes the proprietary title of the Government, the entry of Raja Sarabjit Singh's name in the khasra cannot negative that title. In the same case the Judicial Commissioners further held that the Financial Commissioner had authority to issue the letter in question; that the letter really intended to confer full proprietery rights upon all occupants of houses in the city of Lucknow and that the words "ground rent" were used in the Financial Commissioner's letter per incuriam. In view of some further official correspondence they held that the true test was whether the person in possession had paid rent. If he had he was not the proprietor if he had not he was the proprietor.

[48] In the unreported case to which reference has been made, EX. 73, Hamilton J., held that:

"The khasra was prepared on the basis of possession. Either the Government, or Nazul or a private person in possession was entered as owner on the basis of possession. We thus find that there was no real enquiry and consequently all that this khasra of settlement shows is that Mr. Craven was then in possession of the land and he was presumed to be owner of it. This is only a presumption and is not conclusive proof that Mr. Craven was owner and it is, therefore, open to the appellant to show that Mr. Craven was not a person on whom the letter of the Financial Commissioner conferred proprietary title."

The learned Judge then referred to 24 O. C. 33[20] (at p. 54) and he proceeded :

"..... the letter of the Financial Commissioner never intended to confer proprietary title on every one in possession of land in Lucknow nor did it do so. It was intended to restore the land to persons from whom it had been confiscated and not to confer proprietary title on persons who had acquired land after the confiscation."

[49] On a consideration of the evidence produced in the present case, we have come to the same conclusion. Khas Manzil was sold to Mr. Johannes not to be pulled down but to be lived in. Exhibit 28/1, the register in which the entry of the sale is made is divided into a large number of parts. The second part is headed "register of houses to be destroyed for roads etc. belonging to the Sarkar, i.e. Royal" (register makanat munhadmi sarak weghaire Sarkari yani Shahi) and the fourth part is headed "Register of Sarkari or Royal houses to be sold" (register makanat neelam Sarkari yani Shahi). Khas Manzil is entered in the fourth part. Thus it was not to be pulled down. But for other evidence on the record we would have presumed that, when the house was sold, the land on which it stood was also sold. but that this is not so is proved by EXS. 29/1 and 29/2. These papers came into existence in the following circumstances :

[50] On 25-7-1863, a clerk in the Nazul Office reported :

"According to the rule laid down by the Government a rent (mahsool) of Rs. 2-8-0 per Bigha has been fixed for all Government houses and lands recently sold but so far there is no register from which the full extent of the land and the annual rent (kiraya) might be ascertained in detail."

Consequently it was prayed that the Darogha Nazul be ordered to prepare such a register. Thereupon, the Darogha Nazul prepared EX.29/2 and reported that the facts, so far as they were known to him, were entered in the register but that as some land and houses had been let out by the higher authorities and he had not been informed he could not enter them in his register. Exhibit 29/2 is headed "register of land of kothis which have been sold and which Sahebs and others have taken on rent" (Register araazi kothiat jo farokht hui hain aur jo Saheban waghaira ney bakirya lia hai). At serial NO. 20 of this register we have an entry showing the land of Khas Manzil measuring 2 bighas 10 biswas was let for RS. 6-4-0 per annum (at the rate of RS. 2-8-0 per bigha) to Jacob Johannes from 21-12-1861, which, EX. 28/1 shows, was the date of the sale of Khas Manzil. All this took place in the year 1861, long before EXS. A-81 and A-80 were written. At that time, at least, there was no question of any one but the Government being the owner of the land and the rent which Mrs. Johannes agreed to pay cannot be deemed to be tax or even "quit rent." The whole of the proceedings of the time as evidenced by EXS. 29/1 and 29/2 clearly show that it was rent that was fixed. At the time, therefore, that the letter of the Financial Commissioner, of which EX. A-80 is a copy, was written the land was the undisputed property of the Government and was held by a lessee. The person in possession was thus the Government itself through its tenant and the entry in the khasra of the name of Raja Sarabjit Singh, who had by that time obtained the lessee rights by transfer along with Kothi Khas Manzil, cannot make him proprietor of it. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the rights of the Association in plot NO. 287 are those of a lessee. This leads us to the question whether the lease was a permanent one or operated from month to month. These were the only two alternative cases set up and we cannot entertain a third alternative, of which there is no proof, suggested by the learned Government Advocate, that the lease might have been for such period as the kothi existed.

[51] The learned Government Advocate has placed before us a large number of authorities for the proposition that the burden of proving that he is a permanent lessee lies upon the person who asserts it i.e., in the present case, the Association. It is, however, not necessary for us to examine those authorities because the proposition has not been disputed in the present case. In fact issue NO. 1 of SUIT NO. 24 of 1939 clearly imposes the burden on the Association. The only question for consideration is whether, on the evidence adduced and in the circumstances of this case, this burden has been discharged.

[52] The learned Government Advocate also relied upon the principles contained in certain sections of the T. P. Act, although he conceded that the Act itself was not applicable. He contended that the principles underlying the Act were correct legal principles and should be held applicable and that this lease should be considered as being one from month to month. He also placed before us 26 I. A. 58[27] for the proposition that the construction of expensive buildings by the lessee on the plot, even if proved to be within the knowledge of the lessor, did not make the lease a permanent one. In that case, however, the period of the lease was fixed in the lease itself and, consequently, the one-sided action of one of the parties, even though within the knowledge of the other, could not extend the period. Similarly the case in 16 Cal. 223[28] upon which he relied for the proposition that, the mere failure to enhance rents does not lead to the conclusion that the lease was a permanent one, is not of much assistance, because it is not only on the continuation of the same rent for a long period of time that the respondent relies.

[53] In this case, the following facts have been fully established : (1) That the land was given on lease at the same time as the building upon it was sold for residential purposes to the lessee. In this connection, it is significant to note that the land is not described by its number but as land of kothi Khas Manzil. (2) That EX. 29/2 shows that while lands upon which no buildings were situated were let out for fixed periods no period was fixed for leases of lands upon which buildings stood. No term was fixed for the land of Khas Manzil also. (3) That the land has been held at one uniform rent from 1861 to 1930—a period of 69 years—not only by the lessee and his heirs but by various transferees of the original lessee. It was suggested that this was because the Government did not increase the rent since the land was utilised for a charitable purpose but this is not so. The school only purchased it in 1912, and it had been held for 50 years before that. On this point the case in A. I. R. 1945 Cal. 283[29] will be found of much assistance. (4) That various transfers made of kothi Khas Manzil were considered to carry with them the right to be in possession of the land at the rent of Rs. 6-4-0 and mutation was made in the records of the Nazul department at every transfer: vide EXS. 21,22,30,31,32 and 33. Thus transferability of the lessee rights was clearly recognised. It is contended that the deeds of transfer do not mention land. As a matter of fact, some of them do but that is immaterial because the documents mentioned above clearly establish that, inspite of this, the Nazul authorities effected mutation of names in respect of the land. (5) Even in 1928 to 1932 when both parties were ascertaining title to all the land in possession of the Association, the Government never claimed that the lease was terminable. Indeed, the letters make it quite clear that the validity of the lease was recognised and that there was no assertion even that the lease could be terminated.

[54] In EX. A-9 dated 17th October 1928, the Chairman of the Lucknow Improvement Trust (who was in charge of Nazul or Government lands) informed the Rev. Mukand

"that on checking the plan, filed by you it has been found that besides Nazul land No. 287, B. 2-2-17-12 for which the school pays Rs. 6-4-0 per annum the Nazul land noted on the margin is also included in the school compound. If you admit the Nazul title the price will be calculated and communicated to you as soon as possible."

In the margin plots NOS. 282, 288 and 296 with their areas in possession of the school are noted. This was at the commencement of the negotiations. EX. A-11 dated 29th March 1930, which came at the end of negotiations is still more explicit:

"From the plan you will see that the portion hatched in red is already under lease to the school for which it pays Rs. 6-4-0 per annum. The portion of the Nazul land, hatched in yellow is in wrongful possession of the school..."

[55] Although none of these facts taken by itself might be sufficient to establish the fact that the lease was a permanent one, we consider that the cumulative effect of all of them taken together is to establish that plot NO. 287 was held by the school under a perpetual lease.

[56] On this part of the case, the learned Government Advocate further argued that all this evidence was inadmissible under S. 64, Evidence Act, because it was shown that a document of lease existed in this case and its non-production would lead to the inference that it was not such as the Association represented it to be. Reference was made in this connection to EX. A-62, a telegram sent by the Association's officers in London to the Rev. Mukand. The relevant portion of this document is "Morse states perpetual lease attached purchase deed....protest to Nazul that perpetual lease still operative." We cannot attach much importance to what "Morse states". The property was purchased by the Rev. Morse, who had been principal of the school till 1923 and had been in charge of the transaction of sale by which the Association acquired the property. He was examined on commission as a witness in this case and he stated that he was handed "the title deeds of Khas Manzil house and compound by a money-lender who I understood held a mortgage of the property." In reply to cross interrogatories put to him on behalf of the Government he stated :

"I do not remember if I asked for any documents specifically; I am referring to the spring of 1912. I did not see Mohiuddin again. I asked for 'title deeds'. This was at the time when the property was being bought by the defendants. I never asked him for any lease and it was the money-lender who gave me the title deeds."

This evidence clearly establishes that the only title deeds that he got were those handed over to him by the money-lender who held a mortgage. Exhibit A-70, A-71 and A-72 are the three mortgages over the property and the first of them, EX. A-70, mentions only two documents—a mortgage deed dated 20th May 1867, by Mrs. Johannes and a deed of gift dated 3rd September 1872, executed by Raja Sarabjit Singh in favour of Mohiuddin—as having been handed over to the mortgagee. None of the other mortgage deeds refers to any other document. Thus it can only have been these two deeds that came into the possession of the Association. When the Rev. Morse speaks in June 1936 about the existence of a perpetual lease he could only have been speaking from memory about events which happened 24 years previously. We notice no question was put to him in cross-examination relating to this telegram although this telegram was on the record.

[57] This is not all. It was the case of the Government itself that there was only an oral lease: vide proceedings of 23rd January 1939. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that there was no written lease, and that the evidence which we have considered in arriving at our decision as to the nature of the lease is admissible.

[58] The learned Government Advocate wished to argue that, even if the Association held the rights of a perpetual lessee, those rights had come to an end by reason of the fact that the Association by filing Suit No. 24 of 1939, claiming, in the alternative, a declaration of proprietary title, has denied the tenancy. This plea was not taken in the trial Court nor do we find it mentioned in the grounds of appeal to this Court. The learned Government Advocate admits that the plea is a new one but urges that he should be allowed to take it in appeal because it is purely a question of law. It may turn out to be, as he says, purely a question of law but we are not prepared to hold, at this stage, that no question of fact is involved. In any case, the Association should have been given an opportunity of meeting such an entirely new case in the trial Court and it would not be fair to it to allow such a plea to be raised in appeal. In the circumstances, we do not allow this plea to be taken in this appeal. This, of course, does not in any way affect the merits of any right which the Government may have.

[59] The evidence and circumstances which we have considered above, apart from establishing the title of the Association as a permanent lessee of plot No. 287 also establishes that in 1928 to 1932 the Government had made no claim or demand with regard to this plot and that, therefore, it was not within the powers of the Reverend Mukand to enter the agreement of lease with regard to it. According to the view which we have taken of the power of attorney, the Reverend Mukand's powers were confined to entering into such adjustments or compromises as were necessary for the purpose of selling the property which he was directed to sell and he had no powers beyond those. The title of the Association with regard to plot No. 287 and its rights to transfer it was clearly established by various deeds, Exs. A-2, A-3, A-4, A-70, A-71 and A-72 dating back from 1868, 62 years earlier. The fact that the Nazul had recognised the right was established by Exs. 21, 22, 23, 30, 31 and 32. The entry in the khasra of Lucknow was there. No intending purchaser could expect any better title deeds. Further the Nazul authorities made no claim with regard to this plot during the whole course of negotiations: vide Exs. A-9 and A-11. The Reverend Mukand was, therefore, not justified in any way reducing the rights of the Association in this plot of land. As a matter of fact, negotiations with regard to this plot started not with a view to clear title but with a view to purchase the free-hold rights in this plot: see Ex. A-9, last paragraph and the statement of the Reverend Mukand. This the Reverend Mukand was not justified in doing. The lease Ex. 1/1 with regard to this plot must fail.

[60] There only remains plot No. 288. The pleadings with regard to this plot are very prolix. The arguments advanced by the learned Advocates for the parties have been very elaborate and have not left any aspect of the matter unconsidered. We do not, however, propose to deal with all the alternative pleas and arguments but will only advert to those which are necessary for our decision of the matter.

[61] The pleadings with regard to this plot are contained in paras. 16, 17, 23 (d), 23 (e) and 31 of the Association's written statement and in paras. 7, 8 and 22 of its plaint. The Government's reply is contained in the corresponding paragraphs of its replication and written statement. The sum and substance of these pleadings is that the property is alleged to have belonged to Darogha Mohammad Abbas in full and absolute proprietary right; that it was purchased in 1868 in execution of a decree against him by Mrs. Jackson: that Mrs. Jackson sold it to the Reverend Birkett who transferred it to the Association. It was further pleaded that in any case the Association had acquired title by over 60 years' adverse possession by itself and through its predecessors. Finally it was pleaded that the Association had at least the rights of a perpetual lessee.

[62] The Government denied that the property belonged to Darogha Mohammad Abbas and alleged that "Mrs. Johannes was a lessee of the disputed plot No. 288 and Mrs. Jackson bought the property in court auction on the basis of a mortgage executed by Mrs. Johannes." The Government subsequently clarified the position in this respect in the oral pleadings of 23-1-1939 when its counsel stated that the auction sale effected in 1868 (the sale to Mrs. Jackson) did not relate to No. 288 or any portion of it. The Government further denied the acquisition of title by adverse possession. It will be noticed that the pleadings of the parties with regard to all the portions of No. 288 in suit were the same. Subsequently, however, it was realised that there was a considerable difference in the matter of proof concerning various portions of this land. For the purposes of our decision, we will divide the portion of the plot in dispute into three pieces: (1) The southernmost portion corresponding to goshas 3 and 7 of plot No. 288 which covers a very small area and to which we will hereafter refer as "the triangle." (2) The portion having at its corners the letters A 4, T 4, R 1 and A in the Commissioner's map, which we will hereafter refer as "the larger quadrilateral" and (3) The portion lying north of the line A 4, and T 4; to which we will refer as "the smaller quadrilateral". Plot No. 288 is a big plot on which were situated a large number of houses, as the Commissioner's report shows. We are not concerned in this case with any of the houses except one, "Alia Manzil" which extended not only over the larger quadrilateral and the triangle but also over numbers 289, 290 etc. with which we are not concerned. The learned Advocate for the Association contends that the smaller quadrilateral appertained to the same building but Ex. 41, which both the parties have accepted as correctly representing the state of affairs existing in 1861, read with the Commissioner's plan, clearly establishes that the northern boundary of Alia Manzil extended only as far as line A 4, T 4 in the commissioner's map.

[63] We would also make it clear at the outset that there is no question of any lease, whether perpetual or from month to month, because, although it was at one time pleaded, and some evidence was produced to prove that a sum of Re. 1-1-0 per year was fixed as the rent of a portion of the land of Alia Manzil measuring about 8 biswas, it has not been proved that the Nazul authorities ever realised this sum nor is it established to what portion of Alia Manzil it related. We do know from Ex. A-28/1 that, in 1861, Mr. Johannes purchased a portion of Alia Manzil known as "Gol Darwaza". If any land of Alia Manzil was let to him, it must have been the land under this building. It cannot be ascertained where the "Gol Darwaza" was but, if Ex. 41 is any indication, it must have been somewhere on plot No. 289 where the name "Johannes" occurs in that document. Thus there is no question of any portion of plot No. 288 having been leased.

[64] Alia Manzil also was a Royal building which, on the annexation of Oudh, vested in the British Government with all its land and appurtenances. Exhibit 28/1 shows that a portion of it, known as the Gol Darwaza was sold to Mr. Johannes for Rs. 100 and possession of it was given to the purchaser on 28-2-1862. A portion, known as the mahal-serai (the zenana courtyard), remained to be sold—it is entered in the eighth part of Ex. 28/1, under the heading "Register of Sarkari Shahi houses which are undisposed of" (Register makanat Sarkari Shahi joki Baqin hain). Opposite the column of remarks in respect of the entry relating to the undisposed of portion it is first stated that it had been let out on rent and then that it was sold along with the Mahalserai of Inayat Manzil to Hakim Fakhiruddin in 1866. Exhibit 56, which is a report of the Nazul Darogha, also shows that Alia Manzil had been sold to the Hakim but, since he had not fulfilled the condition of repairing it, it could be resumed by returning to him the part of the purchase money which he had paid up. This report is dated 11-7-1866, and we find that there is another entry without date, but subsequent to the entry relating to the sale to the Hakim, in column of remarks opposite the Mahalserai of Alia Manzil that it would be sold again ("bawact moyana kafiyat baza kai malum hua ki phir farokht hoga"). Thus it is established that the sale to Fakhiruddin had taken place some time in 1866 and that it had been cancelled. It is further proved that this building was being sold not for the purpose of being destroyed but to be used as a residence (hence the condition for repairs.) Thus the case of the Government that the portion of building on plot No. 288 was destroyed in 1870 and the land lay vacant till 1922 when the Association encroached upon it is without substance and, indeed, no attempt has been made to substantiate it.

[65] There is no direct evidence as to whether Alia Manzil was sold again or not and if it was sold who became its purchaser, but we find that as early as April, 1866, even before the cancellation of the sale in favour of Hakim Fakhiruddin Mrs. Johannes was giving No. 1 Banks Road, (which was the number given to Alia Manzil) as collateral security for a loan taken by her: vide Ex. 65. No boundaries are given in the deed but, in the suit that followed, a plan of the building mortgaged is given: vide Ex. 63 annexure B. This includes within its boundaries by far the larger part of the Alia Manzil. Subsequently, in execution proceedings against Darogha Mohammad Abbas, who was a transferee of the building from Mrs. Johannes, it is this very building that was sold: vide Exs. 68 and 69. Further, a reference to Ex. A-1, copy of an extract from the khasra of muhalla Khas Bazar in the city of Lucknow, shows that in respect of all the plots comprised within Alia Manzil, Darogha Mohammad Abbas is entered as owner of all the houses. He is also entered as owner of one of the houses on No. 288 though we do not know where this house is. It is obvious that all this building (which clearly includes the whole of the Mahalserai as the various plans show) could not have been the property of Mrs. Johannes by virtue of the purchase of the "Gol Darwaza". We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that, as a matter of fact, the sale in favour of Hakim Fakhiruddin was cancelled and the remaining portion of the building known as "Alia Manzil" was also sold to Mr. Johannes from whom Darogha Mohammad Abbas got it by transfer. We do not find that any portion of Alia Manzil was excepted from the eventual sale. No entry from any register of property—such registers do exist and copies of extracts of them have been produced—has been produced by the Government to show that it retained any interest in any portion of Alia Manzil. It may also be noted that, in its replication in reply to paras. 16, 17 and 31 of the written statement of the Association, the Government stated that Mr. Johannes was the lessee of the disputed portion of No. 288 and that Mrs. Jackson had purchased her right. The transfer by the Government to Mrs. Johannes was admitted though it was asserted that only lessee rights were conveyed. This latter part we have held to be incorrect. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Government had parted with all its rights in every portion of Alia Manzil. We should like to make it clear once again that Alia Manzil did not include the smaller quadrilateral right up in the north nor is there any evidence that it appertained to Alia Manzil. We have next to consider whether the Association has shown its title to the portion of Plot No. 288 in suit. For this purpose we will consider each of the three pieces separately.

[66] As to the triangle there can be no doubt that it was sold in execution proceedings in December 1868. The two plans, Ex. 69 and that attached as annexure B to Ex. 63, the plaint of the suit brought against Darogha Mohammad Abbas, clearly show that the piece was sold along with the rest of the Mahalserai to Mrs. Jackson. Exhibit A-5, the sale deed by Mrs. Jackson dated 11-4-1893, shows that Mrs. Jackson conveyed whatever she had purchased to the Rev. Birkett. Exhibit A-25 dated 11-6-1895, is the deed of transfer by the Rev. Birkett to the Association. Thus the title of the Association to this portion of Plot No. 288 is clear and has been fully established.

[67] With regard to the smaller quadrilateral, the Association has failed to make out its case. This portion was not included in nor did it appertain to Alia Manzil. There is no evidence to prove that the Government parted with its rights in it to any one at any time. There is no evidence of possession by the Association over this portion before 1901: vide plan attached to Ex. A-69, which not only establishes the possession of the school over this plot but also the knowledge of the same department of the Government, the Nazul, that the school was in possession. This possession is not sufficient to establish the claim of the Association since by reason of S. 28, read with Art. 149 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act, a period of sixty years is required to bar the title of the Government and, in this case, counting even up to the date of the suit, it has shown only 38 years' possession.

[68] The learned Advocate for the Association contended that Mrs. Jackson purchased this property under a sale dated 21-11-1868, executed by Mr. John Sandys on behalf of the Delhi and London Bank and that she obtained possession then and that, she transferred it to the Rev. Birkett along with No. 1 Banks Road by Ex. A-5. In order to establish this he relies upon a recital contained in Ex. A-5. We cannot accept this contention for two reasons, namely, firstly, even if the recital is considered as evidence, it does not show what was the land covered by the sale, and secondly, the recital cannot be relied on as evidence of the first sale or possession under it. We will first consider the matter as if the recitals in Ex. A-5 were admissible in evidence.

[69] Exhibit A-5 is not at all clear as to where the land, other than the land purchased at the court auction, is situated. The northern and the eastern boundaries are untraceable at present. We cannot, therefore, ascertain how far north the land sold extended. It cannot by any means be said that it extended so far north as to include the two quadrilaterals. The recital tells us that a "certificate of sale" was mentioned in the conveyance by Mr. Sandys to Mrs. Jackson and that this "certificate of sale" gave the boundaries and a plan. It is further said that all the documents mentioned in the deed have been handed over to the vendee. No doubt this was the reason for the loose description of the boundaries. Neither the certificate of sale nor the sale deed of 21-11-1868, nor any plan attached to either has been produced in evidence in this case. The boundaries of the plot over which adverse possession is claimed are thus left indeterminate. It cannot, therefore, be said that the Association has been in possession of the smaller quadrilateral under the transfers of 1868 and 1893.

[70] Another aspect of this matter is that, according to the Association's own case, the sale deed by Mr. Sandys had nothing to do with the land at present in dispute. The sale deed by Mrs. Jackson, Ex. A-5, was in the possession of the Association when their elaborate written statement was prepared. All possible pleas have been taken in it and such an important deed as the sale deed on which title was based must certainly have been seen for the purpose of drawing it up; yet we find that the title under the sale deed by Mr. Sandys is not pleaded and the position deliberately adopted by the Association was that all this land had been acquired by Mrs. Jackson at the auction sale in execution of the decree against Darogha Mohammad Abbas. The Advocate for the Association maintained this position in his oral pleadings of 23-1-1939, even after the documents, including Exs. 63 and 69 which give a plan of all the property sold, had been filed. Still later, on 20-2-1939, the Association filed its plaint (in Suit No. 21 of 1939) and took exactly the same pleas with regard to this plot as it had taken in its written statement. There are no further pleadings to indicate when the Association changed its attitude and so it can only be supposed that, at the time of the evidence the Advocate for the Association, realising that he could not claim this property under the purchase by Mrs. Jackson at auction by reason of Exs. 63 and 69, sought to establish a new title based on the recital and produced evidence to show that the deed itself was not traceable. We do not think that the change of position is justified. We have already indicated that with full knowledge of the recital in Ex. A-5 the association did not rely upon it for its title. We further find that Mr. Hardman, the property Secretary of the Society, in trust for which the association holds the property, definitely stated in his evidence:

"The deed dated 21st November 1868, executed by the Delhi London Bank Limited is not in London but may be in the defendant's office at Allahabad. It does not, however, in any way relate to the property the subject of this action."

[71] The learned advocate for the Association sought to discount the categorical statement on the ground that Mr. Hardman's knowledge was not correct but we find that this statement is exactly in line with the case of the association as evidenced by its pleadings up to that stage and there is no reason to suppose that Mr. Hardman went out of his way to make a wrong statement when he could easily have said: "I do not know to what that deed related as I have never seen it." Further, we find from his reply to cross-interrogatory No. 3, that he had inspected the property and documents of the Association and, from the statement of Mr. Fuggle, Secretary of the Association, in reply to the same cross-interrogatory, we find that Mr. Hardman compiled a register of property "after personal inspection of properties by him." The statement of Mr. Hardman must, therefore, be accepted and we find that the alleged sale deed by Mr. Sandys dated 21st November 1868, did not relate to the smaller quadrilateral and that, therefore, even if the recital in Ex. A-5 is considered it does not prove that the Delhi and London Bank or Mrs. Jackson ever had possession over this land.

[72] This being our conclusion it is not really necessary for us to consider whether the recital in Ex. A-5 is or is not admissible in evidence. The counsel for the parties have, however, argued the point fully before us and have taken great pains in placing a large number of decisions on the point before us. We feel, therefore, that it is but right that we should express our views on the question.

[73] The advocate for the Association relied upon S. 13 (a), Evidence Act and he urged that Ex. A-5 was a transaction by which the right of Mrs. Jackson to the property in question was asserted. Exhibit A-5 was, therefore, admissible in evidence to prove the assertion that Mrs. Jackson had acquired the property by sale in 1868. He also contended that, in any case, Ex. A-5 was properly admissible to prove the transfer by Mrs. Jackson and, once it was admitted in evidence it was admissible for all purposes. In support of the first part of his case he relied upon the following authorities:

A. I. R. 1945 Cal. 283.[29] In this case it was not upon the recital of any previous transaction that reliance was placed but recitals in the very transaction of the nature of the rights transferred were relied upon.

A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 703.[30] In this case also it was not the recital of any previous transfer that was relied upon but the recital of the amount of rent in the deed of transfer. The learned Judges say:

"It is a transaction by which the right of the defendant to the land was asserted, and for the definition of that right, the amount of rent had to be stated."

A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 991.[31] In this case also it was not upon the recital of any previous transaction that reliance was placed but the recital of the nature of the right in the deed of transfer itself was relied upon.

A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 299.[32] It was a case in which admissibility under S. 13 (b) was being considered and different considerations applied.

A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 795.[33] In this case also, it was laid down that the transfer by a person of a particular right is a transaction by which his right is asserted and is consequently admissible in evidence. The discussion really was whether such a transaction was admissible against third parties and it was held to be admissible.

A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 846[34] and A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 367[35] were cases of the same kind as that of Municipal Committee, Batala.

29 I. A. 24.[36] All that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down in this case was that documents of the nature mentioned in S. 13, Evidence Act were admissible even against persons who were no parties. The following remarks of their Lordships at p. 33 are of great assistance in determining this question :

"These police orders are in their Lordships' opinion admissible in evidence on general principles as well as under S. 13, Evidence Act, to show the fact that such orders were made. This necessarily makes them evidence of the following facts, all of which appear from the orders themselves, namely, who the parties to the dispute were; what the land in dispute was; and who was declared entitled to retain possession. For this purpose, and to this extent, such orders are admissible in evidence for and against every one when the fact of possession at the date of the order has to be ascertained."

58 I. A. 125[37] is also a very important case but instead of supporting the contention of the Association's learned counsel, it supports the contention of the learned Government Advocate. At p. 136 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say :

"Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention. They think that the judgment in question is only admissible under the provisions of Ss. 13 and 43, Evidence Act, as establishing a particular transaction in which the partibility of the plaintiff's estate was asserted and recognised—namely, the partition resulting from the 1793 suit. The reasons upon which the judgment is founded are no part of the transaction and cannot be regarded, nor can any finding of fact there come to, other than the transaction itself, be relevant in the present case."

It was, therefore, held that a recital in the judgment in question that a partition had previously taken place and one Thakur Shib Singh had got a village at that partition was inadmissible in evidence. 28 Cal. W. N. 942[38] followed 29 I. A. 24.[36]

[73A] On the side of the Government, reliance was placed principally upon A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 1,[39] a Full Bench case. This decision fully supports him. In this case, the whole matter was carefully considered in the judgment of Mukerji J. at pp. 5 and 6. The learned Judge points out that there is great significance in the use of the word "by" in cl. (a) of S. 13 and "in" in cl. (b). He summed up the whole position at p. 6 in the following words :

"Recitals in a deed are not transactions but instances of assertions or denials of the existence of the right. They come neither under cl. (a) nor under cl. (b). They are statements which unless they are relevant under some other provisions of the law, e.g., as admissions or statements of deceased persons, etc., are not admissible in evidence."

Later, on the same page, the learned Judge says :

" As has been observed by a very learned Judge, where a document is admitted in evidence of a transaction the parties are often apt to refer to the recitals therein as relevant evidence, and the distinction between the deed as a transaction and the recitals contained in the deed is frequently overlooked."

The view taken in this case was also taken in 39 Cal. W. N. 311[40] and A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 893[41] and it was also approved, though the case was distinguished in A. I. R. 1941 Cal. 541.[42]

[74] On a consideration of all these authorities we have come to the following conclusion : A document is admissible in evidence if it is a transaction by which a right is asserted or claimed. Recitals in it are, however, not admissible except to the extent laid down in 29 I. A. 24[36] and 58 I. A. 125.[37] Recitals of a previous transaction are not admissible in evidence. To us it seems that any confusion that arises is due to the distinction between the relevancy of a fact and the admissibility of evidence to prove that fact being lost sight of. Section 13 occurs in Chap. 2, Evidence Act which is headed "Of the Relevancy of Facts" and it says only : "Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant :" It does not tell us how these relevant facts are to be proved : for that we have to look to other provisions of the Evidence Act, e. g., S. 64 which says : "Documents must be proved by primary evidence except in the cases hereinafter mentioned." Then comes S. 65 which lays down the exceptions.

[75] In the present case undoubtedly the fact of the alleged sale by Mr. Sandys on 21-11-1868 is relevant but it must be proved by the production of the document itself unless the case comes within one of the exceptions contained in S. 65, and not by a mere recital in a subsequent sale-deed. No doubt the legal advisers of the Association realised this position and for this reason they attempted to prove that the sale-deed was not traceable. We do not consider that they have succeeded in doing this because the evidence of the Rev. Dallimore (D. W. 6) is not satisfactory. He admits that there is a register containing a list of documents in the office. This register would have been the best evidence to show whether the sale-deed existed or not. It did exist and was handed over by Mrs. Jackson to the Rev. Birkett (vide EX. A-5). The non-production of the register leads to the inference that it exists even now and was withheld because, as Mr. Hardman says, it did not relate to the land in suit. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the recital in EX. A-5 of an alleged sale of 21-11-1868 is not admissible in this case. To the second argument namely that once a document is admitted, it is admissible for all purposes, a sufficient reply is furnished by the case reported in 29 I. A. 24[36] and 58 I. A. 125[37] from which we have already quoted.

[76] We come now to consider the case of the larger quadrilateral. On the question of title by transfer, the position with regard to this piece of land is the same as that with regard to the smaller quadrilateral but with regard to title by adverse possession the Association has made out its case. We have already shown that on this piece of land a part of Alia Manzil was situated and that the Government parted with all its rights in Alia Manzil. The Government had, therefore, no title left, and could bring no suit at all. Article 149 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act is inapplicable and the period of time required to prescribe title is therefore not 60 years but only 12 years. This must obviously be so because the Government having no title cannot claim and third person who had title could only bring the suit within 12 years of dispossession. On his failure to do so, his title also was extinguished and the adverse possessor became the owner. If any authority is needed for this proposition, it will be found in 33 Mad. 173[43] in which too the Secretary of State failed to prove his title and the 12 years' period of limitation was held to be sufficient to bar the suit, though on the other point which placed the burden of proving possession within 60 years on the Secretary of State this decision has been overruled.

[77] A large number of authorities was cited before us on the question of adverse possession, what constitutes adverse possession, how it is to be proved, what is the length of time required and so on. In our opinion, each case of adverse possession is to be judged on its own merits and the circumstances of the case. The principles are so well settled that it is not necessary for us to consider each case cited in detail. The first of these principles is that the burden of proving adverse possession lies upon the person asserting it: vide, among others, 43 I. A. 192[44] at p. 204, A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 181,[45] A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 281;[46] A. I. R. 1931 P. C. 77[47] and 1941 O. W. N. 537.[48] Reference was made in this connexion by the respondent's learned counsel to S. 110, Evidence Act but, in our opinion, that section does not affect the matter. Its effect only is that if a person is in possession his title is presumed until the title of some other person is proved. Once the initial title of another person is established, S. 110 no longer applies and the possessor must prove that that title has somehow or other been terminated, either by transfer or succession or adverse possession. Thus the burden of ousting title by adverse possession lies upon the person asserting it.

[78] The classical requirements of adverse possession are that the possession must be "nec vi nec clam nec precario that is to say it must be adequate, in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor." But a mere exercise of exclusive and continuous acts of possession would not be enough and it must further be shown that the possession was not permissive and that a vigilant owner would have known of it. Further, if a person in possession recognises the superior title of the true owner, e. g., by the payment of rent, no length of time and no amount of assertion will oust the title of the true owner. Moreover, the exclusion of the true owner must be complete and partial possession by him keeps his title alive: vide among others 27 I. A. 136,[49] A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 181,[45] A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 281[46] and 1941 O. W. N. 537.[48]

[79] If a person claims adverse title not only by reason of his own possession but also by reason of possession by another person he can only succeed if he establishes that he is the successor-in-interest of the previous possessor. There can be no tacking on of the possession of independent trespassers.

[80] Judged in the light of these principles there can be no doubt that, while the Association has failed to prove its title to the smaller quadrilateral, it has succeeded in proving it in the larger quadrilateral for which only a period of 12 years was required. The possession of the Association at least from 1901 (vide EX. A-69), if not from 1893, (sale deed by Mrs. Jackson, (EX. A-5)) is established. In 1928 the period of possession was well over 12 years and consequently when EX. 1/1, the lease in question was executed the Association had prescribed title. This does not, however, end the matter. The whole discussion in our judgment as well as in the judgment of the trial Court and the state of pleadings reveals the uncertainty which prevailed with regard to the plot of land even at the date of the suit. It is obvious that the uncertainty at the date of the lease EX. 1/1, i. e., 1932, was still greater. The Rev. Mukand would, therefore, have been fully justified in clearing up title to this plot of land and in entering into the lease EX. 1/1 for this purpose.

[81] We have now considered all the various plots and the conclusions at which we have arrived are: (1) The title of the Association to plot NO. 287 as a perpetual lessee is clear and was clear even in 1928 to 1932. There was no claim or demand made or dispute raised in respect of this plot in 1928 and the agent had no authority to enter into any settlement or adjustment or take any lease about it. (2) That the title of the Association in the portion of plot NO. 282 in suit is not proved although the title of this Society is established. (3) The Association has no title to the portion of plot NO. 296 in suit. (4) The Association is the owner of the triangle of plot NO. 288 by transfer; of the larger quadrilateral by adverse possession. It has not proved its title to the smaller quadrilateral. The title to all these portions was very doubtful in 1928 to 1932 and the Rev. Mukand would have been justified in effecting an adjustment or settlement with regard to this plot, if he had dealt with this plot alone. Plot No. 287 is the largest of these plots having an area of about three-quarters of the whole disputed area and the Rev. Mukand was not justified in reducing the title of the Association in this plot, particularly when the right of the Association in it was not disputed, even if it meant a little gain in some plots lying at the back of the institution. Since the various portions of the compromise or adjustment cannot be separated, we must hold that the whole compromise—i. e. the lease Ex. 1/1 fails and the parties are relegated to the position which they would have occupied but for this compromise.

[82] There now remains the question of ratification by the Association. This need not detain us long because, although the point was fully argurd by the learned counsel for the parties, it was later discovered that, in view of Ex. A-62, a document which does not form part of the printed record, the point was not tenable. It is agreed between the parties that it is only the principal or agent authorised in that behalf that can ratify. In the present case, the act of ratification was said to have been the payment of rent under the lease of 1932, Ex. 1/1. Exhibit 23, which is a copy of an extract from the demand register of the Nazul department, shows that the last payment was made on 4-4-1935. The evidence of D. W. 6, the Rev. Dallimore, D. W. 7, the Rev. Mukand and of Mr. Hardman establishes that the agent of the Association in India Rev. Dallimore did not know of the lease before this dispute arose and that Mr. Hardman, who had come on tour to inspect the property of the Society in India heard of it for the first time in February 1935. Obviously, those two persons, neither of whom possessed the authority to take a lease, could not repudiate the lease without reference to the principal in England. The payment of 4-4-1935 could not, therefore, be stopped without reference to England and it was made. But we find that no payment was made after that and that by Ex. A-62 the Association definitely repudiated the lease. In 1939 O. W. N. 249,[50] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say, at p. 260.

"There can in truth be no ratification without an intention to ratify, and there can be no intention to ratify an illegal act withoutt knowledge of the illegality."

In the present case, the learned counsel for the Government agreed that there is no question of the principal having any knowledge but he urged that the knowledge of its agents must be deemed to be its knowledge. We agreed that the knowledge of the Rev. Mukand was not the knowledge of the Association because, in view of the fact that he was not the agent of the Association for all purposes but only for the purposes of the sale, the knowledge of the illegality of the lease was not acquired by him in the course of the business of his principal and cannot be attributed to the principal. In any case, so far as he was concerned, he did not consider the lease illegal at all and no question of ratification arose. There is nothing to prove that any other agents of the Association had any knowledge of the lease either actual or constructive. There was thus no act of ratification of the lease but rather there was the repudiation evidenced by Ex. A-62, as soon as the Association learnt of the true facts. This plea of the learned counsel for the Government must also fail.

[83] Reliance was placed by the learned Government Advocate upon S. 237, Contract Act. It was urged that the Association, apart from the power of attorney (Ex. A-7) in his favour, had placed the Rev. Mukand in charge of its property at Lucknow from 1925, that in that capacity he was making payments of rent and taxes and generally managing the property. Further his authority was of sufficient amplitude to order the destruction of the building known as "Khas Manzil". Moreover he was selling property of the Association worth lakhs of rupees. It was argued that this was sufficient evidence of the conduct of the Association to make S. 237 applicable. We cannot accept this argument because, whatever may be argued now, the Nazul authorities did not, at the time of the execution of the lease, accept all these acts of the Rev. Mukand as conferring upon him sufficient authority on behalf of the Association to execute the lease. They, therefore, made a special enquiry from him as to who would execute the lease on behalf of the Association (vide Ex. 13). The reply of the Rev. Mukand (Ex. 14) that he would execute the lease as the "agent and attorney, Church Missionary Trust Association Ltd." satisfied them and they did not even ask to look at the power of attorney. Thus it was not any representation or acts of the Association which the Government accepted but those of the Rev. Mukand and consequently S. 237 cannot apply.

[84] There is one other short matter which calls for our attention. The learned Civil Judge has under S. 65, Contract Act, ordered the refund of all the money paid under the lease of 1932. This order is incorrect. He should not have ordered refund to the Association of the amount due in respect of plot No. 296. In view of our finding with regard to the small quadrilateral of No. 288 a further deduction will have to be made with regard to about five biswas of land covered by that piece at the same rate. Thus out of Rs. 385-0-6 claimed a sum of Rs. 7-12-0 per year for six years at the rate of Rs. 25 per bigha per annum or a total of Rs. 43-8-0 will be deducted.

[85] In view of our findings, had the Government claimed it, we should have decreed its suit with regard to the area of plot No. 296 and the smaller quadrilateral of plot No. 288. We find, however, that the Government confined its claim to its rights under the lease of Ex. 1/1 which we have found to be beyond the authority of the agent and, as such, invalid. At the time of the framing of issues, the Association prayed that issues be framed regarding the title of the plaintiff and the defendant but the Government's Advocate said that his suit was based on the lease and not on title. Thereupon the Court passed the following order :

"A perusal of the plaint clearly discloses that the action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant is based on the lease dated 15-10-1932, executed on behalf of the defendant in the plaintiff's favour (sic). The nature of the claim is, therefore, an action for ejectment and for recovery of arrears of rent and for recovery of compensation for use and occupation after the termination of tenancy. The plaintiff's claim, therefore, hinges on the validity of the lease and on nothing else. . . ."

Thus, the Government deliberately confined its case to the lease and refused to allow the question of title to be raised no doubt with a view to force the Association to file a separate suit. We cannot, therefore, allow the nature of the suit to be altered at this stage.

[86] The result of the findings at which we have arrived is that Appeal No. 135 of 1941 will stand dismissed with costs.

[87] Appeal No. 86 of 1941 is partly allowed and the suit of the Association for declaration of its title to plot No. 296, plot No. 282 and the portion of plot No. 288 shown in the Commissioner's plan as lying north of the line A 4 T 4 is dismissed. A declaration is granted to the Association : (a) that it is the perpetual lessee of the plot No. 287 shown in the Commissioner's map as enclosed by the lines indicated by the letters B 2 B, C, D, E, V, and (b) that it is the owner of the portion of plot No. 288 in suit except the portion lying north of the line A 4 T 4. The suit is also decreed for the recovery of Rs. 341-8-6. Since the Association has failed with regard to nearly 1/11th of its claim it will get only 4/5th of the costs of Suit No. 24 of 1939 in the Court of the Civil Judge and of Appeal No. 86 of 1941.

P. C. Appeal No. 4 of 1944, Decided on 11-4-1947, Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, Lucknow, D/- 11-3-1947.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110—Affirmance—Meaning of — Decree affirmed in appeal but modified in cross-objection—Decree is varied and not affirmed.

Section 110 does not conceive of the decree as partly affirming and partly varying the original decision. It contemplates an appellate decree either as upholding the decision or as varying or modifying it and if an appeal is permissible, it is against the decree as a whole and not against the finding or adjudications on the controversies involved in the suit: 33 A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 307, Dissent. [Paras 4 & 14]

Where, therefore, the main appeal against the decision of the trial Court fails, but the decision is partly modified on cross-objection and there is no substantial question of law, the appellate decree must be taken to have varied the decision of the trial Court so as to entitle the appellant to appeal to His Majesty in Council under para. 3 of S. 110: 41 C. Judgment.—The following question has been referred to the Full Bench:

"Where the main appeal against the decision of the trial Court fails but the decision is partly modified on cross objection and there is no substantial question of law, does the appellate decree vary the decision of the trial Court as contemplated by S. 110, Civil P. C., so as to entitle the appellant to go up to His Majesty in Council."

[2] The suit was instituted by Mt. Aisha Bibi in the Court of the Civil Judge, Rae Bareli. She claimed possession of a 1/6th share in the properties of her parents by partition on the basis of inheritance. The value of the subject-matter of the suit namely her share was stated in the plaint to be Rs. 6311-11-0. The Court of the first instance passed a decree in her favour except in so far as her claim related to certain properties mentioned as item (1) in list C of the plaint. Two of the defendants, Abdus Samad and Abdul Ahmad, came up in appeal to this Court, and the plaintiff preferred cross objections. The appeal failed but the cross objections were allowed. The result was that the whole of the plaintiff's claim stood decreed. On 13th March 1944, Abdus Samad and Abdul Ahad presented petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council alleging that the decree of this Court involved or affected rights in other properties, the value of which exceeded Rs. 10,000 and in any event the case was one which should be certified to be fit for appeal under cl. (c) of S. 109, Civil P. C. The applicants maintained further that they were entitled to a certificate as of right inasmuch as the decree from which the appeal was sought to be preferred varied the decree of the trial Court, and that if it was a decree of affirmance, the proposed appeal involved substantial questions of law.

[3] By an order of a Bench of this Court, dated 5th March 1945, the contention that the case should be certified as fit for appeal under S. 109, cl. (c) was overruled. It was also held that there was no substantial question of law. The lower Court was asked to submit its finding on the question of valuation and it reported that the value of the properties in suit in lists C to I together with buildings and houses standing thereon which were not directly in suit is Rs. 11,000. The finding was based upon admission of the parties and no objections were preferred against it. The sole question which was, therefore, agitated before the Division Bench was whether the decree of this Court was one of affirmance within the meaning of S. 110. It was urged on applicants' behalf that even though their own appeal had failed since the plaintiff's cross objections were allowed the decree of this Court did not affirm the decision of the trial Court. On behalf of the opposite party, reliance was placed on 1944 O. W. N. 372,[1] which held in agreement with the view expressed in A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1024,[2] that where the High Court's decree in the main appeal confirmed that of the lower Court the mere fact that a decision was partly modified on cross-appeal or cross-objection did not afford a right of appeal to the persons whose appeal failed. A contrary opinion was expressed in a number of other decisions and to set the controversy at rest the Division Bench made the reference as stated above.

[4] The determination of the point involved depends primarily on interpretation of the relevant provision of the Code. The right of appeal to His Majesty in Council is mainly regulated by Ss. 109 and 110. Under S. 109, an appeal is to lie to His Majesty in Council (a) from any decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction; (b) from any decree or final order passed by a High Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction; and (c) from any decree or order when the case is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. To the general right of appeal thus conferred S. 110 provides certain restrictions. It says that where the appellant proposes to come under cls. (a) and (b) of S. 109

"the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be ten thousand rupees or upwards and the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be the same sum or upwards or the decree or final order must involve directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value and where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law."

We are concerned with the final clause of this section which renders the presence of a substantial question of law essential only if the appellate decree affirms the decision of the Court of first instance. On the plain reading of the provision it would be impossible to attach any qualifications to the affirmance except that it must be by the decree against which the appeal is preferred. Apparently regard is not to be had to the manner in which the affirmance is made or the person at whose instance it is brought about. The extent of affirmance is also not a matter to be considered. The sole question which arises under the clause is whether the appellate decree affirms or varies the decision of the Court immediately below on merits. This question scarcely presents much difficulty where there is only one decree passed by the High Court. But where there is a multiplicity of appeals, and consequently a number of appellate decrees are passed considerations other than those which prevail in the case of a single appellate decree may perhaps arise. We need not, however, concern ourselves with the latter class of cases. Where an appeal is sought to be preferred against a decree which varies the decision of the Court immediately below whether the variance is brought about at the instance of the appellant or at the instance of the respondent it cannot be said that the appellate decree affirms the decision of the first Court. The section does not conceive of the decree as partly affirming and partly varying the original decision. The Legislature appears to have envisaged an appellate decree either as upholding that decision or as varying or modifying it and if an appeal is permissible, it is against the decree as a whole and not against the finding or adjudications on the controversies involved in the suit.

[5] Were it, therefore, not for the conflicting case law on the point the position would appear to be clear. Some learned Judges have, however, inclined to the view that where the trial Court's decree comprises different matters and the High Court affirms that decree in respect of some matters only and reverses it in respect of others the appeal to the Privy Council must involve a substantial question of law if it is in respect of matters in regard to which the decree of the trial Court has been affirmed. Some typical cases which have resulted in this view may be briefly referred to.

[6] The first case is that in 8 C.W.N. 294.[3] There in a land acquisition case the applicant claimed a sum of Rs. 77,000 odd. The Collector assessed the value at Rs. 28,287. The Judge on reference upheld the Collector's award. The High Court awarded to the appellant a further sum of Rs. 7000. He was still dissatisfied with the decree and applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The learned Judges constituting the Special Bench considered that the decree against which the appellant desired to go up to His Majesty in Council was against the decision of the High Court "so far as it affirmed the decision of the Court below." The view was that though the High Court modified the original decree since the part of the decree against which the further appeal was sought to be preferred affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance so far as it related to that part, the bar imposed by the last clause of S. 110 operated to restrict the appeal to substantial questions of law.

[7] This decision was followed in A. I. R. 1916 Mad. 1222.[4] There the petitioner's suit for recovery of some jewels and cash was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, but on appeal it was partly decreed by the High Court. The plaintiff proposed to proceed to Privy Council in respect of the part of his case which failed in both Courts. The learned Judges found that no substantial question of law was involved and since the proposed appeal related to the part of the claim regarding which the trial Court's decision was affirmed by the High Court, they held that no further appeal was permissible.

[8] In A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1024,[2] a Division Bench of Madras High Court dealing with an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council in a case where its decree in the main appeal confirmed that of the Court of first instance but modified it on cross-objection held that the modification so made could not avail the applicant who otherwise would not have had the right of appeal under S. 110, Civil P. C.

[9] It may be mentioned that shortly before the decision in the last mentioned case their Lordships' Board had made an important pronouncement on the point in 51 I. A. 319.[5] That case arose out of a suit instituted by one Ruprao for possession of certain properties on the basis of inheritance from his adoptive father Shankar Rao. The defendants, namely Annapurnabai, who was Shankar Rao's second widow and Kashi Nath who was alleged to have been adopted by her, set up the rival claim of Kashi Nath and alternatively pleaded that Annapurnabai was entitled to maintenance. The trial Court decreed the suit in favour of Ruprao but awarded Rs. 800 per annum as maintenance to Annapurnabai. On appeal by the defendants the Judicial Commissioners of Nagpur upheld the decision so far as it related to possession but increased the maintenance allowance of Annapurnabai to Rs. 1200. The defendants thereupon applied for leave to appeal and claimed it as a matter of right on the ground that the decision of the first Court was not affirmed but varied by the Judicial Commissioners. They failed to get the leave because the learned Judges considered that the change was immaterial. Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not agree on this point. They held that S. 110 gave to the petitioners a right of appeal. The appeal before the Privy Council was, it would appear in view of the concurrent findings on questions of fact, desired to be confined to the amount of maintenance. The Judicial Committee, therefore, limited the appeal to that question only. The importance of this case lies in the fact that it tacitly overrules the view taken in the Calcutta and Madras cases to which reference has been made above inasmuch as in spite of the fact that both the Courts in India had concurred in disallowing the claim of maintenance to the extent of the balance such affirmance was not regarded as an obstacle and the appeal was admitted as of right. Even before this authoritative pronouncement of the Privy Council the decision in 8 C. W. N. 294[3] was not accepted as correct and since 1924 it has lost all its importance : see in this connection 10 O. C. 65;[6] A. I. R. 1921 ALL. 270;[7] 11 Lah. 465;[8] A. I. R. 1919 Cal. 118;[9] A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 250[10] and A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 561.[11]

[10] In A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1024[2] it was recognised that 8 C. W. N. 294[3] and A. I. R. 1916 Mad. 1222[4] might possibly require reconsideration in consequence of Annapurnabai's case but the learned Judges thought that in cases where there was an appeal and a cross-objection though only one decree is prepared the same principle as is applied in cases of cross appeals should prevail. They said that in either case there were two orders of the Court, one dismissing the appeal and affirming the lower Court's decree and the other allowing the memorandum of cross-objections or cross appeal and modifying the trial Court's decree. They remarked :

"So far then as the decree affirming the decree of the lower Court was concerned no appeal would lie to the Privy Council. Similarly no appeal would lie to the Privy Council in respect of the order on the memorandum of objections because the subject-matter of that appeal was only Rs. 300."

[11] The same line of argument is adopted before us by the learned counsel for the opposite party. In so far as the decree from which the appeal sought to be preferred is concerned, it is clear that it cannot be considered for the purposes of S. 110 as comprising as many decrees as there were items in the suit since cl. 3 does not warrant its being so split up : see 53 I. A. 197.[12] To say further that the portion against which the matter is to be taken up in appeal was not varied because the variation was made on a mere cross-objection is also we think a wrong approach to the question at issue. The decree from which the appeal was proposed to be preferred was a single decree and it is difficult to draw a distinction for the purposes of S. 110, Civil P. C., between one part of the suit and another according to the petitioners' failure or success in the High Court. Such an interpretation of S. 110 as is pressed before us does violence to the letter (of the section. The decision of the) Judges of Madras High Court in 1926 was mainly based on A. I. R. 1918 ALL. 245[13] but that was a case of cross appeals in the High Court and the proposed appeal was against the decree of affirmance. On behalf of Mt. Aisha Bibi the same line of argument was taken but this again in our opinion is a wrong method of approach. Cases of that class stand on a somewhat different footing and the points which prevailed in A.I.R. 1918 ALL. 245[13] or in the subsequent case of the Allahabad High Court in 57 ALL. 873[14] do not fall to be considered where the decree of the High Court from which the appeal is proposed to be taken to His Majesty in Council partly affirms and partly modifies the original decision. In saying this we do not desire to be understood as laying down the proposition that if the cross-objections in the present case were a cross appeal and two decrees were passed by this Court an appeal to the Privy Council against the decree affirming a part of the decision would be incompetent in the absence of a substantial question of law. Other aspects of the matter may have to be taken into account in such a case and it may or may not be possible to interpret the word 'decree' occurring in the last clause of the section in a larger sense as embodying the net result of the whole suit. We observe that there are already two conflicting views on that matter. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court holds that there is no variation (vide 57 ALL. 873[14]) while the Patna High Court Full Bench expresses a contrary opinion : see A. I. R. 1941 Pat. 269.[15] This controversy does not concern us since here we have a single appellate decree disposing of the entire suit.

[12] The construction that we have placed on cl. 3 of S. 110, Civil P. C., finds direct support from 41 C. W. N. 494,[16] the Full Bench decision in 54 ALL. 146[17] and I. L. R. (1947) Mad. 6.[18] The last case was similar to the case in A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1024.[2] The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a settlement deed executed by a widow in respect of a number of items of property was void. The trial Court passed a decree in respect of six items in plaintiffs' favour and dismissed it in respect of the remaining five. The defendants appealed and the plaintiffs preferred cross-objections therein. The appeal was dismissed, but the cross-objections were allowed. The valuation of the objections was less than Rs. 10,000 and it was contended on the strength of A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1024[2] that there could be no right of appeal to the Judicial Committee by reason of the fact that variation was made on cross-objections. This contention was negatived. The learned Judges constituting the Full Bench considered in the first place that the decision in the case cited was in conflict with the judgment of the same learned Judges in 52 Mad. 521[19] and in the second place that it erred in separating the appeal and the memorandum of objections and treating the orders of the High Court as embodying two separate decrees. The view to which they gave expression was that as the defendants desired to challenge in appeal to the Privy Council the validity of the plaintiffs' claim with regard to ten of the eleven items of property the value of which was admittedly above rupees 10,000 and as the appellate decree varied the trial Court's decree in respect of four of the items of property it was one of variation and not of affirmance and therefore the defendants were entitled as of right to the leave. We respectfully agree with this view.

[13] The case in 1944 O. W. N. 372,[1] we have already mentioned, bases itself primarily upon the previous Madras view which has since been overruled. It appears that the attention of the learned Judges in the Oudh case was not invited to 51 I.A. 319[5] or to 1935 O.W.N. 947[20] and 54 ALL. 146.[17] We venture to think that the learned Judges of the Madras Court whose opinion was accepted in the Oudh case rejected without sufficient reason the contention urged before them that the cross-objections are regarded in law as an integral part of the appeal since there was one decree prepared by the Court both in appeal and cross-objections and such decree did not affirm the decision of the Court immediately below. One essential difference between such a case and the case where there is a cross appeal consists in the fact that in one case the decree from which appeal is proposed embraces the result of cross objection also while in the other it does not contain any expression of adjudication on the cross appeal.

[14] The only other case of any importance which lays down a contrary rule is A. I. R. 1946 Nag. 307.[21] According to it if there are several controversies in the suit and the decision of the Court is embodied in one document, described as a decree the adjudication with regard to each matter in controversy is in itself a decree. In that sense, it says one document described as a decree may contain several adjudications on several distinct matters and may amount to several decrees. According to the learned Judges who constituted the Division Bench the word "decision" in S. 110 means the decision of a suit so far as it is the subject-matter of the proposed appeal and not the decision of the suit as a whole. In their opinion, it was an unduly narrow interpretation of S. 110 to hold that a decree which varies the total decision of the Court below in however small a manner should automatically be a non-affirming decree. The distinction they observe should not be made to depend on the question whether the variation is by means of a cross-objection or by means of a separate decree in a cross appeal because such a distinction would entirely be technical and particularly so in view of the fact that by the provisions of O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., the hearing of the memorandum of cross-objections does not depend on the hearing of the appeal and may itself be heard as a substantive cross appeal. The view propounded in relation to the controversies in suit is based upon the observations of Niamat-Ullah J., in 57 ALL. 873.[14] We may with respect point out that it will be stretching the meaning of the word "decree" in cl. (3) of S. 110 to say that the Legislature gives the right of appeal against each component part of it and that the decision of the Court of first instance must be considered to be varied or affirmed with respect to each controversy in the suit. The fact that under O. 41, R. 22 a memorandum of cross-objections may be heard even if the appeal fails or is withdrawn is, if we may say so, hardly material for there would be only one decree whether the appeal did or did not reach the stage of hearing, and if that decree modified the decision of the Court immediately below an appeal to the Privy Council as of right would lie if the other conditions of S. 110 warranted it. We are of opinion that the construction placed upon the words "decree" and "decision" in the Nagpur case is unduly strained and we, therefore, respectfully dissent from the law there enunciated by the learned Judges. Our opinion may result in widening the scope of the section. It can scarcely be regarded as "unduly narrow."

[15] Our answer to the reference, therefore, is in the affirmative. Let the case be returned to the Division Bench with the above answer.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 15 and Sch. 2, Art. 31—Suit for accounts, meaning of — Suit by agent against principal claiming definite sum of money.

A suit by an agent against his principal for a definite sum (made up of rebates and canvassing charges) is not a suit for accounts. The reason is that in the first place the plaintiff has claimed a definite sum of money and the mere fact that accounts have to be gone into in order to ascertain the sum due to the plaintiff does not make the suit one for accounts. In the second place the agent cannot sue his principal for accounts because the principal is not under any obligation to render accounts to the agent. It is a suit for an ascertained amount which will have to be verified by the Court upon examination of the accounts. Such a suit lies in a Small Cause Court: 15 A. I. R. 1928 All. 332; 27 A. I. Govind Behari Lal — for Applicant.

Order. — This is an application in revision under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The facts are that Baley Din Gupta is the agent of the Bengal Immunity Company Ltd., and was working for them during the years 1938 to 1940. On 17-3-1943, Baley Din Gupta filed a suit against the company for Rs. 153-4-9 made up of "rebates and canvassing charges." The plaint was ordered to be returned to plaintiff by the Judge, Small Cause Court, on the ground that the suit did not lie in a Small Cause Court because it was admitted that for "arriving at those 'rebates' the items of goods of all the years in suit will have to be checked and the parties' credit and debit sides will have to be examined. Nothing more or less has got to be done in a suit for an account."

[2] The applicant's learned counsel contends that this view is not correct. A suit for an account is a special form of suit, and does not mean every suit in which accounts have to be looked to in order to ascertain the correctness or otherwise of the amount claimed by the plaintiff. A. I. R. 1928 ALL. 332[1] is cited :

"A suit does not become one for accounts simply because accounts have to be taken before a balance due from the defendant to the plaintiff can be discovered. A suit for accounts will be one where a preliminary decree for accounts will be necessary, and it will be necessary for the Court to call upon the defendant to render accounts.

A suit was brought by a plaintiff to recover a fixed amount in excess of the value of the goods supplied by the defendant to him, and for which he had made payments in advance. Every transaction between the parties was separately dealt with, and the defendant became liable to repay the sum which he had received in excess of the price ultimately fetched by any one consignment delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff :

Held, that the suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court."

[3] In A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 504[2] it was held that a suit for an account is a special form of suit and does not embrace every case in which accounts have to be looked into to ascertain the amount due to the plaintiff, and that a suit for an account implies that the plaintiff is entitled under the substantive law to demand an account from the defendant. It was also held that an employer can call upon his agent for an account, but an agent cannot call upon his employer for an account. In A. I. R. 1937 Cal. 359[3] it was held that there cannot be in law a suit for accounts unless the defendant in the suit is under an obligation to render accounts to the plaintiff. The obligation is upon the agent to render accounts to the principal. The principal owes no obligation to render accounts to the agent. The mere fact that in ascertaining the sum due to the plaintiff it would be necessary to investigate accounts does not alter the nature of the suit.

[4] Though these cases may not be exactly on all fours with the present case, the principle involved seems to apply. In the first place the plaintiff has claimed a definite sum of money and the mere fact that accounts have to be gone into in order to ascertain the sum due to the plaintiff does not make the suit one for accounts. In the second place the plaintiff cannot sue his principal for accounts because the principal is not under any obligation to render accounts to the agent. It follows that this is not and cannot be a suit for accounts. It is a suit for an ascertained amount which will have to be verified by the Court upon examination of the accounts. Such a suit lies in a Small Cause Court.

[5] I, therefore, allow this application under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The suit is returned to the Small Cause Court for trial according to law. The applicant will get his costs in this Court.

A Food Grain Inspector under the U. P. Food Grain Rationing Order (1945) is a person in authority within S. 24, Evidence Act and consequently before a statement made in his presence is admitted in evidence as a confession the Court must be satisfied that the making of it was not caused by any inducement, threat or promise. I. A. Abbassi and Shanker Sahai — for Applicant.

P. N. Chaudhri Assistant Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Order. — The applicants Abu and Mohabbat in these two revisions were charged under the Defence of India Rules for having infringed the provisions of the U. P. Food Grain Rationing Order of 1945, in that Abu sold to Mohabbat 3 maunds, 37 seers and 8 chitanks of maida at the rate of Rs. 60 per bag and thereby committed an offence under S. 4 (1) of the Order. Mohabbat was charged under S. 4 (5) of the Order for having purchased the said quantity of maida. The trial Court convicted both the accused under S. 4 (1) and sentenced them each to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment.

[2] On appeal the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow has upheld their convictions and sentences. He has mainly relied upon two documents, Exs. 3 and 2, which are said to be the confessions made by Abu and Mohabbat before Mr. A. M. Khan, Rationing Inspector, who has been produced as P. W. 2. These two documents were not considered by the trying Magistrate and the first objection taken in these revisions is that neither of the two documents can be relied upon for the purpose of convicting the applicants because (a) they were not put to the accused under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C.; (b) they are confessions made before a person who comes within the purview of the words "a police officer" used in S. 25, Evidence Act; (c) in any case they are confessions made to a person in authority and are inadmissible in evidence unless the Court is satisfied that they were voluntarily made: vide S. 24, Evidence Act.

[3] With regard to the first point, it has been laid down in A.I.R. 1933 P. C. 124[1] at p. 130 that it is the duty of the Magistrate to call the accused's attention to any circumstances appearing against him and to ask for his explanation. In 1934 O. W. N. 1206[2] at p. 1209, two learned Judges of this Court laid down the following principle:

"The principles underlying the provisions of S. 342 of the Code are based on the legal maxim 'audi alteram partem' (hear the other side) and this section contemplates that the accused should be heard and his explanation taken on every circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. The object of this section is to ensure that the trying Court after having heard prosecution should proceed to hear the defence also and for this purpose the Court must interrogate the accused and call upon him to explain if he can the circumstances appearing against him. The provisions of this section are meant as much to safeguard the interests of the accused as to enable the Court to come to a right conclusion as to the truth of the charge made against the accused and the provisions of the statute, therefore, must be strictly enforced, and disobedience of the express mandatory provisions of this section cannot be condoned under S. 537, Criminal P. C., as being a mere irregularity. The object of this section is that the accused should be brought face to face with the witnesses, who give evidence against him and should be solemnly given an opportunity to make a statement from his place in the dock, so that the Court may have the advantage of hearing his defence, if he is willing to make one with his own lips."

[4] In the present case, Exs. 2 and 3 were on the record of the trial Court and they had been put to Mr. A. M. Khan who stated that they were the statements of the accused. If they were to be relied upon by the trial Court they were the strongest piece of evidence appearing on the record against the accused. Abu accused when questioned whether he had sold the maida to Mohabbat, denied it and stated that he had put it at Mohabbat's place. This statement of his was obviously opposed to his own statement contained in Ex. 3; and if the Court desired to rely upon this document it was bound to put it to Abu in order to elicit his explanation with regard to it, if he had any to give. The failure of the trying Magistrate to do so has, therefore, been an infringement of the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., and would exclude this document from consideration in determining the guilt of the accused. In this connection it is not out of place to point out that the learned Magistrate based his conviction of the accused entirely on the oral evidence and did not place any reliance upon Exs. 2 and 3. It is natural to suppose that he was not satisfied that these confessions had been properly obtained; otherwise there is no reason why he should not rely upon them since they are the only proof of the actual sale of the grain by Abu to Mohabbat. This circumstance would, however, only mean that the trial is vitiated, but it would not remove the possibility of a fresh trial. It is, therefore, necessary to consider whether there is any substance in the other two pleas of the applicants with regard to these documents.

[5] With regard to the plea that these two documents are statements made before a person occupying the status of a police officer, my attention has been drawn to cases reported in A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 430;[3] A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 580;[4] A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 4[5] and A.I.R. 1938 Sind 1,[6] in which inspectors of various departments have been held to occupy the status and position of police officers and statements made before them have been excluded from evidence. All these cases were based upon a consideration of the powers conferred upon the officer in question by the enactments under which they were appointed. In every one of those enactments, those officers were given all the powers of a police officer in charge of a police station under the Criminal Procedure Code. They possessed very wide powers, including the powers of arresting and detaining an accused person. The Inspector in the present case possesses very limited powers. The only one of the powers of the police which he possesses is the power to "enter and search houses." Section 37 of the Order also authorises him to collect such information from any person as may be necessary. He is not, however, given any power of resorting to any means of compulsion for obtaining information. There is thus a great deal of difference between his powers and those of a police officer. In a case of this Court (Criminal Revision No. 5 of 1947) a learned Judge has taken a view that Piece Goods Inspectors, whose office corresponds to that of Food Grain Inspectors, are not police officers. In that case also, the cases to which reference has been made before me, were placed before the learned Judge, and I respectfully agree with the conclusion at which he arrived. Exhibits 2 and 3 are, therefore, not inadmissible by reason of S. 25, Evidence Act.

[6] With regard to the third point, it cannot be doubted that a person in the position of a Food Grain Inspector is a person in authority and that consequently before a statement made in his presence is admitted in evidence as a confession the Court must be satisfied that the making of it was not caused by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused proceeding from a person in authority. It is no doubt true that the prosecution is not called upon in every case to give evidence that the extra-judicial confession was a voluntary one. But, if there is anything to arouse suspicion, there must be evidence to show that the confession is a free and voluntary act. In the present case, there is no direct evidence either way. But, as I have already remarked, the trial Court did not rely upon the confession at all; nor did it think it necessary to put the two confessions to the accused persons, one of whom at least was denying the alleged sale which is admitted in Ex. 3. Further, it appears from the record that these statements Exs. 2 and 3 were attested and that a witness of one of them was summoned, but that he was given up on his stating that he knew nothing about the matter. In these circumstances the defence was not called upon either to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses who deposed about Exs. 2 and 3 or to produce defence evidence to show that those two documents were not the voluntary statements of the accused. The learned Sessions Judge has ignored this aspect of the matter and he has gone so far as to remark that "it is nobody's case that it was a mistaken admission." This remark seems surprising in view of the statement of Abu that he did not sell the maida in question to Mohabbat. Obviously this statement is nothing less than a denial of the admission contained in Ex. 3. The evidence on the record is thus not sufficient to establish that Exs. 2 and 3 were the voluntary statements of the accused persons and, therefore, they cannot be admitted in evidence against them in view of the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act.

[7] If these two documents are excluded, there only remains the oral evidence, and this taken with the circumstantial evidence does not prove that there was sale of maida by Abu to Mohabbat. The evidence on the record, apart from the technicality involved in Exs. 2 and 3 not having been put to the accussd, is not sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused and there is no occasion to order a retrial.

[8] It may also be remarked that both the Courts below have placed considerable emphasis upon the plea of guilty put in by Mohabbat. They have, however, failed to notice that he pleaded guilty not to the charge under which he has been convicted, but to an entirely different charge namely one under S. 4 (5), U. P. Food Grain Rationing Order. His conviction, therefore, is bad on this ground also. The District Magistrate sanctioned his prosecution for an offence under S. 4 (1) of the Order. He was, however, charged under S. 4 (5) of the Order and he was asked to plead to that charge. The Court has convicted him under S. 4 (1) of the Order without even amending the charge or giving the accused an opportunity of meeting it. Since there was no sanction for the prosecution of Mohabbat under S. 4 (5) of the Order the proceedings against him under a charge for infringement of that clause was bad in law and must be set aside.

[9] The result is that I allow both the revision applications, set aside the convictions and sentences passed upon the accused applicants and direct that they be released forthwith unless they are required in connection with some other offence.

Order. — Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 633 of 1946 relating to S. 115 Application No. 99 of 1941 and Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 634 of 1946 in S. 115 Application No. 100 of 1941 have been referred by the Hon'ble the Chief Judge to a Bench under S. 14 (2), Oudh Courts Act. Both of them raise the same point, and are made on the same facts, and may conveniently be disposed of by one common order. They arise on the following facts.

[2] One Khuda Bakhsh Khan filed two revision applications (Nos. 99 and 100 of 1941) in this Court on 31-7-1941, through his counsel, Mr. Faiyaz Ali. They were admitted the same day and notices were ordered to be issued. Khuda Bakhsh died in December 1943, leaving his widow Mt. Saiful Bibi, and three minors, Akhtar Husain Khan, Ali Hasan Khan and Abdur Razzak Khan as his heirs and legal representatives. On 13-3-1945, when these cases were taken up for hearing (the two applications were connected by an order of the Hon'ble the Chief Judge) Mr. Naimullah holding brief for Mr. Faiyaz Ali appeared and informed the Court that his client was dead. It was ordered accordingly that the case should stand adjourned till an application for substitution was made or the applications abated. On 29-8-1945, the applications were taken up again in the presence of Faiyaz Ali. The office report that no application for substitution of names in place of the deceased applicant had been filed was considered and the following order was recorded : "As the sole applicant is dead and no action has been taken the application has abated." On 8-5-1946, Mr. Faiyaz Ali presented two applications Nos. 633 and 634 of 1946, for substitution of names of the legal representatives of Khuda Bakhsh Khan. He averred that as O. 22, Civil P. C. did not apply to revision applications but only to suits and appeals, the present applications for substitution were maintainable under S. 151, Civil P. C. "and were well within time under Art. 181, Limitation Act." These applications were strongly opposed by the opposite party. The Hon'ble the Chief Judge before whom the application came up for hearing has referred them to a Bench as already stated.

[3] Mr. Faiyaz Ali relied on the decisions of this Court in 15 Luck. 26[1] at pp. 28 and 29 and 16 Luck. 72[2] in support of his contention that O. 22, Civil P. C., has no application to an application for substitution of the names of the legal representatives in place of a deceased party in a revision application and that there was no rule of limitation governing an application for substitution of parties in civil revisions. Reference was also made by the learned counsel to 80 I. C. 456.[3] We have also before us another decision by a single Judge of this Court in Appln. No. 112 of 1942.[4] In this case the two decisions of this Court referred to above were followed and it was held that O. 22, Civil P. C., does not apply to substitution of names of legal representatives in an application for revision.

[4] The case reported in 15 Luck. 26[1] arose on the following facts : One Seth Pearey Lal held a decree against Nawab Syed Kazim Husain. The judgment-debtor applied under S. 30, U. P.

Agriculturists' Relief Act for reduction of interest in respect of this decree. The application was rejected on 14-12-1936, and Nawab Syed Kazim Husain filed a revision petition in this Court against that order. The application was admitted on 30-4-1937, by a Bench of this Court. Seth Pearey Lal, the decree-holder, died on 23-8-1938. On 22-11-1938, the applicant, Kazim Husain applied for the names of the three minor sons of the deceased, who according to him were his heirs and legal representatives, to be brought on the record in place of that of the deceased. On 8-4-1939 the application was rejected on the ground that in view of the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act of 1937, it was not the sons of Pearey Lal but the widow who was the legal representative of the deceased. The next day, after the dismissal of the application for substitution, Kazim Husain made another application for substitution of the name of the widow of Seth Pearey Lal as his legal representative. It was contended on behalf of the widow that the application having been mademore than ninety days after the death of Seth Pearey Lal was beyond time. Radha Krishna Srivastava J., before whom the application came up for hearing, took the view that if abatement had taken place there was no sufficient cause for setting it aside. He was, however, of opinion that inasmuch as by R. 12 of O. 22, Rr. 3, 4 and 8 were made inapplicable to proceedings in execution of decrees, these provisions could not apply to the case before him. He further observed as follows :

"There is no provision of law laying down procedure for substitution in place of a deceased party in a revision application and the reason is obvious. The remedy provided by S. 115, Civil P. C., is absolutely discretionary with the High Court. This section empowers the High Court to call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies, and if certain conditions are fulfiled then the High Court is entitled to pass such orders as it thinks fit. This section does not lay down the procedure by which the High Court is to be moved to call for the record of any case. There is no specific provision for an applicant to move the High Court to take action under S. 115, Civil P. C. The applications that are made are just a method of bringing the matter to the notice of the High Court and no more. When an application has been admitted, the effect of the admission is that the High Court has decided to call for the record of the case and in my opinion when that stage is reached it is the duty of the High Court to examine the record and pass such orders as it thinks fit and in order to be able to do this more effectively it is necessary that the record be examined in the presence of the parties. If a party to the case has died in the meantime it is only just and proper that his legal representatives be brought before the Court and such an order to bring such legal representatives on the record of a revision application can be passed under S. 151, Civil P. C."

He accordingly ordered under S. 151, Civil P. C. that the name of the widow of Seth Pearey Lal be brought on the record in place of that of her deceased husband, Seth Pearey Lal. We agree with the view taken by the learned Judge in so far as the applicability of the provisions of O. 22, Civil P. C. to revision applications is concerned. We further agree with him that no period of limitation is prescribed for such an application. We are, however, with respect unable to subscribe to the view taken in the last portion of the above paragraph which would appear to cast a duty upon the High Court, once it admits a revision application, to call for the record of the case and to consider it, irrespective of whether the applicant does or does not carry out his duties as an ordinary litigant with respect to the application. If the principle laid down by the learned Judge were pressed to its logical conclusion it would follow that no revision application made under S. 115, Civil P. C., once it is admitted, could not be dismissed for default. But we are aware that if the applicant in such a case does not appear on the date of hearing, or does not otherwise prosecute the case, his application is liable to be dismissed for default. The effect of the admission of a revision application is to our mind no more than that the High Court has decided that the record shall be sent for and the applicant heard in support of his application unless by his conduct in connexion with the proceedings he disentitles himself to such hearing. We are unable to hold that by admitting a revision application the High Court necessarily undertakes to examine the record of the case. This may be so where the High Court sends for a case in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction sue motu. The reason given by Radha Krishna Srivastava J. for the view he took was the same as formed the basis of the decision in the Sind case, 80 I. C. 456,[3] and the same remarks apply to that case.

[5] The case reported in 16 Luck. 72[2] has in our opinion no bearing on the point that arises before us for consideration. It was held in that case that in view of the provisions of S. 50, Encumbered Estates Act in the case of the death of a landlord applicant there is no abatement. The basis of that decision was not the reasoning on which Radha Krishna Srivastava J relied, but the provisions of S. 50, Encumbered Estates Act which lays down that :

"If a landlord with regard to whom a notice has been published under S. 9 dies before a declaration has been made in respect of him under S. 44, (a) the proceedings under this Act shall be continued as nearly as may be possible in all respects as if the landlord were still living; and (b) any person succeeding to the whole or any portion of the landlord's property shall become subject in respect of that property to the disabilities imposed by sub-s. (2) of S. 7 and shall continue to be subject until a declaration has been made in respect of him under S. 44."

In view of this statutory provision, no question of abatement could possibly arise if the landlord applicant who had made an application under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act died after a notice under S. 9 of that Act had been published with regard to such landlord.

[6] It is well established in this Court, as it was in the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court that applications for revision are not admitted beyond the time allowed for appeals except for special reasons : see 10 O. L. J. 205;[5] A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 608;[6] A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 496[7] and 1936 O.W.N. 262.[8] We see no good reason why the same principle as is observed in regard to revision applications presented beyond the period of limitation allowed for appeals should not, by parity of reasoning, be applied to applications for substitution of names of legal representatives of a deceased applicant if such an application is not presented within a reasonable time (which in the case of such an application is the time mentioned in O. 22, Civil P. C.) unless good cause for the delay is shown. It is true that the proceedings in such a case do not abate by virtue of the provisions of O. 22, Civil P. C. ; but when the word "abatement" is used in connexion with such an application, all that is meant is that in view of the fact that no steps were taken to bring the legal representatives of the deceased applicant on record within a reasonable time, the proceedings shall cease. In such a context "abatement" has the same meaning as it has in the expression "plea in abatement," which as mentioned in Wharton's Law Lexicon, means "a defence by which a defendant showed cause to the Court why he should not be sued, or, if sued, not in the form adopted by the plaintiff, and praying that the action might abate, i. e., cease." It cannot be disputed that the exercise of revisional jurisdiction by a High Court is a matter of discretion. If this is so, it is clear to our mind that the High Court has, in circumstances like those of the present case, a discretion to order for adequate reasons that the proceedings shall cease and be no longer continued. There is in our opinion nothing illegal, improper or unjust in this view. On the other hand, it would be somewhat illogical to apply one principle in regard to revision applications and another to substitution applications presented in the course of those proceedings and for which no period of limitation is prescribed by law.

[7] Turning to the facts of the two applications before us, we find that Khuda Bakhsh Khan died in December 1943. No steps were taken by his legal representatives for substitution of their names on the record. On 13-3-1945, Mr. Naimullah, who held brief for Mr. Faiyaz Ali, the counsel who presented these applications for revision stated that Khuda Bakhsh Khan was dead. The case was ordered to stand over till an application for substitution was made, or the applications abated. The cases were again taken up on 29-8-1945, i. e., about one year and eight months after the death of Khuda Bakhsh Khan in the presence of Mr. Faiyaz Ali, and it was ordered that the applications abated. The present applications were made on 8-5-1946. The affidavits accompanying the applications do not give any grounds for the unconscionable delay of over two years in making them. It would appear from these applications that substitution was asked for as a matter of right, something which the Court was bound to allow, howsoever late it was applied for. We are of opinion that the applicants are not entitled to have their names brought on the record as a matter of right if the application asking for it is unduly delayed and in the circumstances of the present case we are clear that there are no grounds for condoning the delay. The result, therefore, is that the applications are dismissed with costs. The order of abatement shall stand.

One N died in 1928. His widow S executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of her step-daughter. On the death of S the plaintiff brought a suit for possession based on his reversionary title. Order. — This is an application in revision by the Chief Inspector of Stamps. It is directed against an order of the learned Civil Judge, Gonda, rejecting the Chief Inspector's report regarding the deficiency of court-fee amounting to Rs. 2612-8-0.

[2] The suit which gave rise to the report was instituted by one Bhaiya Bhagwati Prasad Singh and another person claiming under him as a reversioner of one Thakur Nageshwar Bux Singh, Taluqdar of Shahpur Estate in district Gonda. The facts mentioned in the plaint are that Nageshwar Bux Singh died on 6-4-1928, that he left a will, dated 30-9-1927 whereby he bequeathed most of his property to his wife, Mt. Saraswati Kuar. Mt. Saraswati Kuar died on 31-5-1942. The plaintiff's case rests upon his reversionary title on the death of this lady.

[3] The property is in possession of the Court of Wards who is in charge of the estate of Nageshwar Bux Singh's daughter Kishori Lalli by another wife. It appears that in 1930 while the estate of Thakurain Saraswati Kuar was in possession of the Court of Wards, the aforesaid Thakurain executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of her step-daughter Kishori Lalli, and it was in consequence of that that the superintendence of the property in suit was assumed by the Court of Wards. The plaint mentioned the existence of the deed of relinquishment, and it also mentioned that the deed was ineffective and void for various reasons. The relief claimed was one for possession based on plaintiff's reversionary title. No relief was claimed in respect of the deed of relinquishment. The Chief Inspector of Stamps considered that the suit "involved" cancellation of the deed of relinquishment within the meaning of S. 7 (iv-A), Court-fees Act. This view was not accepted by the lower Court and the report was rejected. Dissatisfied with the aforesaid decision, the Chief Inspector of Stamps has come up in revision under S. 6B, Court-fees Act.

[4] The sole question with which we are concerned is whether the cancellation of the deed of 1930 is or is not involved in the suit. We have carefully considered the plaint and have come to the conclusion that the revision application must fail. The sole cause of action, according to the plaint, is the death of the widow Thakurain Saraswati Kuar, and the sole prayer is one for possession. The statement as to the deed of relinquishment contained in the plaint was, in our opinion, intended to explain the present possession of the Court of Wards over the property and to lay before the Court all the facts of which the reversioner was in possession. It is conceded that the allegations in para. 15 were not essential for the relief claimed. It is urged, however, that the court-fee must be paid upon what the plaint says, and if it mentions that a deed is unenforceable or void, it must be taken to involve cancellation of the instrument. In our opinion this contention is fallacious. A mere anticipation of a defence in the plaint and an averment that such a defence is unavailing does not mean that that statement is a substantive part of the plaintiff's case. The test which we think might well be applied for determination of the question whether the suit does or does not involve cancellation of a document within the meaning of S. 7, cl. (iv-A) is whether the granting of the relief which the plaintiff seeks necessarily requires a cancellation of a deed. "Involve" according to Oxford Dictionary means "to include, to contain, to imply, specially to contain implicitly." In our opinion, the relief claimed does not include any relief either expressly or by necessary implication as to adjudging void the deed of 1930. It is well-known that a reversioner may treat a widow's alienation as a nullity and may ignore it. In such a case there is nothing to set aside. The mere mention of the defendant's case in the plaint with an allegation that that claim is invalid or unfounded cannot be regarded as essential for the relief sought.

[5] Reference was made on behalf of the applicant to 1913 O. W. N. 230.[1] That case, in our opinion, has no material bearing on the facts with which we are concerned. There the plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration of his right to certain property on the basis of a deed executed in his favour by a lady whose title was founded upon a will and the defendant challenged validity of the will. The suit was decreed and the defendant again challenged the validity of the will in appeal. It was held that the appellant stood in the position of a plaintiff and S. 7, cl. (iv-A) would be applicable to him so far as the court-fee payable on appeal was concerned. Of the other cases cited by the applicant's learned counsel reference may be made only to a decision of the Allahabad High Court in 1944 O. W. N. 94.[2] There a plaintiff sued for a declaration and prayed for such other relief as may be considered necessary under the circumstances of the case. There was apparently a previous decree standing against him, and it was necessary to have it adjudged void or voidable before the substantive relief could be available to him. In these circumstances the learned Judge held that the suit involved cancellation of the decree and the court-fee was payable ad valorem.

[6] There is no doubt that in cases where the relief sought cannot be granted without necessarily setting aside a decree or an instrument securing money or property, S. 7, cl. (iv-A) would apply. In the present case, as we have said above, the cancellation of the deed of relinquishment was not necessary for granting the relief which the plaintiff desired. There is no substance in this revision. It fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Where an award of arbitrators negatives the right of one party claiming under a will to the property in dispute and allots the property between both the parties in a certain proportion, it is not merely a statement of fact but a declaration of will since it not only operates to change the relations of the parties to the property but also purports to do so and as such it requires registration. (c) Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (2) (vi) — Compromise and award — Distinction between.

There is a great distinction between a compromise and an award. A compromise is a settlement of disputes between the parties on a purely voluntary basis whilst an award has the same measure of compulsion as a decree of Court, the difference being that in the case of award it is a decision of a tribunal selected by the parties themselves. In the case of compromises the parties are at liberty to decide whatever they please, whilst in the case of arbitrations through the intervention of the Court it is only the dispute before the Court that can be referred to arbitration: 23 A. Where a revenue Court in a mutation case refers the mutation dispute to arbitration but the arbitrators decide not only the mutation dispute but also the question of title, the portion of the award relating to the adjudication on the question of title cannot be incorporated in the mutation order as the power of the revenue Court to refer to arbitration in a mutation case under S. 203, U. Judgment.— The property in dispute in these appeals belonged to one Bhaiya Baleswhar Datt of village Nagwa, Tahsil Tarabganj, District Gonda, who died issueless on 15th May 1933. He left no widow and, on his death, disputes arose as to succession to his property, Girja Datt, appellant 1, claiming as the nearest sapinda, and Gangotri Datt, the respondent, setting up a will in his favour During the course of mutation proceedings, there was a settlement through the intermediation of arbitrators. The mutation Court acted upon the award of the arbitrators and ordered mutation of six annas share in all the properties left by Bhaiya Baleshwar Datt Singh in favour of Gangotri Datt Singh, the remaining ten annas share being entered in the name of Girja Datt, who was also to become the administrator of an endowment created by Baleshwar Datt in his lifetime.

[2] On 11th April 1936, Girja Datt Singh made an application under S. 4 Encumbered Estates Act which was duly forwarded to the Special Judge, 1st Grade, of Gonda. Appellants 2 and 3, who are the son and grandson respectively of Girja Datt, joined in the application as being members of a joint Hindu family with Girja Datt. The appellants filed a written statement in the Court of the Special Judge on 21st May 1936, and in the list of properties attached to this written statement they also showed the ten annas share of the properties left by Baleshwar Datt which had been entered in the name of Girja Datt.

[3] Gangotri Datt, the respondent, objected to the list and, on 22nd May 1937, he filed a claim under S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act, alleging that he was the owner of this property and that it was consequently not liable to attachment sale or mortgage for the satisfaction of the debts of Girja Datt. He based his claim upon a will which, he alleged, Baleshwar Datt Singh had executed on 17th March 1933. He pleaded that he was not bound by the award upon which the mutation Court had acted for a large number of reasons which he gave in detail in his written statement of claim. They may briefly be summarised as follows : (a) That he was induced to refer the case to arbitration by reason of undue pressure and coercion ; (b) That, in any case, he had revoked his agreement to refer to arbitration before anything was done under the reference ; (c) That the arbitrators had misconducted themselves and had acted in collusion with Girja Datt Singh ; hence the award was vitiated and should not have effect given to it ; (d) That the arbitration was only for the purposes of the mutation case and effect could not be given in a civil case to the award which resulted from it; and (e) That the reference related only to village Nagwa and not to all the property.

[4] In his written reply dated 26th October 1937, Girja Datt traversed all the allegations about the award and pleaded that it was valid and binding and conclusively determined the rights of the parties. He pleaded that the decision of the mutation case operated as res judicata and that a fresh enquiry was barred both under S. 11, Civil P. C. as well as under S. 207, U. P. Land Revenue Act. He denied the execution, completion and validity of the will and alleged that, even if it was proved, it was invalid for various reasons, the principal being: (1) that Gangotri and his uncle, Tribhuwan Datt, were the servants of Baleshwar Datt and found an opportunity of getting him to execute the will which he did not understand properly "on account of weakness of mind, constant ailments and old age"; (2) that Babu Gur Charan Lal, a lawyer of Gonda, had considerable influence over Baleshwar and, in conspiracy with Gangotri and Tribhuwan, he used that influence to get the will executed in order to cause loss to Girja Datt to whom he was hostile. Baleshwar Datt did not realise the consequences of his acts ; and (3) that an owner has, by custom, no power to make a will so as to deprive his legal heir.

[5] Upon these pleadings the Court framed the following issues :

"(1) Did Bhaiya Baleshwar Dutt Singh execute a will as alleged ?

(2) Is it invalid for the reasons alleged by the applicants ?

(3) Are the objectors' application for reference to arbitration and the award of the arbitrators null and void as alleged ?

(4) Even if not, were they for village Nagwa only ? If so, its effect ? Is the point res judicata ?

(5) Do the agreement for reference to arbitration and award, amount to a family settlement ? If so, its effect?

5 (a) Is it invalid as alleged ?

(b) Can the objector plead against it ?

(6) Is the rent Court's decision about the award res judicata? Does no civil suit lie as alleged?"

[6] At the request of the appellants, issue 6 was treated as a preliminary issue and the learned Special Judge decided that there was no res judicata nor was a civil suit barred. Girja Datt brought the matter up in appeal to this Court and on 14th December 1941, a Bench of which one of us was a member, held that neither S. 11, Civil P. C., nor S. 207, U. P. Land Revenue Act, barred the claim of Gangotri Datt under the Encumbered Estates Act: vide 1942 O. W. N. 30.[1]

[7] The case was then again taken up by the Special Judge and he held: (1) That the will was proved to have been duly and intelligently executed and attested; (2) That there was no reliable evidence to support the allegation that Babu Gur Charan Lal exercised any undue influence; (3) That Bhaiya Baleshwar Datt was neither an idiot nor feeble-minded; (4) That there was no conspiracy between Babu Gur Charan Lal, Tribhuwan and Gangotri to cause Baleshwar Datt to execute a will; (5) That in the mutation Court there was a bona fide dispute as to succession and there was room for a family settlement; but the award in the present case was not a family settlement; (6) That the reference to arbitration was made by Bhaiya Gangotri Datt of his own free will and he could not withdraw from it; (7) That the revenue Courts could not refer a dispute relating to title to arbitration and the award does not bind the parties in a civil suit; (8) That the award was not vitiated by fraud or partiality of the arbitrators; and (9) That the award not being registered could not have effect in a civil Court.

[8] The Special Judge accordingly allowed the objections and First Civil Appeal No. 66 of 1942 is directed against his order.

[9] Very shortly before he filed the claim in the Encumbered Estates Act proceedings, Gangotri Datt had, on 18th May 1937, instituted a suit in the Court of Civil Judge, Gonda, against Girja Datt. The pleadings of the parties in that suit were practically the same as those in the Encumbered Estates Act case. The trial of that suit was at first stayed and then the following issue was framed :

"How far the findings on issues 1 and 5 in the objection case under S. 11 in Encumbered Estates Act suit No: 11 of 1936 would operate as res judicata in this case?"

[10] After having given judgment in the Encumbered Estates Act case the same learned Judge, in his capacity of Civil Judge, disposed of the suit and held that the decision in the Encumbered Estates Act case operated as res judicata and barred the suit. First Civil Appeal No. 65 of 1942 is directed against the decree in that suit.

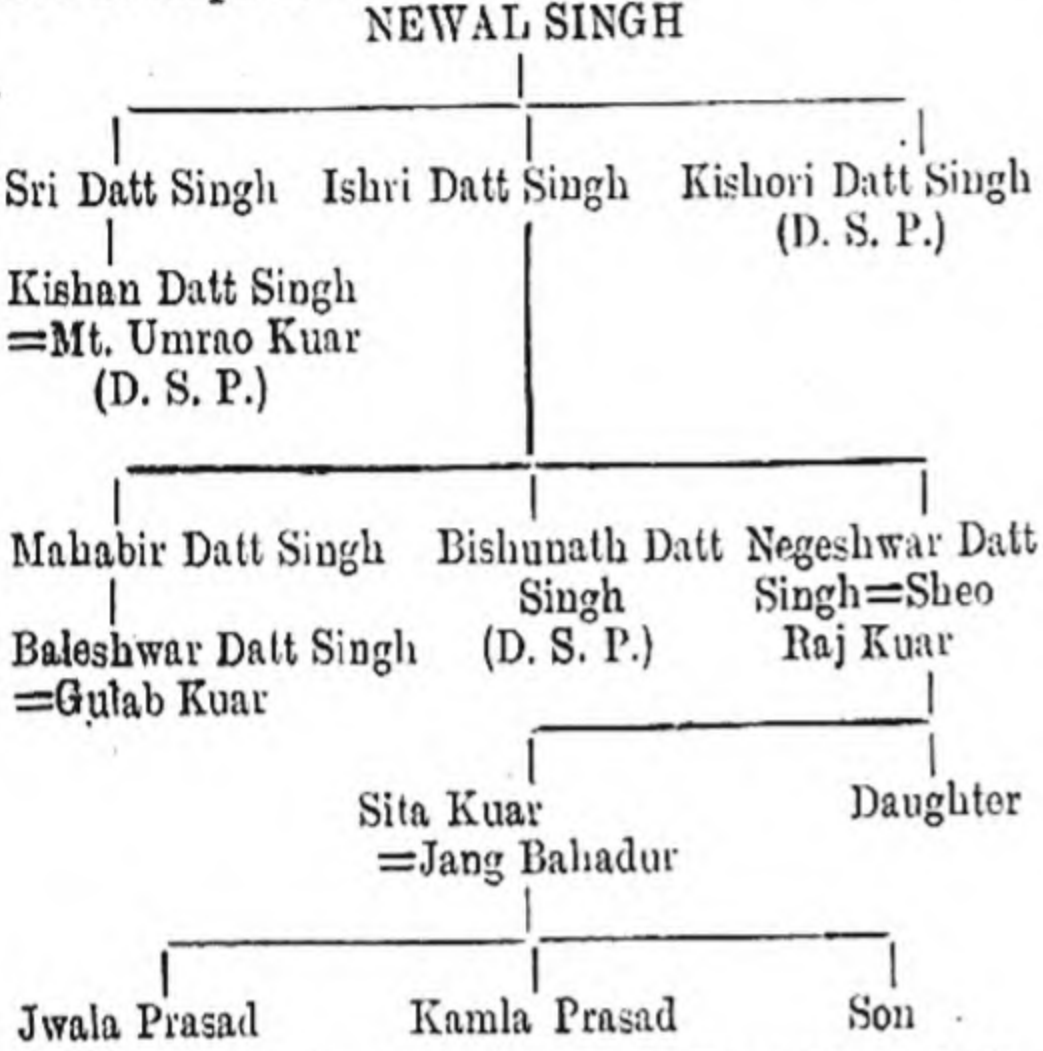
[11] The grounds taken in both the appeals are the same. The only point argued in First Civil Appeal No 65 of 1942, apart from the points which are common to both the appeals, is that the decision in the Encumbered Estates Act case does not operate as res judicata, since, an appeal having been preferred from that decision, it cannot be said that it operates as a final decision. Technically the objection is correct since it is only the decision of the Court of appeal that will be operative but this makes no difference on the merits. In the civil suit, the learned advocates for the parties agreed that the result of the suit should follow the result of the Encumbered Estates Act case. As a matter of fact the trial Court disposed of both the cases at one and the same time and both the appeals have been heard together in this Court and this judgment will dispose of both of them.

[12] On the merits, the appellant's learned advocate contended that due attestation and execution of the will upon which Gangotri Datt relied had not been established. While, however, in the trial Court, emphasis was laid upon the alleged exercise of undue influence by Babu Gur Charan Lal, in this Court the connection of that gentleman with the will was only relied upon to create a suspicion as to the attestation of the will and to challenge the credibility of the attesting witnesses. The plea that, at the time of the execution of the will, Bhaiya Baleshwar Datt was an idiot, incapable of understanding what he was doing, was not reiterated. It was also contended that the award conclusively determined the rights of the parties and must be upheld even in civil litigation, though unregistered because an order of the Court is exempt from registration by reason of S. 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act, and the award had been incorporated in an order of Court. It was further contended that the reference to arbitration and the award amounted to a family settlement and must be upheld on that ground too.

[13] On the other hand, the learned advocate for the respondent urged that the findings of the trial Court on the question of proof of the will, having been given on an appreciation of the oral evidence which it itself had recorded, should not be set aside, and that they were fully justified. He also pleaded that the award could not operate to bind the parties since the reference was only of the dispute pending in the mutation Court and the scope of the award could not be extended beyond that of a decision of the mutation Court, nor did the award operate as a family settlement. He also contended that the award required registration and that the exemption granted by S. 17 (2) (vi) did not apply to it.

[14] In order fully to appreciate the circum-

stages which led to the execution of the will it will be useful to consider the state of Baleshwar Datt's family and to recapitulate some of the principal events which led up to the execution of the disputed will. The following pedigree is not in dispute:



[15] It is admitted that Girja Datt Singh is the sole survivor, apart from his own descendants, in the line of Sanwal Singh, brother of Newal Singh, being his great great-grandson and that there are no nearer heirs alive. Mahabir Datt Singh died a considerable time ago, and his two brothers. Bishunath and Nageshwar, were insane. Bishunath's wife had also died before 1904 and he was childless while Nageshwar's wife was alive but he had only two daughters by her and both of them had already been married. Baleswar Datt was accordingly in sole charge of the entire family property.

[16] On 27th August 1901, Baleshwar Datt, then a childless man of about 39 years, executed a will (EX. A-34) providing for various contingencies and devising his entire property, in the state of his family as it then existed, to his wife Mt. Gulab Kuar in absolute right. He reserved to himself power to adopt a son and, in case he failed to do so, he authorised his wife to adopt. In this will no provision was made for the daughters of Nageshwar Datt. By 1915, however, his feelings had undergone a change and, on 1st December 1915, he executed another will (EX. A-35). This will, after reciting, among other things, that the testator was not pleased with his nearest relation, Girja Datt, proceeded to dispose of the property in favour of his wife, Mt. Gulab Kuar, and the sons of Sita Kuar. The reason given by the testator for the execution of this will is his desire to avoid disputes and to prevent his properties falling "into the hands of such a person as the executant never likes that he should get it."

[17] After the execution of his second will the testator's wife died and the respondent Gangotri Datt, a distant relation, became a member of his household when quite young—at the age of about 10 or 12 years. A. W. 3 Jageshwar Singh, Girja Datt's own witness, would place the date of this event somewhere in 1923. The appellant's case is that Gangotri was only employed as a cook or sirwar whilst the respondent contends that he was brought up by Baleshwar as a son.

[18] The above statement of the facts of the case makes it clear that, at the advanced age of about sixty years, Baleshwar Datt found himself a lonely old man without wife or children or any close relative. He had nephews, the sons of his cousin, Sita Kuar, but their house was far off in a different district and his relations with his next heir were not good. It is not surprising that, in the state of affairs, Baleshwar Datt should think of taking a boy in adoption. He had clearly contemplated an adoption either by himself or by his wife as early as 1904 and it is probable that the matter would recur to him after the death of his wife, when he had no hope of any issue left. In view of the terms of EX. 32 the validity of an adoption would, however, be doubtful and consequently the execution of a will would be considered advisable. It was in this state of affairs that EX. A-36, the third will, was executed. It was not executed to deprive Girja Datt—that had already been done by EX. A-35, the second will. The sole object was to benefit Gangotri to whom the will refers in the following words: "With whom I am very much pleased and who is living with me as my son and is being brought up by me." Quite apart from the words of the will, there are other indications to show that Gangotri was treated as the son of the house and it is not possible to believe that Baleshwar Datt would have brought a young boy of about 10 or 12 years, a distant relation of his own and one whose father was a zamindar having at least 25 acres of agricultural land in his possession, merely for the purpose of transforming him into a cook. It is also impossible to believe that the responsible duties of a sirwar, involving the management and control of agricultural operations, would be entrusted to a youth of 10 or 12 years who could have no real experience or knowledge of farming.

[19] As early as 1925, that is to say, a year or two after Gangotri had been brought into Baleshwar's household it was stated by Tribhuwan that the boy had been adopted by Baleshwar: vide EX. 50. It is alleged that this evidence was deliberately created by Babu Gur Charan Lal, the cross-examining pleader in that case, for future use, since it did not arise in the case. The pleadings, EXS. 86 and 87, show that many points, including the pedigree, were disputed and the questions might well have been put to show that the witness was personally interested in the dispute. At any rate, Babu Gur Charan Lal is not shown to have had any reason to enter into a conspiracy for a boy then aged about 15 years of whom no one could be certain. Further the effect of such a proceeding would not be to deprive Girja Datt of anything but to deprive the sons of Sita Kuar. Thus even if it is assumed, though it is not proved, that Babu Gur Charan Lal was hostile to Girja Datt that would be no reason for him to create an heir of Baleshwar Datt to the loss of his legatees under the will of 1915.

[20] Next we find that in EX. A-37, which is a power of attorney executed by Baleshwar Datt in 1932, the will in favour of Gangotri is recited and he is then appointed an agent but special powers are conferred upon him. These special powers included practically all the powers of a landlord and they were not conferred upon any other agent appointed either under the same document or under the previous power, EX. 52. They would be appropriate if Gangotri were treated as the son of the house, then about 22 years of age, about to enter upon the management of an estate which would one day be his but they would be wholly inappropriate if they were conferred upon a cook or a sirwar.

[21] It was suggested that this power was not really required but was the result of the machinations of Babu Gur Charan Lal. We find no justification for this allegation. The only other power on the record is EX. 52 which was executed in 1921. Two of the persons named in that power were not appointed under EX. A-37 and several new persons were appointed. Moreover, as the power itself indicates, Baleshwar had become old—he was well over 60—and it was necessary to confer upon some one powers that no one then possessed. Thus the execution of EX. A-37 was necessary and that Gangotri should have been selected to exercise the additional power clearly indicates the high position which he occupied in Baleshwar's household.

[22] Evidence was also led to show that, although at one time the relations between Baleshwar and Girja were not good, there had been a change in the position. The trial Court has not accepted that evidence and we agree that it is not worthy of credit. Exhibits A-85, A-86, A-87 and A-89 are all copies of orders and decrees between the years 1918 and 1922 which show that litigation was continuing even then between Baleshwar and Girja. Further, if Baleshwar's objection to Girja getting his property had in fact been removed EX. A-35 would require to be revoked and substituted by another will. It is not even suggested that this was ever contemplated.

[23] A consideration of the above facts leads us to the conclusion that the will, EX. A-36, was a natural will and the dispositions which it contains are not open to suspicion. We have next to consider whether the fact that Babu Gur Charan Lal had a hand in its execution makes it a suspicious document. It is said that he was moved by hostility to Girja Datt and by advantage to himself in getting the will in favour of Gangotri. It is not suggested that he had any particular interest in Gangotri or Tribhuwan Datt. Hostility to Girja Datt would not be a motive because, in view of the previous will EX. A-35, Girja was already excluded. It is not, therefore, necessary for us to examine the point in detail beyond saying that we agree with the finding of the trial Court on this point. As to any personal advantage, which Babu Gur Charan Lal might have expected there is no satisfactory evidence. We realise that this is a matter which it is difficult to prove by direct evidence but, in the present case, there are no circumstances which would lead to such an inference. Gangotri could not be bound by any promise which he made before the will came into operation and there is no suggestion that Babu Gur Charan Lal ever tried to obtain any deed of transfer in favour of any nominee of his after the death of Baleshwar. Babu Gur Charan Lal, being a lawyer, must have been well aware that he could not sue for possession of any property in the circumstances alleged: he would, therefore, have safeguarded his position by getting a document executed by Gangotri in favour of some nominee of his before he allowed any of the witnesses under his influence to be produced. Yet it is not even alleged that he did this. Further the connection of Babu Gur Charan Lal with the will was never sought to be concealed: it was apparent on the face of the document since it was in the handwriting of his clerk who signed it as the scribe.

[24] On the other hand, it is quite natural that Babu Gur Charan Lal should have interested himself in the will. It is agreed that he occupied the position of a standing counsel for Baleshwar Datt, who would naturally approach him to prepare a draft of the will. As things stand in this part of the country it would be quite natural for the client to seek the advice of his lawyer in the matter of attesting witnesses also or for the lawyer to suggest them of his own accord. Obviously trustworthy witnesses would be required and this would mean that they would have to be well known. Thus if Babu Gur Charan Lal suggested some old clients of his who resided in the locality and were also known to the testator, there can be nothing suspicious about this.

[25] We have thus come to the conclusion that there are no suspicious circumstances attaching to the execution of the will in question. There remains the question whether the witnesses who have been produced to prove attestation are truthful witnesses. The trial Court, before whom they gave their evidence, has accepted their testimony and it would require strong reasons for us to disagree with the trial Court on this point. It is strongly urged that these reasons are to be found in the document, EX. A-36, itself read side by side with another document, EX A-23 a deed creating a wakf of a small portion of the property, registered on the same date. The ink used in writing EX. A-36 is of a bluish colour and the three signatures of the executant and six signatures of the attesting witnesses are in ink of the same shade while the ink used in writing EX. A-23 is black and the signatures of the executant and the attesting witnesses, who are all the same as on EX. A-36, are also in that shade of ink. It is thus contended that the version of the attesting witnesses that the documents had been scribed earlier but both were executed and attested at one and the same time under a Bargad tree in the compound of the registration office at Tarabganj cannot be accepted and if that is rejected then the whole attestation must fail. We cannot agree with this contention.

[26] It is true that the difference in the inks used makes it highly improbable that the executant and the attesting witnesses who signed the two documents should have signed them all at one time. Even if there were two inkpots and two sets of pen it would have not happened by chance that one shade of ink was used in putting all the signatures on one document and another shade in all the signatures on the other document. This does not, however, mean that due attestation is not proved. Girja Datt's first witness, Hasinuddin, deposes that EX. A-23 was completed, signed and attested in his presence at Gonda, while EX. A-36 was being faired out at the house of Babu Gur Charan Lal. This statement might well be true and thus it happened when the will came to be signed and attested later on a different coloured ink, resembling that used by the scribe, was available and was used. This would, of course, mean that the attesting witnesses are not telling the truth when they give the reasons why the will was not signed and attested at Gonda but it has repeatedly been laid down that the maxim "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus" does not apply to conditions prevalent in India. It is only if the witness is found to be wholly untrustworthy that no part of his evidence can be accepted. In the present case we do not find that the witnesses to prove attestation can be classed a set of wholly untrustworthy witnesses. The witnesses support their allegation of due attestation : it is admitted that the will bears their signatures as attesting witnesses and that the signature of the executant is also genuine ; it is further proved by Hasinuddin that all the three were present at one place and that EX A-23, which was written at about the same time, was duly executed and attested; in these circumstances there is no reason to suppose that O W. 3, Uma Datt Singh and O. W. 4 Badri Singh, are not telling the truth when they say that they saw Baleshwar Datt Singh (EX A-36) and that they also signed in his presence. In agreement with the trial Court we, therefore, hold the will, EX. A-36, to be duly executed and attested.

[27] We come then to deal with the next question, namely, whether the rights of Gangotri Datt under the will, EX. A-36, have been displaced by the award in the mutation proceedings, EX. A-20. The circumstances in which the latter document came into existence may briefly be stated.

[28] Bhaiya Baleshwar Datt, having died on 15-5-1933 Girja Datt and Gangotri Datt applied for mutation of names on 15th and 22nd May 1933, respectively. After about 30 witnesses had been examined by each of the parties, the Tahsildar reported on 8-11-1933, that the possession of Gangotri and the will which he set up, EX. A-36, were proved: vide EX. A-50. It seems, however, that the parties were still trying to assert or maintain their possession and a serious situation had arisen in village Nagwa with regard to the reaping of the late paddy (jarhan) crop. Consequently on 7-11-1933, the Sub-Inspector in charge of Police circle, Wazirganj within which Nagwa lay, reported for action against both the parties under S. 107, Criminal P. C.: vide EX. A 3. A Deputy Superintendent of Police visited the place at the instance of two advocates of Gangotri Datt and he also reported on 13-11-1933, that the situation was serious and that, apart from action under S. 107, Criminal P. C., the property should also be attached. On the basis of these reports, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the officer who was dealing with the mutation case ordered, on 14-11-1933, that the matter should be put up at Wazirganj on 15-11-1933, (EX. A-6). Then came three applications for reference to arbitration, EXS. 57, 58 and 59. The first was made by Girja Datt alone : the second by Gangotri Datt alone and the third by both of them jointly. The applications were verified on the same day but they were ordered to be put up on 15th NOVEMBER—vide EXS. 65, 66 and 67—and on that date the case was referred to the arbitration of Bhaiya Lal Baksh Singh and Bhaiya Raghuraj Singh, Taluqdars of Majhgawan: vide EX. 64. On the same day the same officer, in his capacity of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, passed a preliminary order under S. 107, Criminal P. C, demanding security to the extent of Rs. 20,000 each from Girja Datt and Gangotri Datt and Rs. 12,000 from Tribhuwan Datt. Securities were offered on the same day but enquiries were ordered as to their sufficiency. The file of the mutation case was sent to the arbitrators and reached them on 17-11-1933; vide Exs. A-15 and A-13. On the same day, Tribhuwan and Gangotri applied that fresh securities which they were filing should be accepted and they were accepted: vide Exs. A-8 and A-9. On 18-11-1933, Gangotri applied stating that he had been coerced into agreeing to the arbitration and praying that the reference be withdrawn: vide Ex. A-10. This the Court refused to allow and its order was upheld up to the Board of Revenue: vide Exs. 55, 54, 60 and 45. The arbitration, therefore, proceeded and the arbitrators gave their award on 17-1-1933: Ex. A-20. This award was immediately challenged by Gangotri on the same grounds on which he challenges it now: vide Ex. 34 and the mutation Court enquired into the matter, recorded evidence and upheld the award: vide Exs. 36 to 40, 70, 96, 46, 68 and 97; the Deputy Commissioner, however, stated that "it is possible and perhaps even probable that injustice has been done to the appellant by the arbitrators, but that is a point which cannot be taken up in appeal as under S. 207, Land Revenue Act the appellate Court is only to confine itself to certain points. This dispute sooner or later is bound to go to the civil Court. The sooner it goes the better for the revenue Courts"—vide Ex. 97.

The last order is dated 14-5-1935, and two years later the proceedings giving rise to the present appeals commenced.

[29] The trial Court has found, as did the revenue Courts, that the evidence did not substantiate the case of coercion set up by Gangotri. We agree with this finding. No doubt action was being taken by the Police and the Magistrate under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure side by side with the mutation proceedings but that cannot be considered to be the exercise of coercion by Girja Datt on Gangotri particularly when it is found that the Police action commenced at the instance of the counsel of Gangotri himself: vide Ex. A-5.

[30] Further this evidence establishes the fact that the parties would have a motive to refer the whole dispute to arbitration and not merely the mutation dispute. This is further strengthened by the terms in which Ex. 59 is drafted and it has been held by the Courts below that as a matter of fact the whole dispute—as to title as well as to mutation—was referred to the arbitrators. This decision was upheld by a Bench of this Court in 1942 O. W. N. 30[1] at p. 31 and is binding upon the parties.

[31] Before us it was not even contended by the respondent's learned advocate that, if there had been a valid reference to arbitration, Gangotri could subsequently withdraw from it at his pleasure or that there was any fraud or misconduct on the part of the arbitrators. Thus, on this part of the case, we have come to the conclusion that, if the award is admissible in evidence even though it is not registered, it is operative and binding on the parties. We come then to a consideration of the question whether the award required registration.

[32] The learned advocate for the appellant seeks to exempt it from registration on two grounds: firstly, he urges that, even though not copied into the mutation order, it was incorporated in it and must be read as a part of it and was consequently exempt from registration under S. 17 (2) (VI), Registration Act, and, secondly he contends that the reference to arbitration and award amount to a family settlement and so do not require registration. We shall deal with the second point first.

[33] It has no doubt often been laid down that a compromise or a family settlement, inasmuch as it operates as a recognition of pre-existing title, does not require registration. The latest decision on this point is one of this Court in 1947 O. W. N. 97.[2] From this it does not follow, however, that no deed of family settlement requires registration. In the case of family settlements of the ordinary type, the deed only states the rights of the parties as they understand them to be and it does not "purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish . . . . . any right, title or interest." It is only such documents that have been held to be exempt from registration since they do not come within the purview of S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. To compromises or settlements which do "operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish . . . . . any right, title or interest," S. 17 (1), Registration Act does apply and such documents require registration: vide 51 ALL. 79;[3] I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 817;[4] 226 I. C. 129[5] and 1939 A. L. J. 433.[6] We must, therefore, examine the set of documents which, it is urged, constitute a family settlement in this case in order to determine whether, assuming them in fact to constitute a compromise or a family settlement, they or any of them required registration. Before doing this, however, it will be advisable to consider the meaning that has been given to the word "declare" in S. 17 (1) (b).

[34] In an early Bombay case, 5 Bom. 232,[7] West J. considered the meaning of the word and said:

"Here, however, the document is not itself one which declares a right in immovable property, in the sense probably intended by S. 17. There 'declare' is placed along with 'create,' 'assign,' 'limit,' or 'extinguish' a right, title or 'interest,' and these words imply a definite change of legal relation to the property by an expression of will embodied in the document referred to. I think this is equally the case with the word 'declare.' It implies a declaration of will, not a mere statement of fact, and thus a deed of partition, which causes a change of legal relation to the property divided amongst all the parties to it, is a declaration in the intended sense; but a letter containing an admission, direct or inferential, that a partition once took place, does not 'declare' a right within the meaning of the section. It does in one sense 'declare' a right; that is, the existence of the right is directly or indirectly stated by the writing, but it is not the expression or declaration of will by which the right is constituted."

[35] Subsequently to this decision there was some conflict of views but when the matter came up for consideration before the Judicial Committee in 59 I. A. 130[8] their Lordships agreed with the view expressed in the above passage by West J., which they quoted and then, at p. 137 they say:

"The distinction is between a mere recital of a fact and something which in itself creates a title. The distinction has been acted on in cases connected with mortgages by deposit of documents of title. A comparison of the case in 43 I. A. 122[9] with that in 50 I. A. 77[10] will show that, according to this distinction, a document requires registration or not. In the present case the statement in the petition of the respondent did not create any right in the Thakur. It merely acknowledged as a fact that such right was his."

[36] The matter came up for consideration by a Full Bench of this Court in 1943 O. W. N. 523[11] and in that case also the distinction was maintained. The compromise, which, it was agreed, operated as a family settlement and had been incorporated by reference in the mutation order, was held not to cause any change of legal relation to property and not to constitute a declaration of will. It was, therefore, held not to require registration.

[37] In the case before us, the position is entirely different. Exhibit 59, the agreement to refer and Ex. 46, the mutation order no doubt do not operate to change the relation to the property but Ex. A-20, the award, which is a necessary part of the alleged family settlement, not only operates to change the relations of the parties to the property but also purports to do so. It is clearly not merely a statement of fact but a declaration of will. It negatives the right of Gangotri under the terms of the will of Bhaiya Baleshwar Datt which it holds to be illegal and against family custom and then, in order, it is said, to avoid a serious litigation likely to waste the property of the family, it proceeds:

"We decide that out of the entire property of Baleshwar Datt, only ten annas of the entire villages be given to Bhaiya Girja Datt Singh and six annas to Bhaiya Gangotri Datt Singh."

Thus it purports to create in both Girja and Gangotri rights in respect of the portions allotted to them, and clearly comes within the scope of S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, whether it is construed as a family settlement or not. In this view of the case, it is not necessary for us to decide whether Ex. 59 read with Ex. A-20 can be deemed to be a family settlement or not.

[38] There thus remains for decision only the question whether Ex. A-20, the award, can be deemed to be incorporated in the mutation order to such an extent as to be admissible in evidence without registration by virtue of the provisions of S. 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act. At one time the learned advocate for the respondent attempted to argue that the order in the present case does not come within the purview of S. 17 (2) (vi) because their Lordships have held in 53 I. A. 220[12] that proceedings in the revenue Courts for mutation of names are not judicial proceedings. Subsequently, however, in view of the numerous decisions of this Court in which the remarks of their Lordships have been explained and mutation orders have been held to come within the scope of S. 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act, the latest being the Full Bench case in 1943 O. W. N. 523,[11] this position was abandoned and the argument proceeded on the assumption that mutation orders also come within the scope of the section.

[39] A large number of cases of this Court, including the Full Bench case mentioned above, have been placed before us in support of the proposition that compromises arranged in mutation proceedings, to which reference is made in, and which form the basis of, the order of mutation are admissible in evidence without registration even for a decision of a question of title in civil Courts. These cases are not directly applicable to the present case because we are not dealing with the document embodying the compromise—that is Ex. 59 the reference to arbitration—but with the award given by the arbitrators. The distinction between the two is very great and has always been recognised: vide A. I. R. 1936 Sind 79[13] at p. 81, A. I. R. 1942 Bom. 132[14] at p. 133. A compromise is a settlement of the disputes between the parties on a purely voluntary basis whilst an award has the same measure of compulsion as a decree of Court; the difference being that, in the case of an award, it is a decision of a Tribunal selected by the parties themselves. When this very case came before this Court at an earlier stage, 1942 O. W. N. 30,[1] a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, clearly recognised the difference and refused to extend to awards the principles applicable to compromises in matters of registration. Further, in the case of compromises the parties are at liberty to decide whatever they please, whilst in the case of arbitrations through the intervention of the Court it is only the dispute before the Court that can be referred to arbitration.

[40] It was remarked in 1942 O. W. N. 30[1] at page 33:

"The only dispute which the Revenue Court can refer to arbitration in a mutation case within the meaning of S. 203, Land Revenue Act is the dispute relating to possession or prima facie title. Under S. 40 of the Act, if the Collector is unable to satisfy himself as to which party is in possession, 'he shall ascertain by summary enquiry who is the person best entitled to the property and shall put such person in possession.' He has no power to decide the question of title finally and any finding by him on this question cannot bind the Civil Courts. The Revenue Court cannot confer on arbitrators a power which it does not itself possess. As was held by the Calcutta High Court in A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 567[15] the arbitrators in a dispute are limited to the question in dispute between the parties in the cause referred. The decision in this case was upheld in appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 53 I. A. 1,[16] who observed:

'Whatever may have been the desire of the parties .... the Court had on that application no power to refer to arbitration any questions between the parties to the suit other than those in question in the suit.'"

[41] Thus the set of authorities relating to effect of compromises in the revenue Courts will not govern this case and we need not examine them in detail. We may, however, note that on this question the decisions of this Court are consistently in favour of the admissibility of such compromises without their being registered, if they form the basis of the mutation order, but the opinion of the Allahabad High Court is consistently against admissibility.

[42] The learned advocate for the appellant next drew our attention to some cases in which the question whether a particular document could be deemed to be a part of the order or decree was discussed and decided. In A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 107;[17] A. I. R. 1936 Pesh. 125[18] and A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 24[19] it was laid down that it was not necessary that the whole document should be copied out into the decree or order before the benefit of S. 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act could be claimed for it. We have no doubt that, although it is always better that the decree or order should be complete in itself, yet a reference to a document in such a manner as to indicate that it was the intention of the Court to give effect to it is sufficient incorporation. At the same time we must not lose sight of the fact that, even when a document does become admissible by being incorporated in a decree, it is not the whole of it that is admissible but only that portion of it upon which the Court bases its decision. Section 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act, grants exemption from registration only to the order or decree. Thus it is not the award or other document per se which is admissible in evidence but only so much of it as may be deemed to be a part of the order or decree.

[43] In 26 I. A. 101[20] some of the parties arrived at a compromise which dealt also with properties not included in the suit and they applied "that a decree may be passed in accordance with the razinama." The deed or petition of compromise was not registered. The Court, in giving effect to the terms of the compromise stated that two of the parties had "put in a razinamah in respect to items 1, 3, 5, and 7 and a decree has been passed." Subsequently, in a suit brought in respect of the properties included in the compromise it was pleaded that the compromise was inadmissible for want of registration. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee upheld this plea and said

"the razinamah was not registered in accordance with the Act of 1877; but the objection founded on its non-registration does not, in their Lordships' opinion, apply to its stipulations and provisions, in so far as these were incorporated with, and given effect to by, the order made upon it by the Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1885."

We have, therefore, to see in this case how far EX. A-20 was, or could be, incorporated in the mutation order.

[44] The Court before which the case was pending was a Court of limited jurisdiction having power only to decide the question of title after a summary enquiry and S. 40, Land Revenue Act, specially provides that the order passed shall not debar any person from establishing his right in a civil Court. The fact that the order was passed on the basis of an award would not vest the Court with any greater jurisdiction. The Court and the parties were well aware of this position because we find that the parties took two parallel proceedings side by side; firstly, they made application for reference to arbitration specifically under S. 203, U. P. Land Revenue Act: vide EXS. 57 and 58 and, secondly, they made an application for general reference to arbitration of the whole dispute: vide EX. 59. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the Chamria case,[8] even in the face of this intention, the Court could not refer the whole dispute to arbitration but only so much of it as lay within the purview of the dispute before it. Thus we find that the Court, in its order of reference specifically mentions S. 203, U. P. Land Revenue Act. When the reference reached the arbitrators, they undoubtedly proceeded to decide the whole dispute and not only the mutation dispute. In doing so they clearly exceeded their authority, because, in spite of the wish of the parties expressed in EX. 59, the mutation Court had not, and could not, refer anything more than the mutation dispute to arbitration.

[45] When the matter again came before the Assistant Collector he considered the various objections to the award and finally ordered "mutation in the names of Girja Datt Singh and Gangotri Datt Singh to be effected in terms of the award . . . ." (vide Ex. 46). Thus the revenue Court gave effect to the award only in so far as it related to mutation of names and nothing more. This position is further clarified by the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner, Ex. 97 in which he clearly indicates that the mutation Court was not dealing with the final question of title about which he says that that is bound to go sooner or later to the civil Court and "the sooner it goes the better for the revenue Courts." We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the order of the mutation Court only incorporates that portion of the award which related to the mutation case and nothing more. Thus that portion which relates to an adjudication on the question of title binding on the civil Courts was not, and could not be, included in the mutation order and is inadmissible for want of registration.

[46] In this view of the matter the judgment of the trial Court must be maintained. We accordingly dismiss both the appeals with costs.

N. Banerji for S. N. Srivastava — for Applicants.

S. D. Narain — for the Crown.

Order. — Har Narain Lal had obtained a compromise decree, by the terms of which he was allowed a right of way over the land, marked D in the site plan accompanying the award of an arbitrator, and he was allowed a clear cart way over a particular portion of certain plots, belonging to Sri Ram and Baboo. This decree was enforced in execution proceedings. Thereafter Sri Ram and Baboo dug out some earth from one of the plots, over which a clear cart way had been allowed and dug a new ditch on it. The result was that a pit was created and the passage of bullock-carts became impossible. Har Narain Lal thereupon instituted a complaint agatnst Sri Ram and Baboo under S. 426/431, Penal Code. Sardar Samarjit Singh, Honorary Special Magistrate, First Class, Rae Bareli, tried the case, and convicted both the accused under S. 426, Penal Code and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each.

[2] Sri Ram and Baboo applied in revision to the Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli who has referred the case to this Court with the recommendation that the conviction and sentence of the applicants should be set aside since the case does not fall within the purview of S. 426, Penal Code. According to the view of the learned Sessions Judge, the word 'property', in S. 425, Penal Code means some tangible or corporeal property and does not include an easement. The learned Sessions Judge proceeds to hold that the right of passage accorded to Har Narain Lal, was merely an easement and the blocking this passage, though it injuriously affected the easement, could not be said to be a mischief within the meaning of S. 425, Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge relies upon three authorities in support of this proposition, namely 1944 A.L.J. 6,[1] 1938 O.W.N. 1127[2] and 1930 M.W.N. 909, which corresponds to A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 973.[3] The learned counsel, supporting the reference, has also referred to these three authorities.

[3] 1944 A. L. J. 6[1] has absolutely no application since nothing has been done upon land itself which may be said to have changed its nature or character or to have diminished its value or utility. The act, complained of, was something done on an adjoining piece of property. Section 425, Penal Code, could obviously, therefore, not be applicable.

[4] The case, reported in 1938 O. W. N. 1127[2] also has no application. In that case a ditch, which had been dug by the owner of the land, was filled up by other persons. A learned Single Judge of this Court held that the filling up of the ditch did not affect any property injuriously so as to diminish its value or utility. The learned Magistrate had in that case held that the filling up of the ditch was a mischief within the meaning of S. 425, Penal Code because it resulted in destroying the fruits of the complaintant's labour in making a ditch. It was in this connection that the learned Judge stated 'property' in S. 425, Penal Code means tangible property capable of being forcibly destroyed.

[5] There remains the case. reported in 1930 M. W. N. 909.[3] In that case earth was thrown on land in such a way as to interfere with the right of way over it. The learned Single Judge of the Madras High Court held that this was not a mischief within the meaning of S. 425, Penal Code, because that section refers only to tangible property but does not include an easement. The learned Judge then says :

"The only value which is diminished or utility which is destroyed is that of the right of thoroughfare because there is nothing to show that the land itself has lost either its value or its utility or is in any way affected injuriously."

In the present case it cannot be said that the land has not been affected injuriously by the creation of a pit upon it. Moreover, a reference to the words in S. 425, Penal Code makes it clear that if the property is changed in such a way as to diminish its utility, the person, who effects the change, commits mischief. The explanation makes it clear that the utility affected need not be to its owner. The following words are used in explanation 1 :

"It is not essential to the offence of mischief that the offender should intend to cause loss or damage to the owner of the property injured or destroyed. It is sufficient if he intends to cause, or knows that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to any person by injuring any property, whether it belongs to that person or not."

[6] The facts of this case clearly show that Sri Ram and Baboo knew that their act in respect of the property would cause loss to the complainant. They have, therefore, clearly committed mischief with regard to the property in their possession within the meaning of S. 425, Penal Code. The right of easement has also been affected, but that is not the principal matter to be considered. The easement has only been affected because the nature of the property itself has been changed in such a way as to affect its utility. If the learned Judge of the Madras High Court can be taken to mean that even in such a case mischief has not been caused, I respectfully beg to differ from his opinion. As, however, I have already stated, the facts of that case were different and the learned Judge himself considered that no diminution had taken place in the utility of the property as such. In that view the principle, laid down in that case, would not be applicable to the present case. The conviction of the accused was, therefore, not illegal. I therefore reject this reference and uphold the sentence, passed by the learned Honorary Special Magistrate, First Class, Rae Bareli.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 109 of 1944, Decided on 14-2-1947, from order of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 12-4-1944.

(a) U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), S. 12—Occupancy tenancy created by special agreement or decree—Mortgage of—Redemption.

There is a clear cut distinction between an occupancy tenancy under S. 5, Oudh Rent Act and one created by special agreement or by a decree of the Court. In the latter, a transfer is not void ab initio but if there is a condition forbidding transfers, it can be enforced by the superior proprietor : 28 A. I. R. 1941 Oudh 526, Foll. [Para 2]

The mortgage of an occupancy tenancy created by special agreement or by a decree of the Court not being void an application for redemption is maintainable under S. 12. [Paras 2, 3]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—Material irregularity —New point of fact in appeal.

The first Appellate Court commits an irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction in allowing a fresh question of fact which was never taken in the trial Court, to be taken before it and deciding the appeal on the basis of the same. The High Court can interfere in revision in such a case. [Para 4]

Case referred :

1. ('41) 28 A. I. R. 1941 Oudh 526 : 17 Luck. 139 : 195 I. C. 784, Mir Mahomed Husain v. Mahomed Habib Khan.

Moti Lal Tilhari — for Applicants.

Rajeshwari Prasad and Raj Bahadur — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This was an application for redemption under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act. It was dismissed by the trial Court on the ground that it was not proved that Gobre Singh, predecessor-in-interest of the applicants, was an agriculturist at the time of the mortgage. The applicants went in appeal and prayed that a "khetauni" of 1304 Fasli which shows that Gobre Singh was an agriculturist when the mortgage was effected, should be accepted. This document had been filed late before the trial Court and had been rejected for that reason. The document was accepted by the lower appellate Court which thereupon dismissed the appeal on the ground that Gobre Singh was an occupancy tenant of the land mortgaged and therefore the mortgage was void and an application under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act could not lie.

[2] Against this decision the applicants have come in revision. It is urged that there is no finding of the lower appellate Court that the applicants are occupancy tenants under S. 5, Oudh Rent Act. In A. I. R. 1941 Oudh 526[1] it was held that there was a clear-cut distinction between an occupancy tenancy under S. 5, Oudh Rent Act and one created by special agreement or by a decree of the Court. In the latter a transfer was not void ab initio but if there was a condition forbidding transfers, it could be enforced by the superior proprietor.

[3] The khetauni of 1304 Fasli is inconclusive as to the nature of the tenancy. The lower Court has taken it to be occupancy apparently on the basis of other documents on the file. Exhibits 7 and 8 indicate that this land is held under a special agreement or a decree of the Court. Moreover, admittedly part of the land mortgaged is grove land. Therefore the mortgage as a whole cannot be invalid on the ground that the property is occupancy.

[4] The ground on which the appeal was dismissed depends on a question of fact which was never agitated in the trial Court. The consequence of this is that the proper evidence on the point which was necessary for the decision of this issue is not upon the file. The Court below has committed an irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction in allowing a fresh question of fact which was never taken in the trial Court, to be taken before it.

[5] I, therefore, allow this revision application and set aside the decision of the learned lower appellate Court. The case will be returned to the trial Court for decision de novo on the merits after framing the proper issues; the parties will be at liberty to produce fresh evidence. Costs in all Courts will abide the result.

Written statements filed on behalf of the accused are generally evolved out of the brains of the counsel for the accused helped by his friends and seldom represent the ideas of the accused or the facts as known to him. Little or no importance should therefore be attached to the written statements filed on behalf of the accused : 23 A. I. R. 1936 Oudh 405, Rel. on. [Para 10]

Where oral statements made by the accused in the Court of the Committing Magistrate are not recorded by the Magistrate as confessions with all the formalities required by S. 164 but are merely recorded in pursuance of the directions given by S. 342 for giving the accused an opportunity of explaining any circumstances which might appear against him, then even though the statements are withdrawn in the Sessions Court they still remain as evidence in the case to be considered along with other evidence. Such statements must, however, be read as a whole and it is not a sound principle to reject those portions which are in favour of the accused and rely only upon those which are against the accused unless other evidence on the record justifies a differentiation. P. N. Chaudhari, Asst. Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment. — The eleven appellants and 32 other persons were committed to the Court of Session at Kheri for trial on charges under Ss. 147, 148, 323, 324 and 436 read with S. 149, Penal Code. All the accused except the appellants have been acquitted and the appellants have been convicted under Ss. 147, 323 and 436 read with S. 149, Penal Code.

[2] In order to appreciate the facts fully it is necessary to give a little history. From the evidence adduced both by the prosecution as well as by the defence it appears that the relations between Kunwar Sri Prakash Singh, Taluqdar of Tikra and the Kurmi tenants of village Arusarai, which belongs to him and is at a distance of about 3 miles from his house, Tikra have been strained for some time past. The Kurmis had complained to the Deputy Commissioner that he was making illegal exactions whilst he alleged that the tenants refused to pay the legal rents and he got the Deputy Commissioner to enforce payment. Numerous other causes of ill-feeling were also alleged.

[3] On 13-12-1945, an incident took place in Arusarai which further exacerbated feelings. The prosecution alleged that on that day, in the evening, all the appellants, accompanied by numerous other persons, including one Jai Dayal Brahman of Ulra, went to village and demanded to know where Sumergir was. Gur Baksh, from whom the enquiry was made, said that he did not know. The party thereupon began beating the villagers who retaliated and captured Jai Dayal, the rest of the attackers withdrawing. Although Police Station Biswan is only six miles away, no report of this incident was made till the morning of 14th December when Sumergir went to make the report after he had seen an assemblage in his village on that morning. It is worthy of note that even then he did not take Jai Dayal who was said to have been detained in connection with this offence to the police station. This riot was the subject of a separate prosecution with which we are not concerned.

[4] On the other side, the defence version of this affair is that one Bhagwati Singh, a person of the Tikra estate, was coming in the evening from Ulra bringing Rs. 300 from the ziladar for the taluqdar. He was accompanied by a Pasi and Jai Dayal. They were waylaid near Arusarai by the Kurmis who beat them and robbed them of the money. Bhagwati Singh went on to Tikra from where he, accompanied by Sumrendra Singh and others, went to Police Station Biswan and lodged a report of the alleged dacoity. It is said that the whereabouts of Jai Dayal and the Pasi were not known but they were later discovered to have been captured by the Kurmis of Arusarai. This dacoity is also the subject of a separate prosecution.

[5] The prosecution alleges that Jai Dayal is connected with the Tikra estate and that the taluqdar, in order to rescue him and to avenge himself on the Kurmis collected a force of some 200 to 250 persons, some of whom are tenants of villages owned by him whilst others do not reside in his villages, during the night and sent them forward to Arusarai where they posted themselves in a grove belonging to one Murli, getting to it about the time of sunrise on 14th December. At Arusarai the Pasi appellants, out of whom Nos. 2 to 9 are residents of the village joined this group and later on the taluqdar and a relation of his, Sumrendra Singh, rode up armed with guns and they were accompanied by two other members of the taluqdar's staff, Ujagar Singh and Shambhu Dayal, also armed with guns. On his arrival at the grove the taluqdar ordered the men to attack and burn the village and to beat anyone whom they met and to rescue Jai Dayal. Thereupon, one Puttu of Ramkund (of which village Arusarai is a hamlet) set fire to a pile of straw and he and some of the Pasi appellants who are themselves residents of Arusarai proceeded to set fire to various houses in the village. It is said that bows and arrows, lathis and brickbats were freely used by the assailants so that the inhabitants of the village ran away and Jai Dayal was rescued from near a Kolhaura in the middle of the village.

[6] Among the persons who were sent up for trial were the taluqdar himself, his servants, Ujagar and Shambhu Dayal, Puttu Pasi of Ramkund, who is supposed to have taken the lead in setting fire to the village, and residents of widely scattered villages, chiefly Pasis and Kurmis but including also two Muslims and one Brahman. All the accused pleaded not guilty in the Sessions Court and the learned Sessions Judge was of the opinion that the evidence was not sufficient to convict any of the accused except the appellants. He has held the appellants guilty mainly because of the statements which they made in the Court of the Committing Magistrate: the learned Sessions Judge being of the opinion that, although the prosecution evidence was generally unreliable, it could nevertheless be relied upon in respect of these persons who had, at one time admitted their participation in the incident.

[7] With regard to the main incidents of the prosecution case the learned Sessions Judge has held :

1. That the Kurmi witnesses have many grievances against Kunwar Sri Prakash Singh and have named him out of malice.

2. That Ujagar and Shambhu Dayal have been implicated only because they are in the service of the Raja.

3. That Puttu Pasi of Ramkund has been falsely named by the witnesses and his presence at the time of the incident is extremely doubtful.

4. That a large number of other accused persons have been implicated by reason of enmity with some one or other of the witnesses although they were not there.

5. That no one among the attackers had any guns or bows and arrows.

6. That brickbats were not thrown.

7. That only slight injuries were inflicted on one man, Jagan (P. W. 1) during the occurrence, which leads to the inference that the villagers ran away and not much weight can be attached to their identification of the various accused persons.

8. That the number of persons alleged to be present has been grossly exaggerated.

9. That there is no doubt that Jai Dayal Brahman was captured by the Kurmis of Arusarai on the evening of 13th December and detained by them though it is not shown that he was captured during a riot or rightly detained.

10. That it is also satisfactorily established that a body of persons did go to Arusarai in the morning of 14th December 1945, to rescue Jai Dayal and did rescue him.

[8] The learned Sessions Judge has also considered the weight to be attached to the evidence of each of the witnesses and has held that some of the witnesses are wholly unreliable whilst others, although they tell lies in many particulars, may nevertheless be believed. There is no doubt that the finding of the learned Sessions Judge with regard to (a) the hostility between the Tikra estate and the Kurmis of Arusarai,

(b) the fact of Jai Dayal's detention by the Kurmis and (c) his rescue on the morning of 14th December are fully supported by the evidence. It will be remembered that a report of the alleged dacoity had been lodged by Bhagwati Singh on the night of 13th December. In order to investigate this the Station Officer of Biswan (P. W. 27) reached the spot on the morning of 14th December at about 9-30 A. M. and he found the village still burning. Thus the only question which has to be determined is whether the appellants were members of the party which went and rescued Jai Dayal.

[9] All the appellants made oral statements and filed written statements in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. They subsequently withdrew them and Sumrendra Singh pleaded that both of them were the work of his counsel. With regard to these statements the appellants' learned counsel contended :

(a) that the written statements should not be believed at all and,

(b) that the oral statements having been withdrawn no importance should be attached to them. He, therefore, contended that the case of the appellants was on the same footing as that of the other accused and the Court itself having held that evidence was not sufficient to justify conviction should have acquitted the appellants also.

[10] On the first point the learned counsel relied upon the following remarks of a Bench of this Court in 1936 O. W. N. 691[1] at page 694 :

"Written statements filed on behalf of accused persons are evolved out of the brains of the counsel for the accused helped by the pairokars and friends of the accused, and seldom represent the ideas of the accused or the facts as known to the accused. We, therefore, attach little or no importance to these written statements filed on behalf of the accused and we would therefore ask all Magistrates and Sessions Judges in Oudh sternly to discountenance the practice of filing written statements on behalf of accused persons."

No exception can be taken to the reasoning contained in the above remarks. Moreover, the only section which contemplates the filing of a written statement is S. 256 (2), Criminal P. C., which occurs in the chapter describing the procedure to be followed in the trial of warrant cases by a Magistrate. There is no provision in chaps. 18, 23 or 24 laying down procedure to be followed in 'inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Session or High Court' and in 'trials before High Courts and Courts of Session' and 'general provisions as to inquiries and trials,' which contemplate the filing of a written statement. In the present case, the written statements were filed in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. They cannot, therefore, be taken into consideration at all.

[11] As to the oral statements in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, it is to be noticed that they were not recorded by the Magistrate as confessions with all the formalities required by S. 164, Criminal P. C. : they were merely recorded in pursuance of the directions given by S. 342, Criminal P. C., for giving the accused an opportunity of explaining any circumstances which might appear against them. Under the provisions of S. 287, Criminal P. C., such statements shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence. Thus even though the statements were withdrawn in the Court of Session they nevertheless remain as evidence in the case to be considered along with other evidence. Such statements must, however, be read as a whole and, as has so often been said, it is not a sound principle to reject those portions which are in favour of the accused and rely only upon those which are against the accused unless other evidence on the record justifies a differentiation.

[12] It is necessary, therefore, first of all to consider the statements made by the various appellants. An omnibus question embracing all the charges against them was put to each of the accused by the learned Committing Magistrate. The reply of Sumarendra Singh was, 'Yeh sab ghalat hai laikin mai gaya aur Jai Dayal ko chora laya. Mere pas bandook nahin thi—Chalis pachas admi mere sath the jo ki meri madat ke liye the' (see Ex. 138). Jangoo stated : 'Han main ne Jai Dayal ko churaya laikin main ne ag nahin lagai. Main ne Kurmiyon ko mara' (see Ex. 139). Mohan stated : 'Main ne na marpit ki na balwa kiya na ag lagai balki Jai Dayal ko chhura laya. Sumérgir (a mistake for Sumarendra Singh) ne chhura lane ko kaha tha keonki uski jan ka khatra tha' (see Ex. 140). Ishuri stated : 'Main ne koi balwa nahin kiya aur na ag lagai na marpit ki balki pandra bis admiyon ko lekar Jai Dayal ko chhura laya' (see Ex. 141). Newaz said : 'Main ne balwa kiya tha. Ag nahin lagai thi. Aur jab Jai Dayal ke chhurane men deri hui to Kurmiyon se marpit kiya—donoon taraf se marpit hui' (see Ex. 145). Pohkar stated : 'Na balwa kiya na ag lagai. Jai Dayal ko chhurane men marpit hui—donoon party men marpit hui' (Ex. 146). Autar stated : 'Main ne balwa kiya magar ag nahin lagai. Jai Dayal ko chhura laya tha' (Ex. 148). Palau stated : 'Main ne balwa kiya magar ag nahin lagai aur Jai Dayal ko chhura laya jismen marpit hui' (Ex. 149). Gajadhar said : 'Main ne kuchh nahin kiya sewai iske ki Jai Dayal ko marpit kar chhura liya' (Ex. 150). Mullu said : 'Main sirf Jai Dayal ko chhura laya our kuchh nahin kiya. Larai nahin hui thi' (Ex. 156). Rupan said : 'Main ne suna balwa hua—main ne ag nahin lagai—main ne koi marpit nahin ki. Jai Dayal ko beghair marpit kiya huwe chhura liya. Main ne kisi ko nahin mara' (Ex. 171).

[13] It will be seen that everyone of the appellants denied the charge of arson. The statements are, therefore, no evidence and cannot justify the conviction of the appellants under this charge unless it is proved that there was a common object of committing arson. There is no evidence to prove any such common object. It was the case of the prosecution that the whole thing was planned to rescue Jai Dayal. In such an eventuality, it might be supposed that a riot might have ensued but arson was not a necessary element. Indeed in the situation in which Jai Dayal was—at the Kolhaura in the centre of the village—the setting fire to houses in the immediate vicinity of the Kolhaura was a dangerous thing so far as Jai Dayal was concerned. Moreover, the only evidence of any such common object was the alleged shouting out by Kunwar Sri Prakash Singh that the men should set fire to the villages. This story has been totally disbelieved by the Sessions Judge. Consequently there is no evidence at all that any of the appellants had any knowledge even that arson would be committed : much less can it be said that they came with an intention to commit arson. It must also be remembered that the Pasi appellants are said by the prosecution to have joined the crowd at the village itself. They at least could, therefore, be no parties to any common intention to commit arson formed at some place prior to the arrival at the village.

[14] When the evidence as to the participation of the individual accused in acts of arson is considered, it is found that none of the witnesses whom the Sessions Judge has believed names Sumarendra Singh either as one of those who set fire or as one who ordered the setting of fire to houses. Some of the prosecution witnesses have stated that they saw some of the Pasi appellants who reside in this village setting fire to houses. This evidence is not corroborated and on the principles which the Sessions Judge has rightly laid down for the appreciation of the evidence in this particular case, it cannot be accepted to bring home the guilt of arson to any of the accused. Moreover, the evidence is wholly incredible in this matter. A look at the accurate site plan produced by defence EX. P, shows that the houses which were set on fire were in the immediate vicinity of the houses of the Pasi appellants. It cannot be believed that these appellants would jeopardise their own houses by their own acts. Further it is said that the houses were set on fire when the attack began, i. e., before Jai Dayal was set free. Exhibit P shows that the houses on all the four sides of the Kolhaura in which Jai Dayal was confined were burnt. It is hardly likely that the attackers would have surrounded Jai Dayal by a wall of fire because this would not only have effectively prevented his escape but endangered his life. In this case the offence of arson is, therefore, not brought home to any of the accused.

[15] With regard to the offence under S. 147, it cannot be doubted that Jai Dayal was rescued and that one person at least Jagan (P. W. 1) received some ir uries during the course of the transaction. Thus the statements of the accused in the Court of the Committing Magistrate are substantially true and there is no reason to reject them as untrue. Moreover, even if Jai Dayal was held in wrongful confinement by the Kurmis the attackers were not justified in taking the law into their own hands. It was not a case in which persons were trying to capture another man and his companion used violence in the defence of his person. Here the capture had already been effected sometime previously and no right of private defence of the person arose, particularly when we find that the police station was only a short distance off and police help could easily be obtained indeed the police did reach the place very shortly after the incident took place.

[16] The statements of the appellants read with the whole evidence in the case show that they were members of the unlawful assembly whose object was to rescue Jai Dayal, if need be by force, and that one or more members of that assembly did use force and caused injuries in the prosecution of the common object. They have, therefore, rightly been convicted of an offence under S. 147, Penal Code. Even, however, if it was conceded that as a matter of fact no force was used in the prosecution of the common object, the appellants, though they would in that case not be guilty of rioting would nevertheless be guilty under S. 147, Penal Code, since they were at least members of an unlawful assembly, and they would be liable to receive a sentence of six months' imprisonment.

[17] Thus the appellants are not guilty of the offence under S. 436, Penal Code, even if it is read with S. 149, Penal Code and the sentence passed on them in respect of the offence under that section must be set aside. They are, however, guilty under S. 147 and S. 323/149, Penal Code and their conviction under those sections must be upheld. The sentences passed upon them under that section are, however, too severe. It is not even alleged that the accused had motives of their own for the attack : the whole thing was alleged to have been manoeuvred by the Taluqdar of Tikra yet he and members of his staff have been acquitted, presumably on the ground that they had no hand in the affair. Then it has been held that there is no evidence to show that Jai Dayal was in lawful custody.

His confinement must, therefore, be held to be illegal and his companions, apprehensive of serious consequences if he was allowed to remain in the custody of his enemies for any length of time, took the law into their own hands and went and rescued him, they have undoubtedly committed an offence and must be punished; but the punishment will not be so severe as it would be in other circumstances. Moreover, the Sessions Judge finds that the number of persons participating in the attack has been very grossly exaggerated and the injuries that are said to have been caused are very minor ones on one person only. Moreover all the more serious element—the use of bows and arrows and brickbats and the presence of guns in the hands of some of the rioters—have been held by the Sessions Judge not to have existed. It is no doubt true that some houses were burnt during the course of the attack but I have already held that the accused were not responsible for them nor was this done in pursuance of any common object of the assembly. Indeed, it is quite possible as alleged by the defence, that the fire was the result of the confusion caused by the attack and was due to the wind blowing the flames or some sparks from the Kolhaura to some thatches and setting them alight. It is significant that it is only houses in the immediate vicinity of the Kolhaura and on all sides of it that have been burnt. In these circumstances, a sentence of fine only might well have been considered justified. I am, however, informed that all the appellants have been in jail from the date of the judgment of the Sessions Judge, i. e., for over three and a half months. This punishment is quite sufficient.

[18] The result, therefore, is that the appeal is partly allowed and the conviction of, and sentences passed on, all the appellants under S. 436/149, Penal Code, are set aside and the conviction of all the appellants under Ss. 323/149 and 147, Penal Code is upheld but the sentences are reduced to the period of imprisonment already undergone.

The position of a person being tried of a serious offence is such as to create impressions in his mind which might not exist in the mind of a normal person but in order to justify a transfer the Court must be satisfied that there is reasonable ground for apprehension in the mind of the accused. Nazir Ahmad — for Applicant.

Order. — This is an application for transfer of a case pending against the applicant in the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow. The accused stands charged with an offence under S. 302, Penal Code, on the allegation that he had killed his brother's wife, Mt. Munni. The first information report was made by the accused himself and the case taken up by him in defence was one of grave and sudden provocation which induced him to kill his brother's wife. During the course of the trial, a police constable, Muhammad Quddus, was examined by the Court as P. W. 3. The application states that this witness was examined on the motion of the Court itself while the learned Judge in his explanation states that he was examined at the request of the prosecution. The witness's statement is of formal nature and it is only concerned with the arrest of the accused and the recovery of the articles of attack. Then it is suggested in another paragraph of the application that certain questions were put to witnesses by the Court. In para. 4 of the application, the questions are given and their answers. This is not how the record stands. By looking at the questions it would appear as if they were all leading questions and the only answer that the witness had to give was 'yes.' All the questions, it may be noted, are of a formal nature. The Court in its explanation says that it did not put these questions but that they were put by the prosecution. Again it is said that the first information report being of a confessional character was not admissible in evidence and the Government pleader pointed out that it was not admissible but that the Court, nevertheless, wanted to have portions of it admitted as being admissions. In reply the learned Additional Sessions Judge says that he was alive to the fact that so much of the first information report as was of a confessional nature could not be admitted but that he thought that certain portions of it which were of a non-incriminating nature should be admitted; but eventually no portion of the first information report was admitted. It is difficult to understand what the applicant means when he says that the learned Judge was anxious to get some of the portions of the first information report proved as admissions. It is only the admissions that are not admissible, and there appears to be some misapprehension in the mind of the applicant in this matter. In fact, the applicant's case is the same now, to a large extent, as it was in the first information report, namely, that he was moved by grave and sudden provocation. It is, therefore, extremely probable that the motive of the learned Additional Sessions Judge was that which he gives in his explanation and that, far from seeking to prove a fact against the accused, the Court sought to prove something in his favour.

[2] In para. 7 of the application, it is said that the Court put a large number of questions to Motilal, husband of the deceased, after his cross-examination was over. In his cross-examination Motilal had stated that he had heard of the bad character of his wife and had made some statement as to the circumstances of her having been killed. In reply to court questions he adhered to much what he had said, but in reply to some other questions he has made statements which might be detrimental to the defence. Even, however, if they are detrimental, it cannot be presumed that the Court would know what reply the witness would give, and the Court was fully justified in putting questions to the witness under S. 165, Evidence Act, to ascertain whether statements made by him during the course of his examination and cross-examination were of such a nature as to be admissible in evidence.

[3] It is argued on the basis of these facts that the general effect of them all taken together on the mind of a person being tried for an offence of murder would be to make it appear as if the Court was prejudiced against him and that the result of the putting of many questions by the Court might induce a belief in his mind that the Court was determined to convict him. It is obvious that the position of a person being tried of a serious offence is such as to create impressions in his mind which might not exist in the mind of a normal person but in order to justsfy a transfer, the Court must be satisfied that there is reasonable ground for apprehension in the mind of the accused. A mere feeling, which is not justified by the action of the Court trying the case, cannot be sufficient. The Court has powers to see that proper evidence is before it which will enable it to do justice. It should not be the object of a Court necessarily to secure conviction and to fill up the gaps in the evidence of the prosecution. At the same time, it cannot be the business of the Court to bring about a failure of justice by not exercising its powers in clearing up what is not evident from the record merely from a fear that an accused person might possibly take it as an indication of the working of the Court's mind against him. In the present case all the facts taken together do not lead to the conclusion that the Court is acting with any prejudice against the accused or that it was doing anything but its duty in ascertaining the truth.

[4] Sufficient grounds are, therefore, not made out for the transfer, and I reject this application.

Asst. Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Order. — The applicant is a firm which carries on business as salt merchants in the city of Lucknow. The firm also deals in the substance known as denatured salt, which is used in connection with the industry of tanning hides. It is composed of the following materials in the proportions mentioned. One maund of common salt, 1 lb. of commercial naphthalene and .01 lb. of patent blue, methylene blue or malachite green: vide, Ex. 11. For sometime past a controversy has been going on between the Lucknow Municipal Board and various salt merchants with regard to the question whether denatured salt, when it is imported within municipal limits, is liable to terminal tax or whether it comes within the category of salt and is, as such exempt from the tax. Two firms of salt merchants, Messrs. Maula Bakhsh Qadir Bakhsh and Ramadhin Mathura Prasad took the matter up to the Government and on 7-8-1945, the officers of the Central Salt and Excise Department wrote to the Municipal Board stating

"denatured salt is actually salt that has been rendered unfit by Government for human consumption by mixing certain ingredients in very small proportion and, therefore, it should remain exempted from terminal tax like the ordinary salt:" vide Ex. 9.

The Municipal Board did not accept this recommendation of the Collector of Central Excise, who thereupon moved the Provincial Government for its intervention in the matter. The file relating to this could not be produced during the trial of the case but it was summoned in this Court by the Hon'ble Chief Judge and is before me. As a result of the reference to the Provincial Government, the Board was informed that "denatured salt is 'salt' for all purposes of taxation as it is just ordinary salt containing a slight mixture of other substances which make it unfit for human consumption." The Government order also pointed out that salt was exempt from taxation under the terminal tax schedule and that it was a central subject in respect of which the Municipal authority could not legislate. The Municipal Board did not accept this recommendation of the Provincial Government to treat denatured salt in the same way as common salt and asked for permission to test the matter in the Courts of law to determine whether this article was exempt from taxation or not. In the meanwhile on 27-5-1945, the applicants had brought into the limits of the city of Lucknow 891 maunds and 15 seers of denatured salt. The matter was reported by the Superintendent of terminal tax to the highter authorities of the municipality and the prosecution of the applicants was ordered.

[2] The case was tried by Chaudhri Irfan Husain, Special Magistrate, First Class, Lucknow, who held that denatured salt was not salt within the meaning of that word contained in the schedule attached to Government Notification No. 1195/XI, D. T.-81, dated 24-4-1930, in the list of goods exempted from payment of terminal tax. He accordingly held it to be liable to tax under the head "Disinfectants" which is item 56 of the Terminal Tax Schedule. He thus came to the conclusion that the offence had been committed by the applicant and he imposed a sentence of Rs. 1000 fine, the maximum sentence in such a case being ten times the extent of the tax evaded, which, in the present case was Rs. 220.

[3] The applicants appealed to the Sessions Judge who upheld the conviction but reduced the fine to Rs. 400 only. The applicants have now applied to this Court in revision and their learned counsel has contended that denatured salt remained salt for all purposes and is, therefore, exempt from treminal tax.

[4] In the course of arguments I was referred to Exs. A to I to show that common salt, denatured salt and bittern salt are all salts manufactured by the Central Government and are treated in the same manner. Oral evidence has also been produced by the applicants to indicate that all these three kinds of salt are dealt with in the same account by the Central Government and that the licences etc., required for common salt are also required for dealing with denatured salt. I am, however, not concerned with the manner in which the Central or Provincial Government deal with the denatured salt or whether it is salt within the description of that commodity given in the Central Excise and Salt Act (No. 1 of 1944): I am only called upon to determine what is meant by "salt" in the list of exempted articles attached to the Terminal Tax Schedule. I may note at once that no question arises of the levy infringing the provisions of the Government of India Act. The terminal tax was imposed in the year 1930 and if denatured salt was taxable under it the effect of the Government of India Act was not to exempt it from taxation. The Municipal Board has done nothing fresh after the enforcement of that Act which might make this commodity liable to taxation. There is, therefore, no infringement of the provisions of the Government of India Act.

[5] I come then to a consideration of the question whether denatured salt can be said to be "salt" for the purposes of the Terminal Tax Schedule. I have not been referred by either party to any decision on this question and the first question which arises is to consider what are the ingredients necessary to take a preparation of salt out of the description of "salt." It cannot be that if there is even a little intermixture of salt the commodity prepared from it still remains salt and is exempt from taxation. How then are we to determine when salt ceases to be salt? The lower Courts have examined this position very thoroughly and the learned Sessions Judge has referred to the Oxford Concise Dictionary which gives the meaning of "to denature" as being "to change nature or essential qualities." He has, therefore, held that the very name "denatured salt" indicates that it is a preparation in which salt has changed its nature. This argument cannot be objected to and when salt is treated in such a way as to render it unusable as salt it cannot be said that it still remains salt. In this connexion it may be pointed out that the evidence on the record establishes that the duty chargeable on salt by the Central Government under the provisions of the Central Excise and Salt Act is not charged in respect of denatured salt. Thus, for the purposes of taxation, the Central Government itself does not treat denatured salt as salt. The confusion has really arisen owing to the name which has been given to the article as well as owing to the fact that it is manufactured by the Central Government as a part of its salt monopoly. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that denatured salt is not exempt from the terminal tax as salt and that, therefore, the applicants infringed the provisions of law in introducing it within the municipal limits without paying tax in respect of it.

[6] It is also argued that there was no mens rea and, therefore, there could be no crime. The applicants were under a bona fide misapprehension that denatured salt was also exempt from tax. This argument too cannot be accepted because in such a case the intention to evade the duty is no longer essential. Section 155, U. P. Municipalities Act, provides as follows:

"155. A person introducing or attempting to introduce within octroi limits, or abetting the introduction within octroi limits, of any goods or animals liable to the payment of octroi for which the octroi due on introduction has neither been paid nor tendered, shall be punished with a fine which may extend either to ten times the value of such octroi or to fifty rupees, whichever is greater and which shall not be less than twice the value of such octroi."

[7] In the present case, it is shown that the applicant firm did introduce within the municipal limits goods liable to payment of terminal tax without paying that tax. They are, therefore, guilty of the offence with which they were charged.

[8] The learned counsel for the applicants relied upon 1945 O. W. N. 255[1] for the proposition that if a person has no intention to defraud he should not be held guilty of the offence. The facts of that case were entirely different. In that case the person accused had brought cloth within the municipal limits and he had taken that cloth to the octroi post for being assessed to duty. It was found that the amonut of duty exceeded the sum which the clerk at the octroi post could levy. According to the rules, therefore, a memorandum was prepared and he was directed to present himself at the head office for payment of duty. He did not present himself on the same day and his prosecution was ordered on the next day under S. 155, U. P. Municipalities Act. It appeared that the accused had in fact appeared before the junior Vice-Chairman either on the next day or within a day or two and asked him to get the duty assessed and levied and had complained to him that the people at the headquarters office had refused to take the memorandum and were harassing him. In those circumstances it was held that there was no attempt at evasion of duty; indeed it was shown that the person introducing the cloth within the municipal limits had done his best to pay the duty. It was in these circumstances that the accused was acquitted. In the present case there is no evidence to show that, at the time of introducing the goods within the municipal limits the applicant firm ever offered to pay the duty. It is, no doubt, true that when they had been detected and a report had been made they did at one stage offer to pay up the duty but subsequently decided to put the matter to the test of a decision by the Courts of law. It can, therefore, not be held that the applicants are not guilty of the offence with which they are charged.

[9] It was also contended that, in any case, the infringement is a mere technical infringement of the law since the matter had not been clarified up till then and finally the applicants refused to pay the duty merely with a view to get at a final decision on the point from the Courts. This is perfectly true and it is because of this consideration that the learned Sessions Judge has reduced the fine to Rs. 400 only. Under S. 155, U. P. Municipalities Act, the fine should not be less than double the value of the terminal tax. In the present case the fine should have been Rs. 440. The learned Sessions Judge has reduced it to Rs. 400. There can, therefore, be no further reduction. At the same time there is no application before me for enhancement of the sentence. The result is that the conviction and sentence are maintained and this application in revision is dismissed.

Second Rent Appeal No. 69 of 1942, Decided on 30th January 1947, from order of Civil Judge, Sultanpur, D/- 24-10-1942.

U. P. Tenancy Act (17 [XVII] of 1939), S. 245 — Cosharer lambardar transferring major part of property — Right of, to sue for under-proprietary rent.

The mere fact that a cosharer lambardar transferred to his son a major part of the property while retaining certain specific plots for himself will not alter his joint and several liability for the payment of revenue. He does not cease to be lambardar merely because of such transfer and under S. 245 he is entitled in the absence of any contract or usage to the contrary to collect rents and other dues from under-proprietors: 1936 R. Ghulam Imam — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a defendants' second appeal in a suit for arrears of rent brought by the lambardar of an undivided mahal. The facts briefly are that there were two cosharers in the mahal, the plaintiff lambardar and his brother-in-law. The plaintiff lambardar made a gift of his property in favour of his son, exempting certain plots of which he remains the proprietor. He was lambardar before this transaction and was not removed from this position thereafter. He has sued the present defendants-appellants, who are under-proprietors of the mahal, in his capacity as lambardar, for under-proprietary rent.

[2] The appellants mainly rely, upon a number of rulings, the citation of one of which will be sufficient to show the trend of them all. We may take 1936 R. D. 455[1] as an example. "A lambardar has no right to collect rents or to settle land in a patti, in which admittedly he has no interest." This decision like the other decisions cited by the appellants' learned counsel is not on all fours with the present case. There is no question of the respondent being lambardar in part of this mahal and not lambardar in another part of this mahal. He is either lambardar of the whole mahal or he is not lambardar at all. The mahal is not divided into pattis. Realising this position, the appellants' learned counsel has argued that the respondent is not lambardar at all, and that upon his transferring all his property excepting certain specific plots in favour of his son, his position of lambardar automatically came to an end. As respondent's learned counsel points out, however, there is no provision for his lambardari coming to an end in this way. The appointment to be a lambardar is made by Government and entails certain responsibilities as well as certain rights and powers. It could not be contended that the lambardar would get rid of all his responsibilities merely by making a transfer of this nature.

[3] It may also be noted that the fact that the plaintiff was lambardar of the mahal was admitted before the lower appellate Court. Counsel, however, attempted to argue here that it is not proved that the plaintiff is even a plot proprietor in this mahal. This is a question of fact which was not argued before the lower appellate Court. Moreover, the evidence on the file clearly shows that the plaintiff is a plot proprietor in this mahal.

[4] The question whether a plot proprietor can be said to be a cosharer in a mahal is one which has led to certain differences of opinion. In 18 A. L. J. 121[2] it was held by a Bench of the Hon'ble High Court at Allahabad :

"The word 'cosharer' in S. 159, Agra Tenancy Act, means a person holding proprietary rights in the mahal, who is jointly and severally liable for land revenue with other proprietors in the mahal and whose revenue is payable through the lambardar under the provisions of S. 144, Land Revenue Act (3) [III] of 1901)."

The mere fact that the plaintiff transferred to his son a major part of the property while retaining certain specific plots for himself will not alter his joint and several liability for the payment of revenue. In 11 R. D. 336[3] a single Judge of the same Court held that plot proprietors, i. e., those holding specific plots which are assessed to revenue are included in the term "cosharers" as used in S. 159 and the following sections of the Tenancy Act of 1901.

[5] It does not appear therefore that there is any illegality in the plaintiff remaining lambardar after the transfer to his son, since he certainly has proprietary interest in this undivided mahal. Under S. 245, U. P. Tenancy Act, he is entitled, in the absence of any contract or usage to the contrary, to collect rents and other dues. It follows that this case is rightly decided and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Misc. Appeal No. 52 of 1945, Decided on 8th November 1946, against order of Dist. Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 31st May 1945.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 23 (Oudh amendment) — Plea in answer to defence of limitation invoked by plaintiff not decided by trial Court — Remand by appellate Court—Appeal.

In a suit for pre-emption one of the issues related to limitation. There were two pleas underlying it. Only one of these pleas was considered and decided by the trial Court and the other plea regarding the aid of S. 14, Limitation Act, invoked by the plaintiff and contested by the defendant was not decided. The appellate Court thought that this plea ought to have been decided and therefore it set aside the decree of the trial Court and sent back the file to the trial Court for trial de novo with the direction that the plea regarding S. 14, Limitation Act, should be decided :

Held that the remand order fell under O. 41, R. 23 and was appealable notwithstanding the fact that the trial Court purported to decide all the issues. [Para 3]

Judgment. — This appeal is directed against an order of remand. The suit out of which it arises was for pre-emption. It was decreed by the learned Civil Judge, Rae Bareli, on payment of Rs. 2600. One of the issues related to limitation. There were two pleas underlying it. Only one of these pleas was considered and decided. The learned District Judge in appeal thought that the other plea of limitation which related to the applicability of S. 14, Limitation Act should have been also decided. He accordingly set aside the decree of the trial Court and sent back the file to the learned Civil Judge for trial de novo with the direction that the question regarding the availability of the benefit of S. 14 to the plaintiff should be decided after giving further opportunity to the parties to produce such evidence as they deem fit. The pre-emptor has appealed.

[2] The first question which arises for consideration is whether the order of remand was one under O. 41, R. 23 so as to be appealable under O. 43, R. (1) (u). Rule 23 of O. 41 as amended in Oudh is as follows:

"Where an appellate Court has reversed a decree and all questions arising in the case have not been decided, it may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case so remanded, and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suit; and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions, be evidence during the trial after remand."

[3] In 19 Luck. 411,[1] a Division Bench of this Court observed :

"Rule 23 in our opinion must be held to refer to questions which were raised by the parties on their pleadings in the trial Court and not to questions which may be raised subsequently at the stage of the appeal from any cause whatsoever. It is a matter of daily occurrence that parties sometimes raise fresh pleas in the appellate Court although no such pleas were raised in the trial Court. These pleas are sometimes allowed to be raised and the trial Court is directed to determine these pleas. It cannot be said however that these pleas which are entertained at the appellate stage for the first time were pleas arising in the case and had not been decided."

In the case before us, the plaintiff in his pleadings invoked the aid of S. 14, and the defendants contested his right to avail himself of it. It must, therefore, be held that the question thus raised not having been decided by the learned Civil Judge the remand order fell under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., and is appealable notwithstanding the fact that the trial Court purported to decide all the issues.

[4] On the merits, however, the appeal must fail. Section 14 (1) prescribes that :

"in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

We may mention that the plaint was in the first instance filed in the Court of the Munsif, Dalmau on the last day of limitation on a court-fee of Rs. 24 only. There was admittedly a deficiency of Rs. 123-8-0 and this was not made good till 9th August 1943. The valuation for purposes of jurisdiction was said to be Rs. 1222-8-0 only. The plaintiff asserted that the price entered in the deed was fictitious and that the proportionate market value of a portion of the property sold was not more than the sum mentioned above. During the course of the trial the learned Munsif discovered that the valuation of the property of which pre-emption was desired was above his pecuniary jurisdiction. He, therefore, returned the plaint on 10th January 1944, for presentation to the proper Court. On the same day the suit was filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Rae Bareli. By that time obviously the limitation prescribed for instituting a suit for pre-emption had expired, and unless the plaintiff could establish that the proceedings in the Court of the learned Munsif were prosecuted with due diligence and in good faith he could not obtain the exclusion of time under S. 14, and the suit was liable to be dismissed. The decision on this point depended upon the evidence which the parties might bring before the Court. Some defect was also discovered in the plaint, and its amendment was necessary. The lower Court, in our opinion, was justified in passing the order of remand. The appeal has no substance. It fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Widowed daughter-in-law—Joint family not possessed of ancestral property — Obligation of father-in-law and his sons or son's sons inheriting his property to provide maintenance including residence.

When a joint Hindu family consists of father and sons who possess no ancestral property the father is under a moral obligation to maintain the widow of one of the predeceased sons. After the death of the father the widowed daughter-in-law is legally entitled to maintenance against his property which comes into the possession of his sons or sons' sons either by inheritance or by survivorship : 16 A. The right of residence is one of the rights included in the right of maintenance the others being raiment and other necessities of life according to the station in life of the widow and her husband. [Para 4]

Hence where the sons inherit the family dwelling house from their father the widow of a predeceased son has a right of residence in the house and her right cannot be legally disregarded and the house cannot be sold by the surviving coparcener or coparceners without legal necessity. If such sale is made it does not affect the widow's right and the purchaser cannot evict her unless another suitable residence is provided for her: 6 Mad. 130 and 3 All. 353, Rel. on. [Para 4]

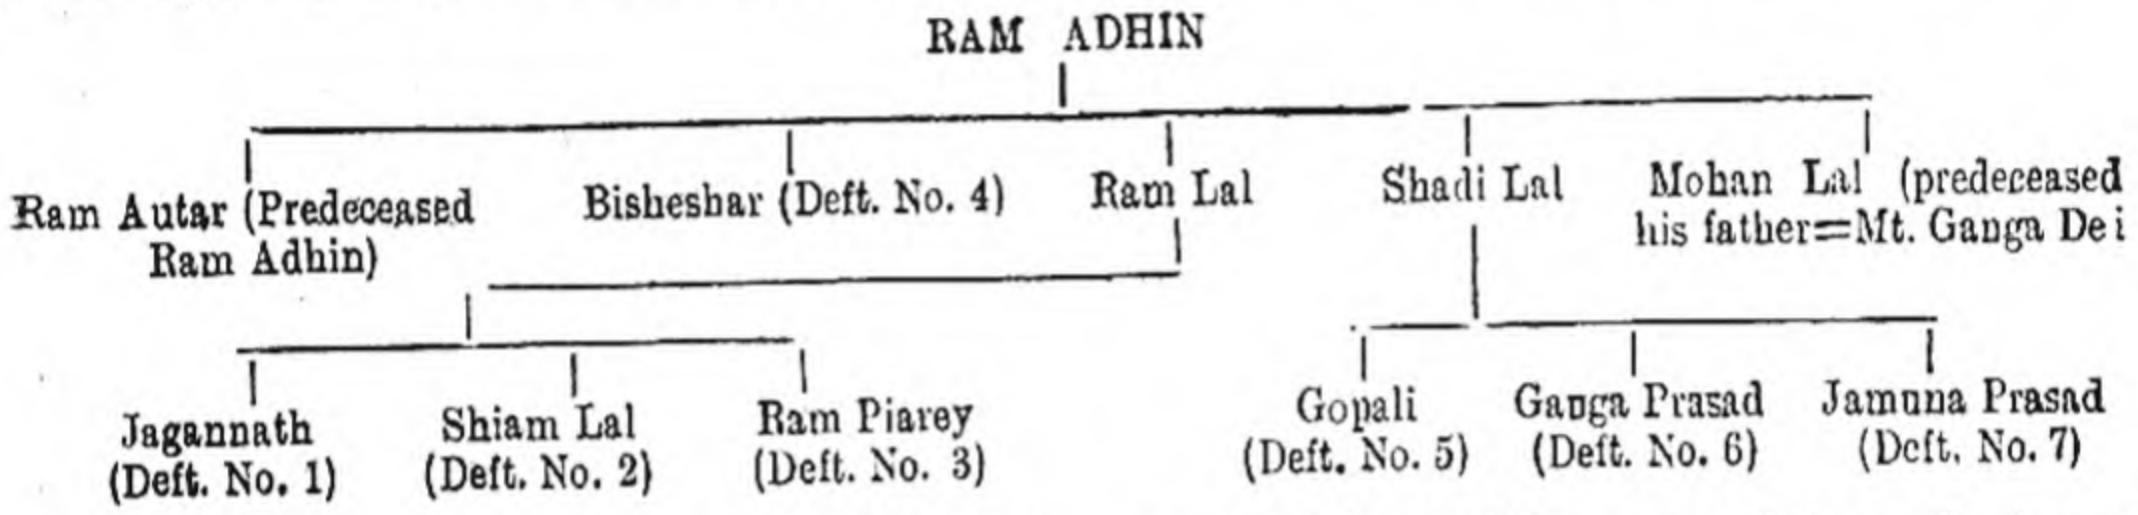
Judgment. — The plaintiff-appellant Mt. Ganga Dei, is the widow of Mohan Lal, a predeceased son of Ram Adhin. Ram Adhin, as the following pedigree will show, left three sons, namely Bisheshar, Ram Lal and Shadi Lal.



RAM ADHIN
Ram Autar (Predeceased Ram Adhin)
Bisheshar (Deft. No. 4)
Ram Lal
Shadi Lal
Mohan Lal (predeceased his father=Mt. Ganga Dei
Jagannath (Deft. No. 1)
Shiam Lal (Deft. No. 2)
Ram Piarey (Deft. No. 3)
Gopali (Deft. No. 5)
Ganga Prasad (Deft. No. 6)
Jamuna Prasad (Deft. No. 7)

Ram Adhin and his sons constituted a joint Hindu family. There was no joint estate. The father had two houses, one near the thana and the other near the tahsil in Utraula. The evidence which has been believed by the Court below shows that for some time Ram Adhin, Mohan Lal and Mt. Ganga Dei lived in the house near the thana. Subsequently, Mohan Lal and Mt. Ganga Dei took up their residence in the other house, namely the one near the tahsil. There is nothing to show whether or not the other members of the family also shifted to the tahsil house. As it is a larger house, it is likely that they did. After Ram Adhin's death in 1921 Bisheshar, Ram Lal and Shadi Lal inherited the aforesaid house. Mt. Ganga Dei, it appears, went to her brother's place for a time. On 24-9-1935, Bisheshar sold his share in the tahsil house to Jagannath, defendant 1 and when Mt. Ganga Dei returned she found that Jagannath did not permit her to live in it. She had, therefore, to enforce her right of residence in her old dwelling house through the aid of the police.

[2] In 1941 Jagannath instituted a suit against Mt. Ganga Dei for possession under S. 9, Specific Relief Act. That suit was still pending when on 7-5-1942, Mt. Ganga Dei commenced her action out of which the present appeal arises. She sought a declaration that she had the right of residence in the aforesaid house which she characterised as joint ancestral family property and that the sale deed of 1935 did not adversely affect that right. The suit was resisted on a variety of grounds. They will be apparent from the issues which were as follows :

"1. Is the house joint ancestral property of Ram Adhin and his descendants ?
2. Has the plaintiff a right of residence in the house?
3. Is the suit barred by O. 23 R. 1, Civil P. C. ?
4. Is the court-fee paid insufficient ?
5. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled ?"

The learned Munsif who investigated the case decreed the suit. He held that the house was ancestral in the hands of Ram Adhin's sons, that the plaintiff was entitled to the right she claimed in the house in suit, that the suit was not barred by O. 23, R. 1 and that the court-fee was sufficient. It may be mentioned that the main contestant was defendant 1 Jagannath. The proceedings against the other defendants were ex parte.

[3] Jagannath absented himself from the suit which he had filed under the Specific Relief Act, and it was dismissed for default on 14-10-1942. Against the decree of the learned Munsif in the present case, he went up in appeal. The learned lower Court reversed the Munsif's decree holding that the house was not ancestral and that Mt. Ganga Dei had no right to reside in it. On the question of bar of O. 23, R. 1 and the court-fee it upheld the view taken by the trial Court. Aggrieved by the decision of the learned Additional Civil Judge Mt. Ganga Dei has come up in appeal. During the pendency of it Bisheshwar defendant 4 died. No substitution was made in his place, and the appeal abated against his legal representatives. The question as to whether the entire appeal abated in consequence of that abatement was left over for decision at the time of hearing. It is conceded by the learned counsel for the respondents that the appeal has not abated. It is unnecessary, therefore, to refer to that matter any more.

[4] The rule of Hindu law in such cases is clear and precise. It is to the effect that when a joint Hindu family consists of a father and sons who are possessed of no family property the widow of one of the predeceased sons is entitled to maintenance as against the property which on the death of the father comes into the possession and enjoyment of the surviving sons either by inheritance or by survivorship: see 4 Luck. 491.[1] Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 61 I. A. 29[2] while dealing with Dayabhag law have laid down a similar rule, and there appears to be hardly any difference in this respect between the Mitakshara law and the Dayabhag law. It is also clear that the right of residence is one of the rights included in the right of maintenance, the others being food raiment and other necessities of life according to the station in life of the widow and her husband. The right of Mt. Ganga Dei to live in her family dwelling house could not, I am satisfied, be legally disregarded either by Bisheshar or by the other heirs of Ram Adhin, and the house could not be sold by the surviving coparcener or coparceners without necessity. If such a sale is made obviously it does not affect the widow's right and the purchaser cannot evict her, unless another suitable residence is provided for her: vide 6 Mad. 130[3] and 3 ALL. 353.[4] There is no doubt that the purchase of Bisheshar's share by Jagannath was with the full knowledge of Mt. Ganga Dei's right of residence and there is no proof that the sale was for legal necessity.

[5] Apart from this consideration, there is the further point that Jagannath as an heir of Ram Adhin through his father was bound by the legal obligation to maintain Mt. Ganga Dei. The lower appellate Court, however, thought that the legal aspect of the matter need not be considered. It further thought that since Ram Adhin, Mohan Lal and Mt. Ganga Dei lived at one time in the house near the thana it is that house which must be regarded as the family dwelling house. It does not seem to have occurred to the learned Additional Civil Judge that the subsequent change of residence would render the house in suit a dwelling house of Mohan Lal and Mt. Ganga Dei and that Mt. Ganga Dei would therefore have every right to live in it after the death of her husband.

[6] The learned lower Court's view apparently was that where there is no ancestral property the Mitakshara father-in-law is under no obligation to maintain his daughter-in-law, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to claim any maintenance from the defendants. The reasoning behind this conclusion is obscure. That there was a moral obligation on Ram Adhin to support his widowed daughter-in-law cannot be denied. After his death the moral obligation was transformed into a legal obligation of his sons who inherited Ram Adhin's property. They must, therefore, provide residence to Mt. Ganga Dei as a part of her maintenance, notwithstanding the fact that the property is not ancestral and the further fact that Jagannath has acquired by sale the share of Bisheshar.

[7] I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. The plaintiff is entitled to her costs of this Court and of the Courts below.

Sri Ram — for Appellant.

D. N. Roy — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under S. 12(2), Oudh Courts Act, against the decision of a learned single Judge of this Court in Second Rent Appeal No. 3 of 1941.

[2] The facts material for the determination of the present appeal are as follows:

[3] Mt. Maina, appellant, granted a theka in respect of two villages Khiraba and Gird Gonda, to the respondent Sri Bhushan. Out of the annual theka money reserved by the lease, Rs. 800, Rs. 514 was to be applied to the payment of the land revenue and the balance of Rs. 286 was to be paid every year to the lessor Mt. Maina. The suit which gave rise to this appeal was brought by Mt. Maina for recovery of Rs. 429 arrears of theka money due for the year 1346F. and for kharif 1347, and Rs. 20-11-0 interest—total Rs. 449-11-0. A number of pleas were raised in defence, but in the present appeal we are concerned only with one of them. It was alleged by the thekadar that remissions were allowed by the Government to tenants in these villages on account of floods in 1346F. and also for slump in prices in both the years, 1346 and 1347F. He contended that he was entitled to similar remissions in the theka money on account of floods and slump in prices. The trial Court decreed the whole claim of the pukhtadaria without allowing any deduction to the thekadar on account of remissions made by Government orders for the benefit of tenants on account of floods and slump in prices. In appeal the learned Civil Judge of Gonda held that the suit for recovery of theka money having been instituted on 8-3-1940, after the present U. P. Tenancy Act had come into force, any claim for remission on account of slump in prices could be made only under S. 151 of that Act, and as that section was not applicable to thekadars, Sri Bhushan was not entitled to claim any deduction on account of slump in prices. As regards the argument based on the provisions of Act 14 [XIV] of 1938, U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act, he found that no order for remission of theka money was made either by the Provincial Government or by any authority empowered by such Government in that behalf. With regard to the claim for remission on account of floods, it was argued before him that the thekadar was entitled to relief under S. 123, U. P. Tenancy Act or S. 4 of Act 17 [XVII] of 1938, U. P. Rent and Revenue Relief Act. This argument also did not find favour with the learned Civil Judge as he observed that relief under these provisions of law could be granted only by the executive authority, and inasmuch as the Deputy Commissioner had rejected the thekadar's application for grant of remission in the theka money, the Court in which a suit for arrears of theka dues was brought could not grant him any relief. The decree of the trial Court was accordingly confirmed.

[4] A second appeal was preferred by Sri Bhushan, and the same points which were urged before the first appellate Court were pressed before this Court. As regards the contention based on the provisions of the U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act, 1938, the learned Judge who disposed of the appeal referred to the provisions of S. 2 of the Act and observed as follows :

"It is clear from this section that whatever the rights of the parties may be under the Oudh Rent Act of 1886 (see S. 19A) there can be no doubt that where rent has been remitted on account of slump in prices under the orders of the Provincial Government or any authority empowered by it in this behalf that order, whether passed before or after the Act, shall not be questioned in any civil or revenue Court. It is not denied that in the present case the rent was remitted on account of fall in prices. The order must, therefore, be treated to be binding on the Courts. The effect of this section, therefore, is that rent remitted cannot be realised by the landlord."

It was pointed out by the learned Judge that the appellant before him did not claim remission of rent under S. 151 of the Tenancy Act. The learned Judge then observed as follows :

"His (Sri Bhushan) contention is that the right of the landlord to realise the full rent is negatived by S. 2, U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act, 1938, and he cannot claim the rent which has been remitted on account of the slump in prices. I am of opinion that this contention is well-founded. Section 2 makes no reference to a tenant or a thekadar, and I can see no ground why the landlord should be held disentitled to claim from a tenant the rent remitted by the Government but should be entitled to claim the rent remitted from a thekadar. The position of a thekadar is no better than that of a collector of rent from the tenants. I hold, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to the remission in rent on account of slump in prices."

As regards the claim for remission due to floods, the learned Judge referred to Ss. 4 and 5, U. P. Rent and Revenue Relief Act, 1938, and to Ss. 123 and 124, U. P. Tenancy Act, and inasmuch as by S. 219, U. P. Tenancy Act, Ss. 123 and 124 of the Act were applicable to thekadars, he held that the claim for remission on account of floods made by thekadar was well founded.

[5] Reference was made in the judgment of the Court of first appeal to the rejection of the thekadar's application for remission made to the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda, and it was held by the learned Civil Judge who disposed of the first appeal that in view of the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner refusing to grant thekadar any relief, the Court in which the claim for recovery of theka money was brought could not grant it. With regard to this argument the learned single Judge of this Court observed as follows :

"I attach little importance to the order of the Collector refusing remission as he merely proceeded upon the judgment of the sub-divisional officer. The lower appellate Court while recognising that relief was permissible to the appellant wrongly thought that it was powerless to grant it in view of the fact that the collector had refused the remissions. To refuse relief to the appellant in respect of the remissions both on account of slump in prices and on account of agricultural calamity such as floods would be to defeat the very object of the Acts of 1938 which were passed with the express purpose of affording relief."

The decision of the Court of first appeal was accordingly set aside and the remissions claimed by the thekadar were allowed.

[6] It was argued before us by the learned counsel for Mt. Maina, that the provisions of S. 2, U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act (14 [XIV] of 1938), could not form the basis of any claim for remission by the defendant-respondent. This Act received the assent of the Governor on 16-9-1938, and was published in the U. P. Gazette on 24-9-1938. Section 2 of the Act is as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything in the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926, or the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, or in any other law for the time being in force where rent has been remitted on account of any fall in the price of agricultural produce which took place before the commencement of this Act, under the order of the Provincial Government or any authority empowered by it in that behalf, such order, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, shall not be called in question in any civil or revenue Court . . . ."

The circumstances which led to the passing of this Act were mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to the Bill which was subsequently enacted. These were as follows :

"The legality of the remissions in the rent ordered by Government on account of the fall in prices which took place in 1930-31 was recently called in question in a suit filed by zamindar of the Bareilly district claiming damages from Government on account of the remissions ordered in the rents due to him for his tenants. The case was dismissed by the lower Court but the High Court in appeal while holding that no case lay against Government held that the remissions in rent were ultra vires as they had not been made in accordance with the provisions of S. 73, Agra Tenancy Act. The result is that it is now open to any zamindar to sue and obtain a decree for arrears of rent including the remissions and such cases have been filed. Difficulties will also arise in profit cases as a lambardar may be held responsible for not having collected the remitted rent. It is therefore necessary to legalize the remissions ordered for the fall in prices and this Bill has been drafted to do so."

It will thus be seen that the only object of the Act was to legalize certain orders remitting the rents of tenants which had been made by the Government and whereof the legality was doubted. There was no provision in the Act authorising any Court to remit any rent, or to treat as remitted any rent in respect of which an order was not made by the Provincial Government or by an authority empowered by it in that behalf. Obviously therefore advantage of this Act can be taken only by a person from whom a demand is made to recover rent which has been remitted by an order of the Provincial Government or other authority. If no order of the Provincial Government or some authority empowered by it in that behalf has been made, there is no room for basing an argument for relief in a suit for rent on the provisions of this Act. Dealing with this part of the case, the learned single Judge of this Court observed as follows :

"It is not denied that in the present case the rent was remitted on account of fall in prices. That order, must, therefore, be treated to be binding on the Courts."

This is not strictly accurate. The matter is dealt with in the judgment of the learned Civil Judge of Gonda thus :

"Had there been any orders for remission of theka money made by the executive authority for the year in suit, i. e. 1346 Fasli, and 1347 Fasli kharif, the defendant appellant would have been clearly entitled to them. In the absence of such executive order in favour of the defendant appellant he cannot be given any remissions owing to slump in prices, although from Misc. File No. 22 (1) of the Court of the D. C., Gonda, which has been summoned in this appeal and has been shown to me, I do gather that Rs. 237-5-1 was the amount of remissions in rent allowed to the tenants for the years in suit in respect of the land covered by the theka. In spite of this fact, the executive authorities seem to have given no relief to the defendant appellant in respect of the slump in prices and his claim for reduction of theka rent due to slump in prices must fail."

That no order remitting the rent of the thekadar was made is clear from an application made by Sri Bhushan to the Deputy Commissioner, Gonda, on 14-5-1940, praying for such an order. The relevant portion of this application is as follows:

"Remission of rent allowed to tenants in villages Khiraba is 0-4-0 in the rupee for the year. As regards the land in Gird Gonda it is 0-7-0 in the rupee. That the applicant thekadar allows these remissions to tenants. It is therefore prayed that the thekadar should be allowed the same remission in the theka money Rs. 800 annually from Mt. Maina zamindar. You, Sir, have the authority to allow this remission in the theka money. . . ."

It could not be denied that the rent payable by the tenants to the zamindars was remitted by an order of the executive authority. The amount remitted, as we find from the judgment of the first appellate Court, was Rs. 237-5-1 but it was never admitted that any order allowing a remission of the theka money payable by the thekadar was ever passed-in fact this was Mt. Maina's main reply to Sri Bhushan's claim for remission of a portion of the theka money. In the absence of any such order by the executive authorities Sri Bhushan cannot derive any benefit from the provisions of S. 2 of Act 14 [XIV] of 1938.

[7] As regards the remission claimed on account of floods, reference was made by the learned single Judge of this Court to the provisions of Ss. 4 and 5, U. P. Rent and Revenue Relief Act, 1938, and to Ss. 123 and 124, U. P. Tenancy Act. He further referred to Para. 2 of the Schedule which forms part of that Act, and to Para. 3 of Sch. 6, U. P. Tenancy Act. Sections 123 and 124, U. P. Tenancy Act, as pointed out by the learned Judge, are practically a verbatim reproduction of Ss. 4 and 5, U. P. Rent and Revenue Relief Act, 1938. Similarly Para. 3 of Sch. 6 of the Tenancy Act, is the same as Para. 2 of the schedule found in the U. P. Rent and Revenue Relief Act, 1938. Sections 123 and 124, U. P. Tenancy Act are as follows :

"123. (1) On the occurrence of an agricultural calamity affecting the crops of any mahal or portion of a mahal the Provincial Government or any authority empowered by it in this behalf-may, in accordance with the provisions of Sch. 6 remit or suspend for any period the whole or any portion of the rent of any holding affected by such calamity whether such holding is held mediately or immediately from the landlord.

(2) When the Provincial Government or any authority empowered by it in this behalf, remits or suspends rent under the provisions of sub-s. (1) it shall in accordance with the provisions of Sch. 6 remit or suspend for a like period the whole or a portion of the revenue assessed on such mahal."

"124. (1) An order passed under S. 123 shall not be questioned in any civil or revenue Court.

(2) No suit or application shall lie for the recovery of any sum the payment of which has been remitted under the provisions of S. 123 or, during the period of suspension of any sum the payment of which has been suspended under the provisions of that section."

It will be seen that under S. 123, the Provincial Government or any authority empowered by it in this behalf is authorised to remit or suspend for any period the whole or any portion of the rent of any holding on the occurrence of an agricultural calamity. If any rent is thus remitted or suspended the authority remitting or suspending it is directed to remit or suspend the whole or any portion of the revenue assessed on the mahal in which the holding lies. The remission of revenue is to be made in accordance with the provisions of Sch. 6.

[8] Under S. 124 such an order cannot be questioned in any civil or revenue Court, and no suit or application will lie for recovery of any sum the payment of which has been remitted under S. 123. Paragraph 3 of Sch. 6 runs thus:

"The relief in rent payable by under-proprietor, permanent lessee, permanent tenure-holder or thekadar shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of Para. 2 and Para. 4 as if the rent payable by such under-proprietor, permanent lessee, permanent tenure-holder, or thekadar were revenue and as if the rent payable to such under-proprietor, permanent lessee, permanent tenure-holder or thekadar were payable to the landlord, and as if the sir or khudkasht of such under-proprietor, permanent lessee, permanent tenure-holder or thekadar were the sir or khudkasht of the landlord."

It follows therefore that the theka money payable by Sri Bhushan to Mt. Maina should be taken as if it were revenue and relief in respect thereof could be granted under the provisions of S. 4, U. P. Rent and Revenue Relief Act and S. 123, U. P. Tenancy Act. But the question arises, who can make an order for remission of the whole or part of the theka money payable by Sri Bhushan. Clearly under both the Acts, it is only the Provincial Government, or an authority empowered by it in this behalf that could do so, and once the order was made it will be binding on the Courts. It is further true that no suit or application could lie for recovery of any sum, the payment of which was remitted under the provisions of these sections. But it is only the existence of an order allowing remission or suspension of rent that can be pleaded as a bar to Mt. Maina's claim. In the case of Khiraba and Gird Gonda, remissions on account of floods were made in the rents payable by tenants, but there was no order passed by any authority remitting the theka money payable by Sri Bhushan to Mt. Maina which under Para. 3 of Sch. 6, U. P. Tenancy Act and Para. 2 of the Schedule appended to Act 17 [XVII] of 1938 must be treated as revenue. There is considerable force in the following argument of the learned single Judge of this Court:

"To refuse relief to the appellant in respect of the remissions both on account of slump in prices and on account of agricultural calamity such as floods would be to defeat the very object of the Acts of 1938 which were passed with the express purpose of affording relief."

But the Rent and Revenue Relief Act as well as the U. P. Tenancy Act have prescribed special machinery for the grant of such relief. Orders in this behalf can be made only by the Provincial Government or by an authority empowered by it. Any order made in this regard is binding upon the Courts, and no suit or application can lie for recovery of any rent which is thus remitted or suspended so long as the period of suspension lasts. But if there is no order passed by the proper authority in this behalf, it is not open to the Courts to proceed on the assumption that such an order ought to have been passed. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of this Court.

[9] The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed and the decree of the first appellate Court is restored. The appellant shall get her costs from the respondent throughout.

Angne and another — Accused—Applicants v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 18 of 1947, Decided on 28th July 1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Kheri, D/- 29th January 1947.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 429 — "Horse" — Mare comes within the meaning of the word "horse". [Para 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 429 — "Maiming"—Accused striking animal with dandas for some time and fracturing its bone—Intention to maim animal presumed.

When the accused were using even dandas to strike the animal and they kept on doing it for some time they must be deemed to have knowledge of the possible consequence of that act and, if the dandas striking the leg of the mare fractured the bone, it cannot be said that there was no intention to maim the animal. [Para 3]

R. K. Srivastava — for Applicants.

Asst. Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Order. — The applicants, Angne and Ram Bharosey, have been convicted by the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Nighasan, District Kheri, under Ss. 323 and 429, Penal Code for having caused injuries to a mare, belonging to Gobardhan, which broke her leg and eventually resulted in her death. The conviction was upheld on appeal by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri and the applicants have now come up to this Court in revision.

[2] It is contended on their behalf that S. 429 does not apply to this case because the value of the mare has not been shown to be over Rs. 50 and a mare is not one of the animals specially specified in that section. Section 429 provides that "whoever commits mischief by killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless, any elephant, camel, horse, mule, buffalo, bull, cow or ox whatever may be the value thereof, or any other animal of the value of fifty rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both."

It is contended that a mare does not come within the meaning of the word "horse." Under S. 13, U. P. General Clauses Act "words importing the masculine gender shall be taken to include females." Consequently a horse would include a mare. The learned advocate for the applicant, however, contends that in this case there is something in the context to the contrary because the word "cow" has been used although the words "bull" and "ox" are also to be found. The use of the word "cow" is due to peculiar circumstances inasmuch as it was necessary to use the word "bull" as well as the word "ox" and neither of the two words could in these circumstances, be taken to denote the species. In order, therefore, to make the position clear the word "cow" is also inserted. In the case of a "horse" there was no such difficulty and in the same way as the words elephant, camel and buffalo have been used to indicate both the male and female of the species the word "horse" has also been used to indicate both the male and the female. Thus a mare is covered by the use of the word "horse."

[3] It is next contended that the evidence shows that only dandas were used by the accused in beating the mare, and therefore it could not be said that they had an intention to maim the mare. The dandas mentioned were both two cubits in length and one cannot say how heavy they were. According to the evidence which has been accepted by the Courts below the animal was beaten mercilessly. When the accused were using even dandas to strike the animal and they kept on doing it for sometime they must be deemed to have knowledge of the possible consequence of that act and, if the dandas striking the leg of the mare fractured the bone, it cannot be said that there was no intention to maim the animal. The conviction of both the accused under S. 429, Penal Code, must, therefore, be upheld.

[4] With regard to Ram Bharosey, it is pointed out that Gobardhan, P. W. 1, himself stated in the cross-examination that it was only Angne that gave him all the seven blows with the danda and that Ram Bharosey did not strike him. There is no evidence to indicate that there was any common intention to strike Gobardhan. In the face of this evidence, the conviction of Ram Bharosey under S. 323, Penal Code, cannot be upheld and must be set aside.

[5] Learned counsel for the applicants also urged that the sentences imposed, namely, three months' rigorous imprisonment together with a fine of Rs. 50 in each case under S. 429 and three months' rigorous imprisonment under S. 323, Penal Code were not justified in the circumstances of the case since the evidence shows that the squabble took place near a field belonging to Angne and it is quite possible that it was the result of Angne's efforts to ward off the complainant's animals from the neighbourhood of his field. In the present case, however, the evidence shows that the accused caught hold of the mare and administered a merciless beating. Thus they set about to punish the animal for the supposed fault of its master for which there can be no justification and there is no reason to show any greater leniency than that which the Magistrate has himself shown in the case. I accordingly do not think that there is any reason for reducing the sentence imposed.

[6] The result is that this application in revision is partly allowed and the conviction of Ram Bharosey under S. 323, Penal Code, and the sentence passed on him under the section are set aside but the conviction of both the applicants under S. 429, Penal Code, and the sentence passed upon them under the section as well as the conviction of Angne under S. 323, Penal Code and the sentence passed upon him under that section are maintained. The accused will surrender to their bails to undergo the rest of the sentences.

Government Advocate—for Applicant.

Order. — These are proceedings under S. 2, Contempt of Courts Act. They have been commenced on the complaint of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Hardoi. Banwari Lal, opposite party, is the President of the Congress Mandal, Sandi and the Secretary of the Arya Samaj. He was examined as a prosecution witness in the Court of the learned Judge in Sessions Trial No. 14/13 of 1947 in which four persons, namely Chandika Prasad, Bhim Shanker, Sia Ram and Sri Ram were charged under S. 302, Penal Code, for the murder of one Mathura Prasad. The case was adjourned on 15th April 1947 for judgment. Two days later, Banwari Lal sent to the learned Judge a letter now marked Ex. 1 by post containing private information of matters which were the subject of enquiry at the trial. The letter runs thus:

"Mandal Congress Committee Sandi, Hardoi,
Head Office Mohalla Munshiganj, Bilgram, Sandi.
Dated 17th April 1947.

To

The Additional Sessions Judge,

Jai Hind,

For some time past the idea has been coming to my mind to communicate to you the true facts relating to the case under section 302 against the accused Chandika Prasad and others of Sandi and also to mention to you the origin of the case. I want to draw your attention to the fact that except Sri Ram the three accused participated in the offence when it was committed but Sri Ram at that time was in his licensed liquor shop. The witnesses have given false evidence. Pandit Lakshmi Narain Trivedi, teacher of Adampur Tulshi, Pandit Jugal Kishore, head constable pensioner, and Chotey Lal Bhat were not even present at the scene of occurrence. All the remaining witnesses, residents of Mohalla Naushera, participated in the riot. The persons, besides the residents of Mohalla Naushera, did not commit the aforesaid offence. Besides this there were many other persons who participated in the riot on behalf of the parties but they were let off. Bhim Shankar came as soon as the accused Chandika Prasad and Sia Ram were injured and at that very time the serious Faujdari took place as a result of which innocent Pandit Mathura Prasad was beaten unarmed. Sri Ram came immediately after Mathura Prasad fell down and went away after making reproachful utterances. At the time when all these incidents took place, Hajju, resident of Manimau and Munshi Ram's son, resident of Jasmai, were present at the scene of occurrence. I came to know these facts from them as well as from other persons. I am sending this to you so that you may know the true facts although you have gone deep into the matter.

I hope full justice would be done.

(Sd.) Banwari Lal,
President Mandal Congress
Committee, Sandi."

Fortunately the above communication proved to be abortive as it reached its destination three days after the judgment was pronounced. The learned Judge, however, as he was bound to do, made a report to this Court and sent with it the letter of 17th April 1947, in original and some other relevant documents. The report was treated as an application, and a rule was issued against Banwari Lal.

[2] Banwari Lal has appeared to-day in answer to the notice to show cause. In his statement made before us he admits that he wrote the letter, dated 17th April 1947 and sent it by post to the learned Additional Sessions Judge. He says that according to his way of thinking he acted rightly but he now realises and admits that his action was wrong. He has tendered an unqualified apology and thrown himself on the mercy of the Court.

[3] There can be no doubt that a private communication which is calculated to influence the decision of a Judge in a pending case constitutes the grossest form of contempt: see (1849) 41 E. R. 1207.[1] As remarked by Norman J. in (1865) 4 W. R. 86:[2]

"It is contrary to the practice of all Courts and highly dangerous to the administration of justice that a suitor on any pretext whatever should communicate with a Judge either by letter or any conversation or in any manner whatsoever other than by public proceedings in open Court respecting the merits of any case in which he is interested and which is either pending in the Court of such Judge or likely to come before him."

The rule applies with equal force to a private communication addressed to a Judge by a witness or even a stranger to the cause. Banwari Lal had no right either as a witness, or as a private individual or as a President of a Mandal Congress Committee, Sandi, to interfere with the course of justice, and his conduct in trying to influence the decision of the Judge amounts to grossest form of perversity. We hold, therefore, that he is guilty of contempt of Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hardoi.

[4] Section 2 (2), Contempt of Courts Act, leaves intact the inherent jurisdiction of this Court as a Court of record to punish contempts of subordinate Courts: vide 1939 O. W. N 296.[3] The sole question which, therefore, falls to be considered is that of sentence. Proviso 1 to S. 3 of the Act lays down that an accused person may be discharged or the punishment awarded may be remitted on apology being made to the satisfaction of the Court. Banwari Lal's apology is, in our opinion, genuine. The contempt, however, is, as we have said above, of a grave character. Notwithstanding therefore the expression of sorrow he should be required to purge it adequately. An apology, though it often mitigates the offence, does not entitle the offender to a discharge as a matter of right, and in the interest of administration of justice we think that the gravity of the offence requires that Banwari Lal should suffer a fine of Rs. 100 and pay Rs. 120 as costs to the Government Advocate. We order accordingly. In default of payment of fine within two weeks, Banwari Lal shall undergo one month's simple imprisonment.

The fact that when the appeal is called for hearing, the counsel of the appellant was pre-occupied before another Court is no ground for not attending to appeal and is not a sufficient cause within the meaning of R. 19: Case law referred. [Para 6]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 19 — Sufficient cause—Case in regular list of appeals shown as likely to occupy two days—Probable list of appeals likely to be heard on same day also published—Counsel absenting himself on assumption that appeal in probable list would not be taken up on that day—No sufficient cause.

The whole object of the probable list is that if the regular list is finished, the probable list would be taken up in the normal course unless there is no time left or for any other reason the case must be adjourned. When a case is shown in the probable list it obviously means that there is a probability or likelihood of its being taken up. Hence where even though a case in the regular list was shown as likely to occupy two days, a probable list of cases likely to be heard was published, and in spite of all this a litigant or his counsel acted on the assumption that no case in the probable list would be taken up by the Court on that day and absented himself accordingly, he cannot but be said to have acted most unreasonably. Such conduct amounts to gross negligence. In any view of the matter he cannot be said to have been prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called, nor can his default in appearance be said to be accidental: Case law reviewed. [Paras 15 & 41]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 19 — Sufficient cause — Counsel's negligence in not appearing to argue appeal.

If the appellant entrusts his appeal to a counsel and the latter does not perform his duty to his client, the latter has a remedy against him but the negligence of counsel in not appearing to argue the appeal will not constitute a sufficient cause for re-admitting the appeal nor will it absolve the appellant of his responsibility to prosecute the appeal with due diligence. (e) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 19 — Sufficient cause—Value of precedents.

The question whether sufficient cause for readmission of an appeal dismissed for default has been made out or not is not one which can be decided with the aid of judicial decisions, except in so far as the decisions lay down any principle of universal application. Each case must depend upon its special facts and must be determined upon its own circumstances. There can be no hard and fast rule in determining a simple question of fact as this. Case law referred. [Para 16]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 19 — Grounds for restoration of appeal.

It is wrong to say that an appeal should be restored unless something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence is shown on the part of the defaulting appellant. The sound view to take would be to consider whether the applicant had made out a sufficient cause and where the applicant has failed to show due diligence in the prosecution of his case, he is not entitled to restoration of the appeal. [Para 28]

(g) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 19 and S. 151 — There is no inherent power to restore appeal except under provisions of O. 41, R. 19.

There is no inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree, or restore a suit dismissed for default, except under the circumstances and conditions mentioned in O. 9, R. 13 and R. 19 respectively. The same remarks would apply to the provisions applicable to restoration of appeals under O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C. Even assuming that inherent powers can be invoked, these powers cannot be exercised as a matter of course unless it is necessary in the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court. Where it is not shown that the litigant or his counsel exercised reasonable diligence in prosecuting the case but on the other hand was guilty of negligence and carelessness, it would be opposed to justice, equity and good conscience to exercise these powers in his favour. B. K. Dhaon—for Applicant.

R. B. Chaudhri—for Opposite Party No. 1.

Ghulam Hasan C. J.—This is an application under O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C., for readmission of the appeal which was dismissed for default on 13th August 1946. The appeal arose out of execution proceedings and was filed by the judgment-debtor on 23rd October 1944.

[2] The appeal was set down for hearing on 23rd November 1945, 14th February 1946, and on 16th April 1946, but was adjourned as there was no time. It was fixed for hearing on 13th August 1946, and was shown in the probable list of Bench Cases at No. 2, there being two more cases shown in that list on that date. The appeal was taken up but as no one was present on behalf of the appellant, it was dismissed. The order of dismissal is as follows :

"Gajraj Singh has been called out and is absent. Mr. B. K. Dhaon who filed this appeal is also absent. We accordingly dismiss the appeal for default with costs to respondent No. 1 represented by Mr. R. B. Chaudhri."

[3] On the day when the appeal was dismissed for default, the regular list before the Bench had two first appeals, one of which was shown as part heard for the following day. This appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution and another first appeal was adjourned as counsel represented that owing to postal difficulties they had not been able to communicate with their clients. The third case, a section 115-application was listed for admission and was admitted.

[4] The regular list having been disposed of in the manner referred to above, the probable list was taken up as usual in due course. The appellant Gajraj Singh was called out but was not present. The counsel was also not present. No information was given by counsel or his clerk to the Reader of the Court about the counsel being occupied in another Court and no request was made for adjournment. There was no alternative for the Court but to dismiss the appeal for default. Neither the appellant nor his counsel turned up on that date. The present application was filed the following day along with an affidavit, which purported to have been sworn on 13-8-1946. All the five paragraphs of the application are reproduced in the affidavit. These are as follows:

"1. That a Bench of this Hon'ble Court was pleased to dismiss the abovenoted appeal for default of appearance at about 11. 30 A. M. on 13-8-1946.

2. That the counsel for the applicant was arguing a First Civil Appeal before the Civil Judge, Lucknow at the time of the dismissal of the appeal by this Hon'ble Court.

3. That the case had been shown in the cause list in the probable list as second and the regular case shown in that list before the Bench that has dismissed the appeal was fixed for two days.

4. That the applicant's counsel was (not) and could not be aware that the case was likely to be taken up before the Bench on 13-8-1946.

5. That default in appearance was accidental and not deliberate."

[5] The affidavit was sworn not by Gajraj Singh but by one Shyam Narain Misra, a clerk of Mr. Dhaon. No time is given. Paragraph 4 of the application, as it originally stood did not contain the word "not," but when this was pointed out to counsel he corrected it and added the word "not." This could not, however, be done in the affidavit which had already been sworn. The value of the affidavit, if any, is destroyed by the carelessness with which it was drawn up. The Commissioner of affidavits appears to have endorsed mechanically without carefully examining its contents, although he appended a certificate, "I have satisfied myself by examining the declarant that he understands the contents of the affidavit." If the Commissioner of affiadvits had performed his duty honestly, he could not possibly have given the certificate which he gave. This is not the first time that this Court has had an opportunity of noticing the utter carelessness and disregard to accuracy with which affidavits are drawn up and verified. The attention of the Commissioner is drawn to Rr. 14, 16 and 17 of Chap. 11 of the Chief Court Rules.

[6] The application is opposed by the other side. Coming to the merits of the application, it is clear that under R. 19, under which the application has been filed, the applicant has to prove that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing. It is significant that the inherent powers of the Court were not invoked, though cases have been cited in support of the exercise of powers. So far as the counsel's pre-occupation before another Court is concerned, that is no ground for not attending to the appeal and is irrelevant. This Court has repeatedly followed the practice that it will not wait until the counsel chooses to appear unless he is engaged before some other Judge of this Court.

[7] In A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 97,[1] a counsel was engaged in arguing a case before another Bench of the Lahore High Court and he sent word to the Reader of the Court asking to be allowed ten minutes time. The Court refused and dismissed the appeal for default. In refusing to re-admit the appeal the Bench observed:

"The Court cannot be expected to await the convenience of counsel, and it is time that counsel should understand that it is incumbent on them to see that their clients are properly represented when the case is called on for hearing"

[8] Mr. Dalal, A. J. C., in A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 234[2] in rejecting an application on account of the absence of the pleader remarked that when a pleader is engaged in another Court at a distance, it is due, by way of courtesy to the Court, that some one may be left behind to inform the Court of the fact, so that if it likes it can take up some other business. The disappearance of every person connected with the party in the hope that the Court will be compelled to wait for the pleader, is certainly a wrong method and should not be countenanced.

[9] In A. I. R. 1940 ALL. 248[3] the grounds given in the application for re-admission of the appeal were that two of the vakils were engaged in another Court and the third had only been engaged on the previous day and had not made himself sufficiently acquainted with the record. The appeal had been adjourned once before. The learned Judges held that this was not a sufficient cause despite the fact that the appellant himself appeared at 3 P. M. the same day and asked for an adjournment.

[10] A learned single Judge of the Rangoon High Court, in 3 Rang. 488,[4] held that the laches of an Advocate or the careless mistake of his clerk is not sufficient cause for restoration of an appeal dismissed for default nor is it a good ground for the exercise of the Court's inherent power to restore. In this case the clerk of a counsel had by mistake informed the counsel that the case was fixed for hearing on the 17th or 18th, although it was shown in the cause list for the 16th. This case was followed in A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 642.[5]

[11] In A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 1043[6] it was held that the failure on the part of counsel to ascertain where the case was to be heard was due to negligence and was not a sufficient cause for restoration of the appeal. The case was shown in the weekly cause list before the second Bench on 21-6-1932, but owing to the illness of one of the Judges of the second Bench the case was taken up by the first Bench on the same date. It was shown in the daily cause list issued on 20th June before the first Bench.

[12] In A I. R. 1916 Pat. 388[7] adjournment of an appeal was sought on the ground that the better of the two vakils both of whom represented the appellant, was absent from the station. The Court refused adjournment and proceeded to hear the appeal. The other vakil declined to appear with the result that the appeal was dismissed for default. It was held that the vakil's conduct amounted to a very gross neglect of his client's interests and that there was no ground for setting aside the order dismissing the appeal for default.

[13] The excuse that it was raining and hence the appellant's pleader was a little late in coming to Court, is not a sufficient reason within R. 19 for restoration of the appeal dismissed for default: see A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1152.[8]

[14] I accept the view taken in these cases as in my opinion they lay down a correct view of the law and procedure which I think should be followed in this Court. This view while making for speeding administration of justice will ensure the elimination of cases of carelessness and negligence on the part of counsel and client.

[15] The only other ground which needs consideration is that the counsel was not, and could not be, aware that the case was likely to be taken up on that date. There is no reasonable ground for this assumption. In the first appeal fixed for two days counsel stated that he was unable to press the appeal as the file had been taken away by the client and it was dismissed there and then. The affidavit does not state that counsel in this case was misled by any act of the Court or its officials and hence he was unable to attend to the case. It is difficult to understand why the counsel could not be aware that his case may come up on that date. There was no physical impossibility which could have prevented its being taken up. The whole object of the probable list, as is well known to litigants and the members of the Bar, was—the list is now abolished—that if the regular list is finished, the probable list would be taken up in the normal course unless there is no time left or for any other reason the case must be adjourned. When a case is shown in the probable list, it obviously means that there is a probability or likelihood of its being taken up. It does not mean the contrary as appears to have been assumed by counsel. There was no reason for thinking that the probable list could on no ground whatsoever be taken up by the Court nor could counsel entertain any reasonable belief that the regular appeals will rule out the possibility of the probable list being taken up. No enquiry was made from the Reader or from the Court at any time during the day as to the probable time the Regular list will take. No affidavit is filed to the effect that the counsel who did not press the first appeal fixed for two days encouraged any wrong belief in the mind of the applicant's counsel as to the probable duration of the regular appeal. Indeed, if he had cared to ask Mr. Hyder Husain and Mr. K P. Misra, the two counsel who appeared in the first appeals, he would have easily found out that his appeal in the probable list was bound to be taken up in the early part of the day. There cannot be the slightest doubt, therefore, that the counsel was utterly negligent in not making any enquiry about his appeal which he was briefed to argue before the Court. As far as the applicant himself is concerned, there is nothing whatever to show that he was present in Court at any time during the day. He did not respond when he was called out, and the fact that he did not swear the affidavit himself on that date itself shows that he was not present. Neither the application nor the affidavit makes any reference to his presence in Court. The case was dismissed for default at 11-30 A. M., and if the applicant came later, he could have informed the Court at once that he had arrived late,—that his counsel was busy elsewhere and his appeal should not have been dismissed for default. We do not think that the circumstances disclosed in the present case show due diligence on the part of the applicant to prosecute his appeal. If the applicant entrusted his appeal to the counsel and the latter did not perform his duty by his client, the latter has a remedy against him but the negligence of counsel in not appearing to argue the appeal will not constitute a sufficient cause for re-admitting the appeal nor will it absolve the applicant of his responsibility to prosecute the appeal with due diligence.

[16] The case for the applicant was argued at great length before we issued notice. It has been re-argued in the presence of the opposite party who opposed the application and pressed for costs. Reference in course of the argument is made to a large number of cases of the various High Courts in India, but it cannot be doubted that the question whether sufficient cause for re-admission of an appeal dismissed for default has been made out or not is not one which can be decided with the aid of judicial decisions, except in so far as the decisions lay down any principle of universal application. Each case must depend upon its special facts and must be determined upon its own circumstances. There can be no hard and fast rule in determining a simple question of fact as this. This salutory principle was laid down by several High Courts: vide 1939 O. W. N. 787.[9] A. I. R. 1942 Oudh 75,[10] A. I. R. 1932 ALL. 450,[11] A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 96[12] and A. I. R. 1939 Lah. 267.[13]

[17] I shall refer to these cases in detail with a view to showing how utterly futile it is to refer to judicial decisions, which are sometimes called rulings determined upon circumstances wholly dissimilar. The following decisions of this Court were cited: Oudh cases, 1940 O W. N. 1086.[14] A. I. R. 1941 Oudh 367[15] and 1945 O. A. 102.[16]

[18] 1940 O. W. N. 1086[14] has not unoften been misunderstood and misquoted. In that case an auction-purchaser applied under O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C., complaining of resistance in getting possession of property sold to him in execution of a decree. Objections were filed and were fixed for hearing on 3-12-1938, before the Munsif, North Lucknow. The case was first on the cause list and was dismissed for default between 10 and 11 A.M. but the Munsif was not sure of the time. The auction-purchaser applied for restoration under O. 9 R 9, Civil P. C., and S. 151, within half an hour of the dismissal. The Munsif accepted the evidence of the auction-purchaser that he arrived late by 15 minutes only, that the case had been dismissed before he entered the court room at 10-15 A. M., that he applied for restoration within half an hour of the dismissal and that the delay was due to a cycle accident. There was no rebuttal. The Munsif restored the application. The objectors filed a revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. in this Court. The first contention that O. 9, R. 9 did not apply to the case was not decided. The second question was that the Munsif was not competent to restore the application under his inherent powers. Conflicting decisions on the question whether inherent powers could be exercised where an alternative remedy was available to the aggrieved party or not were referred to by both sides. Cases in which inherent powers were exercised were mostly execution cases to which the provisions of O. 9 did not apply. In this conflict of authority, the following observation was made in the judgment :

"After having carefully considered the cases cited on both sides, I am of opinion that the proposition that where an alternative remedy is provided the Court is precluded from exercising its inherent jurisdiction under S. 151, Civil P. C., is too wide and does not take into account cases of a special and exceptional character which may demand the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction in the ends of justice to correct palpable mischiefs . . . There is absolutely no reason for circumscribing the powers of the Court in cases where the Court is moved to correct its own mistake and wants to afford redress to the party who has been made to suffer for such mistake."

This remark cannot be read as being divorced from the facts of the particular case and given a meaning which it is never intended to convey, namely, that it applied to all possible cases of dismissals whether made by the Courts of first instance or by the appellate Courts in the exercise of original or appellate jurisdiction, and irrespective of the circumstances of the case. In the well-known case in 1901 A. C. 495[17] Lord Halsbury laid down the salutary rule in such cases :

"Now, before discussing the case in 1898 A. C. 1[18] and what was decided therein there are two observations of a general character which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have very often said before that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides."

[19] The Munsif had admitted that he was in error in dismissing the application so early in the day when the auction-purchaser was late only by 15 minutes. It is not clear whether the order had been signed. Instances are not wanting in this Court when an order has been passed in the absence of counsel but it has been re-called upon the appearance of counsel the same day before it was signed. In making the above remark reference was made to a decision of Dalal J. in A. I. R. 1928 ALL. 301[19] which was also an execution case and was dismissed on account of the judgment-debtor's default. He immediately appeared in Court afterwards and the Court restored the application under S. 151, Civil P. C. Dalal J. observed in that case that no order of dismissal could be passed till the end of the day when the Court was rising because there could be no default until the Court rose for the day. This observation was clearly intended for the guidance of the subordinate Courts seised with the trial of original cases. It was not intended to lay down that the trial Courts should wait for the party or his counsel till 4 o'clock and then pass an order of dismissal. Such a position would be intolerable and would paralyse the administration of justice. This would be more true in the case of High Courts which deal with the appellate work only and where all appeals are generally represented and the presence of a party is not essential. In referring to this case nothing was said by me in approval of the above observation. On the other hand, a Bench of this Court disagreeing with the observation of Dalal J. observed thus :

"With all respect we are not prepared to subscribe to this view. Litigants are ordinarily required to attend the Court at 10 A. M. and we know no reason why they should not be penalized for failure to do so without sufficient cause. To allow them to attend at any time in the day before the Court rises, that is, usually at 3-30 or 4 P. M., might make it impossible to carry on the work of the Court properly by putting it in the power of litigants to obstruct it." (Vide A. I. R. 1942 Oudh 75.[10])

I entirely agree with this observation.

[20] A. I. R. 1942 Oudh 75[10] is equally unhelpful. There an application for permission to sue as a pauper was dismissed for default of the applicant. He applied the same day under O. 9 stating that he was present in the court compound from 10 A. M. but he did not attend the Court as he did not hear the case called out. The Munsif did not believe this story because the witnesses in support of it were contradictory. It was admitted, however, that the applicant was in the court compound but the Munsif held that it was the applicant's own fault if he did not hear the case called out. Consequently, he held that there was no sufficient cause within the meaning of O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., but in the interest of justice he restored the case on payment of costs. A revision was filed against this order. It was held that a revision application under S. 115 lay to this Court because the question whether the application had been properly restored could not be raised in an appeal from a decree passed in the suit. Upon the other question whether the Munsif had or had not the power to restore the application the judgment leaves no doubt whatever that the Bench differed from the view taken by the Munsif in holding that there was no sufficient cause while they no doubt said after referring to the above-mentioned quotation from 1940 O. W. N. 1086[14] that they were not prepared to hold that the Munsif had no power to restore the application. They immediately added :

"We are not indeed satisfied that he was justified in the view that there was no sufficient cause for restoration, that is under O. 9, R. 9."

The decision of the Court, as will appear from the criticism of the action of the Munsif in dealing with the application for restoration, rested upon the substantial ground of disagreement with the view of the Munsif on the question of sufficient cause.

[21] All that 1945 O. A. 102[16] laid down was that although O. 9, Civil P. C., does not govern execution proceedings the Court has jurisdiction to restore an execution application dismissed for default under its inherent powers, even though a fresh application has become time-barred. This view was taken upon a careful examination of the authorities which are referred to in detail in the judgment of the Bench of which I was a member. It is interesting to note that in this case a decree was passed in December 1929, for a heavy amount. Several unsuccessful attempts were made to realise the decree, but after some small payments had been made the balance payable to the decree-holder was Rs. 1,62,391. In December 1941, the decree-holder applied for execution on the last day. He was present with his counsel who applied for time to file papers. The application was allowed and 3-6-1942 was fixed for filing the necessary papers. On this date neither the decree-holder nor his counsel was present. The application was consigned to the records. A telegram was received the same day by the Court asking for postponement. The decree-holder applied for restoration and after explaining his unavoidable absence and the absence of his counsel he urged that he had no other remedy left as the decree had become time barred. The Court accepted the version of the decree-holder and held that his absence was excusable. Order 9, R. 9 not being strictly applicable, action in restoring the application was taken under S. 151, Civil P. C.

[22] Allahabad Cases : 34 ALL. 426[20] and A. I. R 1932 ALL. 450.[11] In 34 ALL. 426[20] the lower Court had dismissed the suit for default. Nobody responded when the case was called out repeatedly and the Court waited for 20 minutes. It was admitted that the party was present though not in Court. The lower Court rejected the application for restoration holding that there was no sufficient cause. In appeal the learned Judges remarked that :

"While we think that it might be difficult to hold that there was sufficient cause in view of the fact that the case was actually called and repeatedly called for 20 minutes in the manner in which cases are called in Mofussil Courts both within the court room and outside the court room, so that persons in attendance in the court compound were sure to hear, we are of opinion that the case is one of those in which the Court may exercise its inherent powers of passing orders necessary for the ends of justice."

[23] I am not prepared to follow this case in so far as it holds that apart from the provisions of O. 9 of the Code there is any inherent power in Court to restore suits dismissed for default.

[24] In A.I.R. 1928 ALL. 301[19] the application for restoration was filed on the same date between 12 and 1 P.M. along with an affidavit. The applicant was present but on the case being called he went to search for his vakil and when he came back he found that the suit had been dismissed for default. The Court of Small Causes did not accept this as a sufficient cause. In these circumstances the learned single Judge (Niamatullah J,) made the following observations :

"While litigants would do well to act as the learned Judge says they should, we cannot ignore the somewhat natural tendency among the litigants of hurrying to their pleaders when their cases are called on. They expect to find their pleaders and take them in time for the hearing. In most cases, the litigant himself or his pleader appears in Court shortly afterwards. In some cases the pleader is not forthcoming or is busy elsewhere and if the case is dismissed in the meantime, the rule as to restoration should not be so rigorously enforced as to sacrifice the ends of justice which it is intended to subserve. Award of reasonable costs to the opposite party will in general be found to be a sufficiently deterrent penalty on one side and compensation on the other. I should not be understood as laying down a rule of thumb applicable to all such cases. Each case has to be decided on its own facts, but the exercise of discretion should not be divorced from equitable considerations arising from those facts."

[25] This case only shows that the learned Judge did not agree with the view of the lower Court and held it was a sufficient cause. He interfered under S. 25, Small Cause Courts Act, to advance substantial justice between the parties.

[26] Lahore cases : A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 387[21] and A. I. R. 1939 Lah. 267.[13] The case in A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 387[21] was a case in which dismissal of the appeal for default was set aside on appeal by a learned single Judge. The facts were totally different. The case was shown last on the list but it was called earlier in order and in time. The appellant was present and he was given only five minutes to call his counsel who was in another Court. The respondent was not present. It was held that the appeal should have been restored.

[27] In A. I. R. 1939 Lah 267,[13] the appeal which was shown as the last in the cause list was called out at 11-30 A.M. and was dismissed in default. Within a few minutes of dismissal an application for restoration was made, supported by an affidavit, in which it was stated that the appellant could not be present as he was attending another case in another Court at the time, and that the pleader seeing that the case was the last on the list, had gone away to the Bar room expecting that the case would not be taken up for some time. The learned single Judge, therefore, held that the absence of the appellant or his counsel was not intentional in the peculiar circumstances of the case. He distinguished the case in A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 622[22] on the ground that there counsel or his clerk had not cared to see the cause list which had been exhibited several days before, and was grossly negligent in not ascertaining that the case had been fixed for hearing on that date and concluded with the observation:

"Each case has to be decided on its own facts, and in a matter like this no general rule of universal application can be laid down."

This case is easily distinguishable upon facts.

[28] Madras cases : A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 63[23] and A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 503.[24] In the first case the facts are not very clear from the judgment. It appears that the decree was passed ex parte against the appellant who was not present on the 13th when the case was fixed for hearing. The appellant had started from Trichinopoly by the evening train on the 12th and if the breach on the railway line had not occurred, he would have been in time for the hearing on the 13th. The learned Judges, Schwabe C. J. and Wallace J. held that this was a sufficient cause. The learned Judges were satisfied that the appellant intended to reach the Court on the 13th to conduct his appeal but was prevented from doing so by an inevitable accident for which he was not responsible. The learned Chief Justice remarked:

". . . . It should never be the intention of the Court that a man should be deprived of a hearing unless there has been something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence on his part or something which cannot be put right, so far as the other side is concerned, by making the man to blame pay for it."

I am not prepared to hold that an appeal should be restored unless something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence is shown on the part of the defaulting appellant. I think the sound view to take would be to consider whether the applicant had made out a sufficient cause and where the applicant has failed to show due diligence in the prosecution of his case, he is not entitled to restoration of the appeal.

[29] The above case was followed in A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 503.[24] In this case the appellant's counsel was arguing a case before a Division Bench of the Madras High Court when his case before a single Judge was called. He did not make any representation to the single Judge personally because he expected his case before the Division Bench to be over earlier but he took the precaution of sending information through his clerk to the learned Judge of the difficulty in which he was placed and stating that he would be present before the Court in a few minutes. The learned single Judge dismissed the appeal for default. In giving leave to appeal against his order the learned single Judge says:

"When it was called on, nobody was present on behalf of the appellant. After some delay, during which the Advocate was sent for, a clerk came and said that the Advocate was engaged in another Court."

The learned Judge took the view that the Advocate should have represented his difficulty to the Court either personally or through some friend but he did not do so. He considered the sending of the clerk as tantamount to allowing an Advocate to dictate to the Court when and where he should appear. It is obvious that the case has no application, as no information was given to the Court in the present case even through the clerk that counsel was engaged elsewhere. The remark made by the Bench in that case,

"It will be unmerited hardship if the party's interests should be irreparably prejudiced by reason of every default on the part of counsel" must be read in conjunction with the facts of that case. The learned Judges recognised that in dealing with an application of this kind the Court has to consider the position of the party concerned rather than the conduct of the member of the Bar though it may some time be difficult to dissociate one from the other.

[30] Bombay cases : A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 20,[25] A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 199,[26] A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 198[27] and A. I. R. 1945 Bom. 85.[28] In the first case the inherent powers of the Court were exercised in discharging the order dismissing the appeal for default. A certain person having died during the pendency of the suit, his widow who was a minor applied to be substituted as an heir. She was represented by her father as next friend. The application was dismissed on the ground that the right to sue did not survive and it was ordered that the suit should abate. An appeal having been preferred by the next friend, a pleader was engaged. The pleader died and notice was served upon the next friend directing him to appear and stating that on failure the appeal would be dismissed for default He did not appear and the appeal was dismissed under O. 41, R. 17 in February 1916. In March 1919 on attaining majority the widow filed an application under R. 19 for readmission of the appeal. The learned

Judges in exercising the inherent powers were largely influenced by the fact that if they did not act the minor was likely to lose a large estate for the gross negligence of her next friend.

[31] The case in A. I. R. 1938 Bom. 199[26] is distinguishable on the facts. The case was restored on two grounds, firstly because the applicant was guilty of slight carelessness owing to some misunderstanding and appeared at 1-15 P. M. instead of 11 A. M. and secondly because he applied the same day for restoration.

[32] In A.I R 1942 Bom. 198,[27] the appeal was dismissed for non-deposit of costs for preparation of the paper book of the appeal by the Subordinate Judge, who had appellate powers. He acted on a certain High Court circular in dismissing the appeal and in refusing to restore it he held that he could not go contrary to the strict rule made by the High Court. The rule merely said that the appeal shall be liable to be dismissed and not that the appeal shall be dismissed. The learned Judge held that there was sufficient reason upon the facts of the case for not depositing the costs on due dates and the Subordinate Judge was wrong in not restoring it. Section 151 was applied, it being held that O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C., was not exhaustive of the powers of the Court in a proper case to readmit an appeal dismissed for default.

[33] The case in A I.R. 1945 Bom. 85[28] only lays down that the Judge is not precluded from exercising his inherent power under S. 151, merely because there are other remedies open to the decree-holder. The case appears to have arisen in execution proceedings.

[34] Calcutta case : 43 Cal. 857[29] at p. 877. In this case the suit was dismissed for default under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C. The counsel stated before the Court that he had only instructions to apply for adjournment and when this was refused he withdrew from the case. The plaintiff was a lady. The learned Judge on the original side dismissed the suit. It was admitted that the counsel took a wrong course and that he should have gone on with the case and produced other witnesses and asked for adjournment for the production of the plaintiff who was ill at the time The suit was for a large sum of money and there were serious issues involved in the case. Two of the learned Judges held that the suit should be restored. One of the learned Judges expressed doubt whether the appeal should be allowed, but in view of the fact that other members of the Bench were prepared to give an indulgence to the plaintiff, he did not dissent from the order proposed. The learned Judges agreed that counsel was guilty of a gross error of judgment and should not have withdrawn from the case. Accordingly they held that the client should not be penalised to the extent of the dismissal of the claim without investigation.

[35] Rangoon case : A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 109[30] This is a single Judge decision of the Rangoon High Court. In this case the appeal was shown as 17th on the list but was taken up at 12-30 P.M. much earlier than the counsel had anticipated. No other facts are given. Probably the matter was brought to the notice of the Court the same day. The appeal was restored on payment of costs holding that it was eminently a proper case for restoration.

[36] Peshawar case : A. I. R. 1934 Pesh. 13.[31] This is a single Judge decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Peshawar. In this case also the application for restoration of the suit dismissed for default was put in on the same day. It also appears that counsel appeared before the Court after the suit had been dismissed.

[37] Lastly it was argued that even if the Court held that there was no sufficient cause, the appeal should be restored under the inherent powers of the Court. I have already indicated sufficiently clearly in the preceding paragraphs that apart from the provisions of O. 9 of the Code, the Court has got no inherent powers to restore suits or appeals dismissed for default. The case of execution proceedings stands on a different footing as O. 9 does not apply to those proceedings. No authoritative decision of this Court is cited to show that apart from execution proceedings inherent powers can be invoked in other cases as well. In any view of the matter, even if inherent powers could be invoked, these powers cannot be exercised as a matter of course unless it is necessary in the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court. Where it is not shown that the litigant or his counsel exercised reasonable diligence in prosecuting the case, on the other hand it appears that he was guilty of negligence and carelessness, it would be opposed to justice, equity and good conscience to exercise these powers in his favour.

[38] I hold, therefore, that no good ground has been made out for readmission of the appeal. I would dismiss this application with costs.

[39] Kaul J. — I have had the advantage of seeing the order about to be pronounced by my Lord the Chief Judge and I agree with the conclusion arrived at by his Lordship that no sufficient cause for restoration has been made out. In view of the elaborate discussion of the case law in his Lordship's judgment, I will content myself with stating very briefly my reasons for the view I take.

[40] The appeal which was dismissed for default, and for the restoration whereof the present application is made, was fixed for 13-8-1946. It was shown in the probable list of Bench cases at

NO. 2. The regular list before the Bench had three cases, two first appeals and a section 115-application. One of the two first appeals was a part-heard case adjourned from the previous day. This was dismissed for want of prosecution, and the other first appeal was adjourned. The third case was taken up in its order and disposed of. The regular list being exhausted, the Bench took up the probable list cases. The present applicant's case was called out in its order, but as no one appeared for him, the case was dismissed for default. The following affidavit containing the grounds on which restoration is applied for was filed with the application. It is sworn by Shyam Narain Misra, clerk of the counsel who appeared for the applicant.

"1. That a Bench of this Hon'ble Court was pleased to dismiss the abovenoted appeal for default of appearance at about 11-30 A. M. on 13-8-1946.

2. That the counsel for the applicant was arguing a first civil appeal before the Civil Judge, Lucknow, at the time of the dismissal of the appeal by this Hon'ble Court.

3. That the case had been shown in the cause list in the probable list as second, and the regular case shown in the list before the Bench that has dismissed the appeal was fixed for two days.

4. That the applicant's counsel was (not) and could not be aware that the case was likely to be taken up before the Bench on 13-8-1946.

5. That default in appearance was accidental and not deliberate."

[41] Paragraph 1 of the affidavit contains a statement of fact. So do paras. 2 and 3. The correctness of these paragraphs was not disputed before us. It is paras. 4 and 5 which mention the grounds in support of the application for restoration. If, as is mentioned in para. 4 of the affidavit,

"the applicant's counsel was not and could not be aware that the case was likely to be taken up before the Bench on 13-8-1946"

I am of opinion that the application should succeed. But is this averment correct? The implication underlying the averment contained in this paragraph is that something led the counsel for the applicant to believe that his case would not be taken up by the Bench on 13-8-1946. Nothing is said expressly as to what induced the counsel to entertain this belief. If the only ground for this belief was the fact mentioned in para. 3 of the affidavit, that a case shown in the regular list before the Bench was fixed for two days, I am clear that there does not exist any ground whatsoever for such a belief. The very fact that, even though a case in the regular list was shown as likely to occupy two days, a probable list of cases likely to be heard was published, was sufficient to negative such a belief. Were it otherwise, there would be no meaning in publishing a probable list at all. If in spite of all this any litigant or his counsel acted on the assumption that no case in the probable list would be taken up by the Bench on 13-8-1946, and absented himself accordingly, he cannot but be said to have acted most unreasonably. Such conduct amounts to gross negligence. In any view of the matter, he cannot be said to have been prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called, nor can his default in appearance be said to be accidental. It is clear from the averments made in the affidavit that the counsel for the applicant assumed (in my opinion without any grounds whatsoever) that his appeal, which was mentioned in the probable list, would not be taken up on 13-8-1946. His absence was, in these circumstances, deliberate. When I say so, I do not mean to suggest that the applicant's counsel wilfully absented himself when the case was called, but he acted in a manner which cannot but be described as altogether unreasonable. An act can be called accidental only when the chain of events in which it occurs is such that it could not be foreseen by exercise of ordinary prudence. It is everyday experience of persons engaged in the business of the Courts that cases which are fixed for any day are either not taken up or are disposed of in much less time than was expected; for instance, if a party dies, or there is a settlement arrived at between the parties and they care not to appear, and allow the case to be dismissed. In the present case we have no material before us to show that the applicant or his counsel consulted the counsel engaged in the appeals mentioned in the regular list for the day as to the probable time those cases were likely to take. It appears from the affidavit that a wholly unwarranted assumption was made that no case mentioned in the probable list would be taken up on 13-8-1946, because one of the cases on the regular list was fixed for two days. If any inquiry had been made from the counsel appearing in the cases on the regular list, the applicant would have no doubt come to know that his case would not only be taken up on 13-8-1946, but might well be taken up in the early part of the day. No such inquiry was made, and it appears that the case was left to take care of itself. From what has been stated above, it is clear that no sufficient cause as contemplated by O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C., is made out.

[42] It may be hard case that the appellant is prevented from having his appeal heard and decided on merits, but as sufficient cause for the applicant's failure to appear when the case was called has not been made out, the application must be dismissed.

[43] It was argued by the learned counsel for the applicant that apart from the provisions of O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C., the Court could restore the appeal in exercise of its inherent powers. As pointed out by Chitaley in his Commentary on S. 151, Civil P. C., (Note 2) it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad, Calcutta, Lahore, Madras, Patna, Rangoon, and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Oudh and Sind that there is no inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree, or restore a suit dismissed for default, except under the circumstances and conditions mentioned in O. 9, R. 13 and R. 19 respectively. The same remarks would apply to the provisions applicable to restoration of appeals under O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C. I agree with the view thus stated.

[44] For the reasons given above, I am of opinion that this application cannot be allowed and should be dismissed with costs.

By Court. — For reasons given in our separate orders, we dismiss this application with costs.

Second Appeal No. 186 of 1942, Decided on 1-9-1947, against order of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 17-3-1942.

(a) Hindu Law — Joint family — Self-acquired property of father — Devolution of, upon sons — It is not joint family property in their hands.

The self-acquired property of the Hindu father when it devolves upon his sons who are members of a joint Hindu family cannot in their hands be regarded as joint family property: 19 A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 158, Rel. on. [Para 5]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 18 — Admission by party on pure question of law is not binding on him — Opinion about character of property is question of law.

An admission made by a party on a pure question of law cannot be held to be binding upon him.

Where the defendant has made a statement that the three plaintiffs with their eldest brother were members of a joint Hindu family when the sale deed in question was executed and that the property in suit was their joint family property, the first portion of the statement may be regarded as a statement of fact within his knowledge but the second portion is clearly his opinion about the character of the property which is a question of law and is not therefore binding on the defendant. It is especially so when the statement was made in answer to plaintiff's counsel's statement setting up for the first time in arguments a new case which was in variance with the pleadings. [Para 5]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 44—Self-acquired property of Hindu father devolving on sons — Eldest major son and mother on her own behalf and as guardian of minor sons executing sale deed —Suit by minor sons to set aside sale in respect of their share — Art. 44 applies.

A Hindu father died leaving behind him a widow, four minor sons and his self-acquired property. The eldest son R who had attained majority and the widow as mother and guardian of her three minor sons B, C and D executed a sale-deed in favour of P. Subsequently B, C and D brought a suit for setting aside the sale in so far as their share was concerned on the ground that it was not executed for their benefit. It was alleged in the plaint that their father was the absolute owner of the property and it devolved upon the four sons by inheritance as tenants-in-common. The plaint made no mention that the father formed a joint Hindu family with his sons and that sons succeeded as survivors. Two of the plaintiffs B and C had attained majority three years before suit:

Held that the suit was governed by Art. 44 and not by Art. 144. The mother acted as a natural guardian of her three minor sons and the adult son acted in his individual capacity and not as manager representing the joint Hindu family. The suit was therefore time barred so far as B and C were concerned and was within time so far as D was concerned: 1 A. I. R. 1914 Oudh 338; 7 A. I. R. 1920 Cal. 776 and 7 A. I. Rajeshwari Prasad — for Appellant.
Krishna Swarup Verma — for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this second appeal are as follows: One Ratan Singh, who was the original owner of the property had four sons, Ram Autar Singh, Ram Bahadur Singh, Sheo Bakhsh Singh and Bachcha Singh. Ratan Singh died leaving his four sons and his widow Mt. Jairaja. On the death of Ratan Singh all the sons were minors and they were entered in the revenue records under the guardianship of their mother. Ram Autar became major on 16-6-1925, and was so recorded. On 31-1-1931, Ram Autar as major and Mt. Jairaja as mother and guardian of her three minor sons executed a sale of the property in suit in favour of Badri Prasad. On 18-2-1941, the suit giving rise to the present appeal was brought by the three sons of Ratan Singh excluding Ram Autar Singh for setting aside the sale in so far as their share was concerned. It was alleged that the deed was not executed for their benefit and was not binding upon them. In the plaint it was clearly stated that Ratan Singh was the absolute owner of the property and he left at his death four sons as heirs. It is significant that no reference was made in the plaint that Ratan Singh formed a joint Hindu family with his sons or that the sons succeeded to his property as survivors in the joint family. On the contrary, it was alleged that Ratan Singh was the absolute owner and his property devolved upon his four sons by inheritance.

[2] The suit was resisted by the defendant on the ground that the sale deed was binding on the plaintiffs as the consideration was taken for payment of Government revenue and to meet other necessary charges. It was also pleaded that the suit was time-barred as the plaintiffs attained majority more than three years before the institution of the suit.

[3] The trial Court decreed the suit on 30-8-1941. That Court held that although two of the plaintiffs attained majority more than three years before the suit, Bachcha Singh did not become major till August 1938 and the suit which was filed on 18-2-1941, was, therefore, within time. The trial Court further held that, in any case, Art. 144, Limitation Act applied because the sale was made by the eldest son acting as manager of the joint Hindu family. A sum of Rs. 83-2-0 was found to have been taken for the benefit of the plaintiffs and the suit was decreed upon the payment of this amount along with certain expenses of the sale. The lower appellate Court confirmed the decree.

[4] Both the Courts below relied upon an admission of Ram Bharosey defendant made on 13-8-1941, apparently in answer to the plaintiffs' counsel's statement. The plaintiff's counsel stated for the first time on that date that all the four brothers were joint on the date of the sale deed and the property in suit was ancestral joint family property. Ram Bharosey admitted this fact. The arguments were then heard and the judgment was delivered on 30-8-1941. Reliance was placed on 30 I. A. 165[1] in support of the proposition that no guardian can be appointed for a minor in respect of his share in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family, and any transfer made by mother as guardian is without legal effect. The Courts below, therefore, held that the execution of the deed by Mt. Jairaja as guardian for the minors be disregarded and it should be taken to mean that Ram Autar Singh executed the deed as the karta of the joint Hindu family. In this view Art. 44, Limitation Act was held not to apply and Art. 144 was applied. Article 44 prescribes a period of three years for a ward who has attained majority to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian and time begins to run from the date when the ward attains majority. Article 144 gives 12 years' period.

[5] It is contended before me that the Courts below were wrong in allowing the plaintiffs to set up a new case at the time of the arguments which was in variance with their pleadings. It is further contended that the admission made by Ram Bharosey was one on a pure question of law and was erroneous and should not have been held to be binding upon him. I am of opinion that this contention has force. There is good authority in support of the proposition that the self-acquired property of the Hindu father when it devolves upon his sons who are members of a joint Hindu family cannot in their hands be regarded as joint family property: vide A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 158[2] which was explained in A. I. R. 1936 Oudh 331.[3] The statement made by Ram Bharosey is as follows:

"Ram Autar, Ram Bahadur, Sheo Bakhsh and Bachcha Singh were members of a joint Hindu family when the sale deed was executed and the property in suit was their joint family property."

The first portion of the statement may be regarded as a statement of fact within his knowledge but the second portion is clearly his opinion about the character of the property which is a question of law. As regards the first portion, the admission is sought to be explained by the learned counsel for the appellant as meaning that they as brothers were living together and I am not prepared to say that this interpretation of the statement is unreasonable. Be that as it may, the statement is in answer to the plaintiffs' counsel's statement made for the first time after the close of the evidence. It is at best an admission which can be withdrawn or, at any rate, explained that it was due to a mistaken view of the law. In any case the admission is contrary to the plaintiffs' own pleadings and the Courts below were not justified in pressing it into service against the appellant's case. If the admission is disregarded, the position is that Ram Autar, the co-executant of the sale deed, acted in his own individual capacity for himself and not as karta of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his minor brothers. There is nothing in the deed to show that Ram Autar was acting as the manager. As a matter of law he could not. The property was the self-acquired property of his father and, according to the plaintiffs' own case, had devolved upon his sons not as members of a joint Hindu family but as tenants-in-common by inheritance. Each of the sons had a definite share which he was entitled to alienate. It is obvious, therefore, that Art. 44 will apply to the case. No suit has been brought by Ram Autar to set aside the sale deed qua his own share and the plaintiffs have not asked that the sale should be set aside in toto but have confined their claim to three-fourths share in the property and have excluded the one-fourth share of Ram Autar. The decision in 30 I. A. 165[1] is not applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case. In that case no question of the application of Art. 44, Limitation Act arose.

In that case there were three brothers, one of them was major and the other two minors. The mortgage was made by the major brother on his own behalf and by the mother on behalf of the minors. The mortgagee filed a suit to enforce the mortgage. The mother had obtained a certificate of guardianship from the Court. The question raised before their Lordships was that the mortgage was invalid as the mother did not obtain the sanction of Court before making a mortgage. Their Lordships held that a guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family. They further held that the mortgages were not mortgages by the guardian but mortgages by the family entered into by the karta of the family with the concurrence of the second brother who was also probably an adult member. The mortgage was proved to be for necessity and was, therefore, upheld. In the present case, there is no question of any joint Hindu family or the sale having been made by the karta of the joint family. The case was followed in A. I. R. 1918 Mad. 730[4] which was also a case of a joint Hindu family and Art. 44 was held not to apply to a suit by a minor member of the joint family on attaining majority to declare that the alienation by the natural guardian was not binding upon him.

[6] Stuart A. J. C. (later Sir Louis Stuart, C. J.) in 17 O. C. 52[5] applied Art. 44 to a case where the mother of the minors, acting as their guardian, had sold lands belonging to the minors during their minority and the minors had brought a suit for possession of lands more than three years after attaining majority.

[7] Article 44 was also applied by the Calcutta High Court in 59 I. C. 589[6] to a transfer by the mother as natural guardian of her minor son during minority. That was also a case in which the property which had devolved on the son belonged exclusively to the father and did not belong to the family.

[8] The Bombay High Court in 44 Bom. 742[7] also held that a Hindu minor on his attaining majority cannot sue to recover possession of the property transferred by his mother acting as his natural guardian during his minority without suing to set aside the transfer within the period of limitation provided by Art. 44, Limitation Act.

[9] In the present case the mother acted as a natural guardian of her three minor sons and the adult son acted in his individual capacity and not as manager representing the joint Hindu family. In this view of the matter, the suit will be within time so far as Bachcha Singh is concerned, but it would be beyond time in respect of the other two plaintiffs.

[10] Accordingly I allow the appeal and modify the decree of the Courts below by dismissing the suit of Ram Bahadur Singh and Sheo Bakhsh Singh respondents as time-barred and maintain the decree in favour of Bachcha Singh so far as his share in the property is concerned on payment of the proportionate amount found to have been taken for legal necessity. The parties will bear their costs in proportion to success and failure in all the three Courts.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 113—Acceptance by lessor of money for use and occupation during pendency of appeal in ejectment suit, whether waiver of notice.

Once a suit for ejectment has been instituted, it cannot possibly be said that any act of the lessor shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting unless he withdraws the suit. He may renew the lease, in which case it would not be a question of waiver but a question of fresh lease. Where not only had the lessor instituted the suit but he had obtained a decree for ejectment and he had attempted to execute that decree, and he did not withdraw his suit nor did he withdraw the execution proceedings, it could not be said that his action in receiving the money due for the use and occupation of the rooms during pendency of appeal in suit indicated an intention to waive the notice which had already merged in a decree of Court, though in the receipts the word "rent" had been used instead of the words "damages for use and occupation:" 13 A. M. K. Seth—for Appellant.

Mahabir Pd. Srivastava—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondent against the appellant for arrears of rent and for ejectment from two rooms occupied by the appellant in a building belonging to the respondent situated in Aminabad in the city of Lucknow. The Munsif (North), Lucknow, decreed the suit on 30-1 1946 but the appellant filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge, Lucknow, on 26-2 1946. During the pendency of the appeal when it came on for hearing on 12-7-1946, the appellant applied to the Additional Civil Judge, Lucknow, stating that a compromise had been arrived at outside the Court, by which the respondent had waived the notice of ejectment and had re-admitted the appellant to the tenancy of the rooms by accepting rent. It was accordingly prayed that the appeal might be allowed in terms of the compromise. In support of this alleged compromise, the appellant filed two receipts issued by the respondent's husband to him, in both of which it is mentioned that the payment was being accepted for the rent of the months of May and June respectively.

[2] The respondent denied that any compromise had been arrived at or that the notice of ejectment had been waived and that there had been re-admission to tenancy. The appellant produced himself in the witness-box and the respondent's husband was examined on her behalf. The lower appellate Court, on a consideration of this evidence, has come to the conclusion that there was no compromise. It has also not accepted the case of waiver of notice, since the rent was paid not only after the institution of the suit but also after a decree had been passed in favour of the respondent. The appellant has now come to this Court in second appeal.

[3] With regard to the question of compromise, the decision of the learned Additional Civil Judge, Lucknow, is perfectly correct and is based upon good reasons. It is said that the compromise was arrived at in the end of the month of March, yet we find that on 29th March the respondent filed an application in the lower appellate Court objecting to stay of execution proceedings and alleging that the defendant-appellant had been committing default in payment of rent. After contest, the application for stay was allowed on condition that the appellant deposited in Court a sum of Rs. 260 for rent and Rs. 93 for costs. During all this time, no application was made by the appellant for having a compromise, which is alleged to have been already arrived at, duly recorded in Court. After 9-4-1946, also no application for recording of the compromise was made till the date of the hearing fixed, namely 12-7-1946. In these circumstances, it is difficult to believe that there was in fact a compromise in March 1946. The decision of the lower appellate Court on this point must, therefore, be upheld.

[4] On the question of waiver, the learned advocate for the appellant relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 763,[1] in which a learned single Judge of that Court has held that acceptance of rent during the pendency of a suit amounts to a waiver of the notice. The learned Judge points out that, in S. 113, T. P. Act, there is no proviso similar to the second proviso contained in S. 112 of that Act. From this he came to the conclusion that a notice could be waived even after a suit had been brought to enforce the rights which arose by reason of that notice. With all deference to the learned Judge I am unable to agree with this reason.

[5] Section 113 does not contain a proviso because it only relates to an act showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. Once a suit has been instituted, it cannot possibly be said that any act of the lessor shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting unless he withdraws the suit. He may renew the lease, in which case it would not be a question of waiver but a question of fresh lease. In the present case not only had the lessor instituted the suit but she had obtained a decree for ejectment and she had attempted to execute that decree. It was only by reason of an order of the appellate Court that execution proceedings were stayed. She did not withdraw her suit nor did she withdraw the execution proceedings. It cannot, therefore, be said that her action in receiving the money due for the use and occupation of the rooms in the months of May and June indicated an intention to waive the notice which had already merged in a decree of Court. It is no doubt true that in both the receipts the word "rent" is used instead of the words "damages for use and occupation," but in view of her conduct, misuse of the word "rent" would not indicate that the notice had been waived. In the present case even the Court in its order dated 9-2-1946, has used the word "rent" for the amount awarded by it for the period subsequent to the passing of the decree. Moreover, it is to be noticed that the plaintiff has instituted a separate suit for the recovery of the money due to her in respect of five months elapsing since she had obtained the decree for ejectment. A part of the amount claimed in the suit was ordered to be deposited before the stay was granted and Ex. A-8, the first of the receipts relied upon, was merely a receipt for the payment of the amount remaining due after the deposit had been made in the appellate Court, and it also evidences payment of the costs of the suit for arrears. In these circumstances the learned lower appellate Court was quite justified in holding that there had been no waiver of the notice or renewal of the lease though it is wrong in referring to S. 112, T. P. Act.

[6] The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The stay order dated 23-1-1947, is withdrawn, and the respondent will be entitled to obtain all money deposited in respect of the amount due to her under the various orders of this Court as well as of the lower Court.

Second Appeal No 282 of 1942, Decided on 30-9-1947, against order of Civil Judge, Bahraich, D/-23-4-1943.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 92 Provisos 2 and 4 — Applicability — Subsequent oral agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee regarding the mode of payment — Mortgage deed silent on the method — Agreement in no way modifying or rescinding terms of mortgage — Oral agreement can be proved.

Where the document evidencing the mortgage is silent as to the manner in which the payment is to be made, and there is nothing inconsistent with an oral agreement subsequently entered into between the mortgagor and the mortgagee under which possession of some property is delivered to the latter to realise the profits and utilise them towards the payment of the interest and principal, and which does not in any way modify or rescind any provision of the agreement evidenced by the mortgage deed, proviso 4 to S. 92 has no application. Mahabir Pd. Srivastava—for Appellant.

H. Husain and H. D. Srivastava—for Respondent.

Judgment.—On 29-6-1925, Sabib Din appellant, executed a mortgage deed of his half share in grove No. 128 in village Bhakrauli Khapurwa, district Bahraich, in favour of the respondent in consideration of a sum of Rs 181 for a period of 2 years. The mortgage deed provided for interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, and it was provided that interest would continue to run at the rate stipulated even after the expiry of the period of 2 years The mortgagee, respondent, instituted the suit, out of which this appeal arises, for his mortgage money and prayed for the sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant appellant in reply pleaded that about a month after the mortgage deed had been executed, at the instance of the plaintiff, he gave to the plaintiff possession over the plot with a view that all the profits from the fruit, as well as from the wood, of the grove should be utilised towards reduction of the interest as well as the principal of the debt It was pleaded that the profits had been sufficient to discharge the entire debt and that, therefore, no decree could be passed in favour of the plaintiff.

[2] The trial Court framed an issue on this question and evidence was recorded. On a consideration of the oral and documentary evidence on the record the trial Court came to the conclusion that possession was delivered to the plaintiff-respondent in accordance with the agreement mentioned above which the Court found to have been proved. On a calculation of profits from this grove the Court came to the conclusion that the debt had been wiped out and it, therefore, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and the learned Civil Judge of Bahraich allowed the appeal and decreed the suit for Rs. 313-11-0 with costs to be recovered by sale of the mortgaged property. The learned Civil Judge did not go into the question as to whether any such agreement had been arrived at between the parties or not, and, if such an agreement had been arrived at, whether profits from the property were sufficient to discharge the debt. The learned Civil Judge was of the opinion that proviso 4 to S 92, Evidence Act, bars such an inquiry and that this was not a case to which proviso 2 of S. 92 was applicable. He relied upon a decision of a Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in 14 O. C. 321[1] and he distinguished the case upon which the defendant relied, namely 19 O. C. 166.[2]

[3] In the arguments before me the learned advocate for the appellant has contended that the view expressed in 19 O. C. 166[2] is the correct view and has been adopted in other cases both by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner as well as by this Court while the facts in 14 O. C. 321[1] are clearly distinguishable from the present case.

[4] In the present case the oral agreement set up does not in any way modify or rescind any provision of the agreement evidenced by the mortgage deed. The interest remains the same All that is done is that a method of payment is provided, and this is a matter which does not in any way affect any of the provisions of the mortgage deed. On this matter the mortgage deed was entirely silent. It cannot, therefore, be said that proviso 4 to S. 92 has any application to the present case. Since the document is silent as to the manner in which the payment is to be made, there is nothing inconsistent with an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee under which possession of some property is delivered to the latter to realise the profits and utilise them towards the payment of his interest and principal. Thus the defendant is not prohibited by the provisions of S. 92, Evidence Act, from proving the terms of the agreement.

[5] In 14 O. C. 321[1] the agreement originally arrived at was varied, since the subsequent contract stipulated that the entire profits derived by the mortgagee from the property mortgaged would be applied in satisfaction of the interest and that he would be entitled to redeem upon payment merely of the principal sum. Thus the stipulation as to interest in the mortgage deed was substantially varied and the rate which had originally been provided for was modified by confining it to the extent of profits derived from the property over which possession was delivered. The learned Judicial Commissioner, therefore, held that proviso 2 to S. 92 did not apply as this was not a matter on which the document was silent and that this term was inconsistent with the terms of the mortgage deed. As I have already pointed out, in the present case the term as to interest remains unaffected and the mortgagee continued to be entitled to get interest at the rate stipulated for. If the income which he derives is not to be sufficient to satisfy that interest, he will be entitled to recover it under the provisions of the mortgage deed. If, on the other hand, the profits exceed the amount of interest payable, they will be credited towards the principal.

[6] In 19 O. C. 166[2] the position was very similar to that in the present case. The learned Judicial Commissioner states:

"I find, therefore, that even after the period mentioned interest ran on the principal sum. In these circumstances there is nothing illegal in an arrangement between the parties by which the mortgagee is put in possession of the mortgaged property in order that he may enjoy the profits and devote the amount realised towards the satisfaction of the interest. I need not quote authorities in support of this view as it is a view which is generally accepted. There is nothing in such an agreement which varies, contradicts, or adds to the terms of the original deed. It is an arrangement which provides for the satisfaction of one of the conditions of the deed."

The principle enunciated in these words is fully applicable to the case before me. This is also the view which has been taken by the Judicial Commissioner in 10 I. C. 196[3] and by this Court in 13 O. L. J. 95.[4] A recent decision of the Allahabad High Court has also adopted the same view: vide 1946 O. W. N. (H. C.)5.[5]

[7] In this view of the matter the learned Civil Judge was clearly wrong in not considering the question as to whether the alleged agreement had been proved and as to whether the profits from the property of which possession was delivered were sufficient to discharge the debt. The result is that the appeal is allowed with costs and the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside. Since, however, all the points involved in the appeal were not decided by the learned Civil Judge, the case is remanded to the Court of the Civil Judge, Bahraich, for disposal according to law and in the light of the remarks made in this judgment.

Order.—This is a reference from the learned Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli recommending that a certain order passed by a Magistrate of the 1st class, Rae Bareli, attaching property under S. 146, Criminal P. C., be set aside.

[2] It would appear that on 29-5-1946, one Surajpal Singh filed a complaint against Gopi Nath, Bajrang and 19 others under S. 379/109, Penal Code, alleging that on 27-5-1946 these persons had wrongfully plucked and appropriated fruits of kathal and mahua trees which belonged to him and one Sheo Kumar Singh. The police after inquiry reported on 12-6-1946, that the accused persons were taking forcible possession of the mango and mahua groves and of 5 bighas land, and it was requested that the land and grove should be attached under S. 145 and the parties be bound over under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The learned Magistrate, Mr. Acharya, on receiving the report of the police directed the property to be attached and issued notice under S. 145, Criminal P. C. In reply to the notice a written statement was filed only by one Fakiray Singh who denied that there was any apprehension of a breach of the peace or that the complainant Surajpal Singh and Shiv Kumar had any claim to the property. The evidence which was eventually led in the case proved the joint possession of the complainants and of Gopi Nath Singh and others. The learned Magistrate was satisfied that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace but he held that the parties were in joint possession and under the circumstances ordered the groves in dispute to be attached under S. 146, Criminal P. C. The learned Sessions Judge in his referring order has stated that according to the authorities of this Court S. 145, Criminal P. C., does not apply to cases of joint possession and in such circumstances the order under S. 146 was without jurisdiction and should be quashed.

[3] I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and am satisfied that the reference must be accepted. There cannot be the least doubt from the terms of sub-ss. (1) and (6) of S. 145, Criminal P. C., that S. 145 applies only in cases where the dispute is about actual possession and not about joint possession. This view was taken in the late Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh in 24 O. C. 167.[1] The same view was taken in A. I. R. 1941 Oudh 515[2] and it was held that the possession should be actual and exclusive possession. Section 146, Criminal P. C., also deals with actual exclusive possession and if S. 145, Criminal P. C., cannot be applied, S. 146 also cannot be applied. This view finds support in the Madras decision in 27 M. L. J. 169[3] where it was held that a Magistrate has no power to order an attachment under S. 146, Criminal P. C., when he finds that both the parties are in joint possession.

[4] Accordingly I accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge, set aside the order under S. 146, Criminal P. C., and quash the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. If the district authorities fear a breach of the peace, they may, if so advised, take action under S. 107, Criminal P. C., against the party or parties at fault.

Criminal Misc. Application No. 58 of 1947, Decided on 30-9-1947.

Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 3 — Interference with course of justice—Prejudicial publication during pendency of suit.

The question whether the publication by the other party during the pendency of a suit has resulted in any prejudice to the applicant's defence is immaterial. What is essential under the law is that the publication should be calculated to create an atmosphere of prejudice against a party or such prejudice as may interfere with the course of a fair trial. [Para 9]

A, a taluqdar, sued B for declaration of his title to certain plots as part of his estate. While suits in respect of such plots were pending, C, the Superintendent of the estate and D, standing counsel, estate issued a public notice in papers asserting that the land within the boundary given (which included the plots in suits) belonged to the estate and that the persons entering into transactions with B did so at their own risk. Four more suits against B for similar declaration were also filed by A for other plots transferred by B from the same land. In an application under S. 3 by B against C and D that the publication of the said notices amounted to contempt of Court:

Held, that the action of C and D in publicizing the assertion of title while the matter was sub judice amounted to contempt of Court, caused real prejudice to B and substantially interfered with due course of justice: Case law discussed. [Para 19]

R. D. Srivastava—for Applicant.

R. F. Bahadurji and P. N. Asthana—for Opposite Party 1 and 2.

Order. — This application under S. 3, Contempt of Courts Act arises out of two notices dated 16-3-1947, and 18-3-1947, in the National Herald and the Tanweer of Lucknow respectively. The application was filed on 9-4-1947, against Thakur Bhopal Singh, superintendent of the Balrampur estate and Mr. P. N. Asthana, an advocate of Lucknow.

[2] The application was made by one Mohammad Ibrahim, who is defendant in two suits (Nos. 219 and 339 of 1946) instituted by Maharaja Sir Pateshwari Prasad Singh taluqdar of the Balrampur estate, against him in the Court of the Munsif, North Lucknow, where they are pending.

[3] Suit No. 219 of 1946 was filed on 5-7-1946, for possession of land measuring eight biswansis comprised in kishtwar plots Nos. 38 and 45 in village Dogawan Purwa Doem, now a part of Lucknow, by demolition of certain unauthorised constructions made by Mohammad Ibrahim. In para. 1 of the plaint the plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of village Dogawan and was the owner in possession of the land encroached upon. The suit was decreed ex parte on 21-10-1946. An application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., for setting aside the ex parte decree was made on 28-10-1946, but this was dismissed on 30-11-1946. An appeal against the order refusing to set aside the ex parte decree was filed in January 1947. The appeal was allowed on 14-5-1947, with the result that the ex parte decree was set aside and the case was sent back for trial on the merits.

[4] Suit No. 339 of 1946 was filed on 19-9-1946, upon similar allegations. The land which was the subject-matter of dispute was 12 biswansis and seven kachwansis comprised in kishtwar plots Nos. 38 and 45. The relief sought was a declaration that the Balrampur estate is the owner of the land in suit and that possession should be given to it by demolition of the encroachments and a relief for injunction. An ad interim order for injunction was issued against Mohammad Ibrahim and it was made absolute on 18-11-1946, upon his counsel raising no objection to it. Issues were then framed in the case. The case was fixed for evidence on 31-7-1947.

[5] While the aforementioned two suits were pending, the two offending notices under date 16th March and 18-3-1947, appeared in the papers. The notices are identical in terms and the one appearing in the National Herald may be reproduced verbatim:

"Public is informed that the land bounded as below and lying in village Dogawan Purwa Doem belongs to the Balrampur estate Attempts are being made by one Mohammad Ibrahim, son of Haji Amir Khan to lease, and sell and mortgage portions on the said area near Chemartolia. Anybody who enters into any transaction in respect of that land will do so at his risk.

West —Arazi Mazrua mouza Birhana.
North:—Canning Street wa Rasta Abadi Chamartolia.
South:—Aishbagh Road.

Th. Bhopal Singh,
Superintendent,
P. N. Asthana, Advocate,
Counsel for Balrampur estate."

[6] In paras. 6 and 8 of the application it is alleged that the notices published in the papers are calculated to interfere with the course of administration of justice and have a tendency to prejudice the public against Mohammad Ibrahim with a belief that he is a trespasser and an invader. It is also stated that the object of publishing the notices was to cast a cloud over his title and to prejudice the public against him. The application is supported by an affidavit of Mohammad Ibrahim.

[7] In reply the publication of the notices during the pendency of the suits is admitted. It is also admitted that the Balrampur estate had instituted proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., on 8th February 1947 but the application was dismissed on 15th March 1947, by the Magistrate. It is alleged that Mohammad Ibrahim made several transfers of the property in dispute by way of mortgages, sales and leases from May 1946 to May 1947, that enquiries were made from the Balrampur estate by certain persons as to whether the estate had any claim to the land in dispute and that in order to avoid future complications and to protect the interests of the Maharaja of Balrampur as well as the third parties they published the notices. It is also pointed out that the publication of the notices referred to open land situated near Chamartolia in Dogawan which had no concern with the land involved in the civil suits over which the applicant Mohammad Ibrahim had already made constructions and it referred to all that open land about which enquiries were made from the estate. It is further alleged that the publications were made in good faith and were not in any way calculated to interfere with the course of administration of justice nor had they a tendency to prejudice the public against Mohammad Ibrahim.

[8] According to the applicant the offending passage in the notice is the first portion in which the assertion is made for the information of the public that the land with the boundaries given therein in village Dogawan Purwa Doem belongs to the Balrampur estate It is no longer disputed that the boundaries given are comprehensive and would include the lands in dispute in the two suits mentioned above. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the assertion of title contained in the offending passage embraces all lands in village Dogawan Purwa Doem which admittedly comprised the land in dispute as well. The title to the lands in dispute which is only a very small portion of plots Nos. 38 and 45 was sub judice in the two suits and it is obvious that a claim of title in respect thereof in a public newspaper would tend to prejudice the defence of the defendant. It is contended on behalf of the opposite parties that the estate could not have mentioned in express terms the exclusion of the land in dispute from the notice as they were referring to the applicant's attempt to transfer lands other than the land in dispute to outsiders, but we do not think that there was any obligation upon the opposite parties to issue any notice in the press. So far as the transfer of the land in dispute in the two cases is concerned, there was no point in issuing a notice as S. 52, T. P. Act, forbade the transfer of property pendente lite and if a transfer was made in contravention of the provisions of that section, it had no effect on the rights of the Balrampur estate. So far as

S. 41 of the same Act is co.. rned, even if the applicant assumed the ro'e of ostensible owner of property which did no. belong to him and purported to transfer it, it would be open to the Balrampur estate to sue for injunction to prevent him from alienating property and sue him and his transferee for possession if he persisted in his attitude.

[9] We are far from suggesting that it was not open to the Balrampur estate to issue in the press warning to prospective purchasers against negotiating with Mohammad Ibrahim for transfer of lands belonging to the estate, but the gravamen of the charge which is brought against the opposite parties is that they asserted title for the information of the public to lands which were the subject-matter of adjudication in a Court of law and which upon criminal proceedings having proved infructuous had led to the filing of the suits by the estate. Upon the own showing of the opposite parties there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace regarding the title to the lands in suit and the fact that the estate had to file civil suits against the applicant must be a fact of common notoriety in the locality. The question of title and possession to the lands in suit will, in all probability, depend not only on the documentary evidence but on the oral evidence as well. Witnesses will have to be produced to prove acts of possession or ownership over the land in suit and it may well be, as counsel for the applicant contends, that he will be hampered in procuring evidence or persuading witnesses to come forward and give evidence in his favour. Indeed counsel went the length of saying that he has already been handicapped in the matter as witnesses are not easily forthcoming. The question whether the publications have resulted in any prejudice to the applicant's defence is immaterial. What is essential under the law is that the publication should be calculated to create an atmosphere of prejudice against a party or such prejudice as may interfere with the course of a fair trial.

[10] We may mention in passing that four more suits were filed by the estate for possession in May 1947 in respect of other lands which were alleged to have been transferred by Mohammad Ibrahim to various persons on different dates in January 1947. These transfers were evidenced by registered documents. We do not think that we should extend the scope of the application beyond the two suits to these four suits on the ground that they were in contemplation at the time when the publication of the notices took place but we do think that it would be reasonable to assume that if property belonging to the estate is transferred by a person having no title thereto, the estate is bound to take legal proceedings for vindicating its title. The fact that the applicant was transferring portions of the property from time to time is a circumstance in favour of the exercise of extreme caution and circumspection on the part of the estate to issue any notice in a newspaper publicizing its title. Mr. Bahadurji contended in the course of his arguments that the four suits could not be used as items of complaint by the applicant but they could be considered collaterally. Mr. Bahadurji also contended that the notice was drawn up carelessly but in good faith and the contempt, if any, is a technical contempt and this Court should exercise great caution in using its powers to punish such a contempt. Learned counsel conceded that the motive of the publishers is immaterial so long as the act done amounts to contempt.

[11] In 41 Cr. L. J. 584[1] a Bench of this Court held that the question in all cases of comment on pending proceedings is not whether the publication does interfere, but whether it tends to interfere with the due course of justice, and on the same principle it is a contempt of Court to make a speech tending to influence the result of a pending trial whether civil or criminal, or to deliver a speech at a meeting.

[12] In A. I. R. 1931 ALL. 420[2] a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held the publication of a will which was contested in a pending suit as amounting to contempt of Court. It was remarked that the whole object of publishing the will in the advertisement column was to make the public believe in the genuineness of the will and to act upon it. It was observed :

"It is obvious that this was likely to prejudice the mind of the public against the party to the suit who was impugning the genuineness of the document. The publication undoubtedly helped to create an atmosphere in favour of the party relying upon it and adverse to them who were contesting it. If before the disposal of a pending suit in which a will is disputed newspapers are allowed to interfere in this way with a fair administration of justice there would be a serious harm done."

[13] In 57 ALL. 573[3] the defence to the mortgage suit by the plaintiff was that his father had colluded with some unscrupulous money-lenders in taking advantage of the loose habits of the defendant's father and getting fictitious recitals made in the deed regarding payment of earlier debts. During the pendency of the suit a notice was sent by the plaintiff's advocate threatening the defendant that unless he withdrew the plea and paid damages, he would be prosecuted for defamation of the plaintiff's deceased father. A notice for contempt of Court was issued against the plaintiff and his advocate. It was held that the notice amounted to a direct interference with the administration of justice in preventing or attempting to prevent the defendant from pressing the plea, which might prove to be a very substantial and legitimate defence; and in that way an indirect attempt was made to exclude the plea from the consideration of the Court. The advocate, who drafted and sent the notice on behalf of the plaintiff, was also held responsible for contempt, it being remarked that he could not take shelter behind the act of his client who acted entirely under his legal advice and direction.

[14] In A. I. R. 1938 Cal. 772[4] it was held that the essence of the offence of contempt of Court is conduct calculated to produce, so to speak, an atmosphere of prejudice in the midst of which proceedings must go on. The publication of anything which tends to excite prejudice against the parties or their litigation while it is pending amounts to contempt of Court. In that case a suit was filed on behalf of the public for a declaration that certain land claimed by the defendant was a public pathway. The plaintiffs published a notice calling a meeting and stating that the disputed land which had been used for general public from time immemorial was under risk of being closed. The resolution in the meeting and an article in a newspaper also asserted that the land was being used by the public and protested against the act of the defendant to close it. It was held that these acts amounted to contempt. Khundkar J. in the course of his judgment observed:

"Now the defence of the petitioner in the title suit is that the land is his own and that no person and far less the public have ever enjoyed any right of way over it. What would be the effect and tendency of the resolution quoted above upon the petitioner's ability to establish his defence in the title suit? In my opinion it will be to hamper and circumscribe. Such a resolution passed at a public meeting would predispose people to a belief, right or wrong, that the petitioner was an invader of the public's right. It undoubtedly conveys the impression of a public denunciation of the petitioner's conduct and such a denunciation might well deter inhabitants of the locality from bearing testimony in support of the petitioner's case."

[15] It was observed by a Special Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 43 C. W. N. 333[5] that attacks on the conduct of parties to pending legal proceedings constitute contempt of Court by reason of the very fact that they are such attacks and are to be sternly punished, even though they can have no possible influence on the proceedings or the Court's decision therein.

[16] Learned counsel for the opposite parties relied upon certain passages in the Law of Contempt of Court by Tek Chand (1938 Edn.) at pp. 189 to 191 and (1889) 58 L. J. Q. B. 490=61 L. T. 343[6] and 58 Cal. 884.[7] Some of the passages relied upon are taken from (1889) 58 L. J. Q. B. 490.[6] The result of these cases is summarised at p. 191 as follows:

"The statement of law as contained in the decisions reviewed above has been accepted and followed by the High Courts in this country. The High Courts are chary of using this weapon except where they are forced to do so in order to maintain the dignity of the Courts and to preserve the Majesty of Law, whenever it is threatened to such an extent that failure to take summary action would lead to obstruction to the course of justice. Jenkins C. J. in 41 Cal. 173[8] at p. 221, alluded to the circumstances justifying recourse to the summary process of contempt in the following words:

'It is not enough that there should be a technical contempt of Court: it must be shown that it was probable that the publication would substantially interfere with the due administration of justice'."

We agree with this statement of law, but we cannot help observing that the difficulty often arises when these principles have to be applied to the facts of a particular case.

[17] (1889) 58 L. J. Q. B. 490[6] requires to be carefully examined. Hunt filed an action against Clarke claiming certain moneys for alleged misrepresentations in connection with certain companies. Pending the trial of this action the Star newspaper published a paragraph, which was alleged to offend against the law of contempt. It was addressed to the Investors and others and stated that the case was to be tried by the Queen's Bench Division by special juries and concluded by saying:

"Mourners over the Moldacot fiasco are likely to hear a little inside history of the business."

Clarke instituted proceedings for contempt against the publisher of the Star. He made an affidavit in which he stated that he was not before aware of the paragraph, that the paragraph was inserted in the paper in the ordinary course of business as an item of general news, that he had no interest in the action, and had not inserted the paragraph with any idea of prejudicing the trial and submitted that he had not been guilty of a contempt of Court. Two learned Judges, before whom this matter came up, held that it was not calculated to prejudice the trial of the action and did not amount to a contempt of Court as likely to influence the Judges or the jury. Clarke's appeal against the dismissal of his application was dismissed. Cotton L. J., in the course of his judgment, observed:

"Now these are two distinct questions, and I cannot quite express my concurrence with the view taken by the Divisional Court in saying that by no possibility could what has been done be considered as a contempt, because I think the rule is laid down by Lord Hardwicke, and which has often since been acted upon, that there may be contempt of Court of this kind in abusing the parties or 'in prejudicing mankind against persons before a cause is heard' and, in my opinion, it does technically become a contempt if pending a cause, or before a cause even has begun, any observations are made or published to the world which tend in any way to prejudice the parties in the case, and it may be that in such a case whoever is guilty of such an act would be liable to be committed."

The learned Lord Justice went on to observe:

"My view was in substance this, that where the offence complained of is of a slight and trifling nature, and not likely to cause any substantial prejudice to the party in the conduct of the action or to the due administration of justice, the party ought not to apply, and it is mere waste of time to do so, and that it is not really a proceeding in order to have the case properly conducted and justice properly administered, but that it is a mere waste of time to attempt to throw costs on the person who has done the act, where it is obvious there could not be any case calling upon the Court for committing, which is a most serious matter to be done, and only to be done when the administration of justice really requires it."

Fry L. J. and Lopes L. J. both expressed a dissent from the view of the Divisional Bench and held that it was technically a contempt of Court but one of a slight and trivial character.

[18] This case was followed by Rankin C. J. in 58 Cal. 884[7] where the editor, and the printer and the publisher of the Statesman were charged with contempt for publishing certain articles in the newspaper relating to the trial of certain accused persons charged with throwing bombs and other acts of violence. The Statesman appears to have suggested that the Congress Party could not be acquitted of complicity in or connivance at the acts of violence and the other newspaper "The Advance" had criticised the Statesman upon these suggestions. Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose, who was a prominent member of the Congress Party, appeared for the accused. The Statesman appears to have criticised the action of Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose in appearing for such accused. The accused were referred to as the Chittagong raiders. Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose objected before the tribunal trying those accused to these criticisms and to the use of the word "raiders." The Statesman published another article in which it was made clear that there was no intention to affect in any way the mind of the tribunal trying those men, although the word "raiders" was used without the adjective "alleged." It concluded thus:

"Where juries are not concerned, the Courts in England have been quick in refusing to admit that the mind of the bench can be influenced by an accidental slip in a newspaper. We regret the slip nevertheless."

In the third article the regret was repeated but the criticism against Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose was resumed for his having given up practice at the Bar to devote himself wholly to Congress activities and now defending prisoners charged with complicity in a terrorist outrage. The learned Chief Justice held that prejudice of a fair trial was not part of the editor's purpose, but if one looked at what the tendency of the words which he wrote was, it was technically a contempt of Court. Having regard to the circumstances he observed:

"In my opinion, much as I regret that these references should have been made, I cannot say that I think it even possible to hold that the prejudice in this case arising out of these articles is of a substantial character. It is theoretical and it is at the highest slight, and I do not think it is necessary for the protection of the tribunal which is engaged upon hearing the case at Chittagong that this Court's power to commit should be invoked."

[19] The circumstances of the present case in our opinion leave no manner of doubt that the action of the opposite parties in publicizing the assertion of title while the matter is sub judice amounts to contempt of Court. The only other question is whether the action of the opposite parties is such that there is real prejudice caused by the assertion of that title and it amounts to a substantial interference with due course of justice. We think that it does. In coming to this conclusion we have also taken into consideration the fact that the Balrampur estate contemplated a challenge to the applicant's action in transferring properties by suits which they subsequently filed.

[20] Thakur Bhopal Singh, we are informed, is an educated man being a M. A, LL. B., and holds the responsible position of Superintendent equivalent to an assistant manager in the estate. Mr. P. N. Asthana is an advocate who has been practising in Lucknow since 1926. He is described in para. 7 of his application as the standing counsel of the Balrampur estate. We should have thought that a man of his education and knowledge of law should have refrained from making an assertion of title on behalf of his client in newspapers while the question of title was sub judice. The suits were filed apparently under his advice as the plaints are signed by him. He also admits that he has been appearing as a counsel for the estate in those cases. Under these circumstances we are not prepared to exonerate either of them from the responsibility for publications. We accordingly hold that Thakur Bhopal Singh and Mr. B. N. Asthana are both guilty of contempt.

[21] Mr. Bahadurji, on behalf of his clients, has offered a verbal apology. In view of these circumstances while convicting the opposite parties of contempt, we think that the ends of justice will be served by giving both of them a warning to desist from such acts in the future. We make no order as to costs of this application.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for wrongful arrest. The facts are as follows. One Gur Charan, the brother of Lalta defendant, was murdered in village Jiamau near Lucknow some time in the night of 31st May/1st June 1941. The murder was not traced. Asharfi Lal, the plaintiff, was arrested by the police in connection with this murder on 26-7-1941. He was in the jail lock-up up to the 1st September and then released on bail. Asharfi Lal filed the suit for recovery of Rs. 500 on account of damages for his wrongful arrest and detention. The heading of the plaint mentioned malicious prosecution also but it was scored out. His case was that Lalta, who is his cousin, made false allegations to the police authorities against him and caused him to be arrested on 26-7-1941, on the charge of murdering Gur Charan. He remained in the jail lock-up till he was released on bail. He also alleged that Lalta filed an application before the City Magistrate on 30-8-1941, maliciously and without any reasonable and probable cause falsely alleging that he (Asharfi Lal) had committed the murder of Gur Charan, that he should not be enlarged on bail and that on account of this wrongful act of Lalta the plaintiff suffered loss which he calculated at Rs. 500 on various counts. It may be mentioned that there being no evidence in the case the police submitted a final report on 12-9-1941, and the case was dropped.

[2] The defence was that Lalta made no false allegations before the police, nor did he ask them to arrest Asharfi Lal. He, however, admitted that he made the application before the City Magistrate alleging that if the plaintiff was enlarged on bail, his (defendant's) life will be in danger. According to him, he made the application in good faith after he had ascertained from reliable source that Asharfi Lal had become hostile to him.

[3] The two material issues framed in the case are:

(1) Did the defendant wrongfully cause the plaintiff to be arrested by making an accusation against him of the murder of Gur Charan deceased to the police authorities as alleged?

(2) Did the defendant cause the plaintiff to be detained in custody after the arrest? If so, did the defendant do so maliciously and without any reasonable and probable cause? If so, its effect?

[4] Upon the first issue, the trial Court found that the plaintiff had failed to establish that the defendant caused his arrest and on the second that the defendant's application proved infructuous as the plaintiff was released on bail and, therefore, the defendant did not cause the plaintiff to be detained in custody after his arrest. As a result of these findings, the suit was dismissed.

[5] The lower appellate Court reversed the decision. That Court found that the defendant was instrumental in getting the plaintiff arrested and locked up in jail. The learned Judge further found that the plaintiff remained in the lock-up for one month and four days and this detention was caused by the defendant. The learned Civil Judge further held that the defendant did not plead lawful justification for his action and he was, therefore, liable for damages to the plaintiff. The suit was decreed for Rs. 290 as damages for wrongful arrest. Rupees 100 were awarded for physical discomfort and mental worry and Rs. 190 as fees of counsel.

[6] It has been contended before me that the two essential ingredients necessary to establish the plaintiff's claim were not proved in the case; in other words, it was not proved that the defendant had, without any reasonable and probable cause, brought about the arrest of the plaintiff and that he was guilty of malice. The case in 3 O. W. N. 499[1] is relied upon. That was, however, a case for malicious prosecution and has no bearing on the present case. The present case is one for damages for wrongful arrest and not for malicious prosecution as the pleadings, the issues and the judgments of both the Courts below make it amply clear.

[7] In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 33, part 4, the subject is dealt with under the heading "Trespass to the Person." Paragraph 58 lays down:

"Trespass to the person is a wrong committed against the personal security or personal liberty of one man by another. There are three varieties of trespass to the person, namely, 'assault, assault and battery, and wrongful imprisonment.' The act complained of must be either intentional or negligent and must be done against the will of the person who sues for the wrong."

Paragraph 67 lays down:

"An action of false imprisonment lies at the suit of a person unlawfully imprisoned against the person who causes the imprisonment... The gist of the action of false imprisonment is the mere imprisonment; the plaintiff need not prove that the imprisonment was unlawful or malicious, but establishes a prima facie case if he proves that he was imprisoned by the defendant; the onus then lies on the defendant of proving a justification."

Paragraph 80 runs thus :

"The defendant in an action of false imprisonment is entitled to succeed if he pleads and proves that the imprisonment was legally justifiable, or that the cause of action in respect of the imprisonment accrued more than four years before the commencement of the action."

[8] The distinction between malicious prosecution and false imprisonment is brought out in (1870) 5 C. P. 534[2] at p. 540, by Willes J. in the following words :

"The distinction between false imprisonment and malicious prosecution is well illustrated by the case where, parties being before a Magistrate, one makes a charge against another, whereupon the Magistrate orders the person charged to be taken into custody and detained until the matter can be investigated. The party making the charge is not liable to an action for false imprisonment, because he does not set a ministerial officer in motion, but a judicial officer. The opinion and judgment of a judicial officer are interposed between the charge and the imprisonment. There is, therefore, at once a line drawn between the end of the imprisonment by the ministerial officer and the commencement of the proceedings before the judicial officer."

[9] Thus the question is, does the defendant set a ministerial or a judicial officer in motion? If the former, he may be liable for false imprisonment, if the latter, for malicious prosecution. The reason for this distinction lies in the fact that a man cannot be sued for false imprisonment unless he himself has acted wrongfully. A Court of justice acts in the exercise of its own discretion and its acts cannot render a person who seeks its protection liable for false imprisonment. He is liable for malicious prosecution if he maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause sets a Court of Justice in motion:

"In false imprisonment the onus lies on the defendant to plead and prove affirmatively the existence of reasonable and probable cause as his justification, whereas in an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must allege and prove affirmatively its non-existence. The reason for this distinction is that any interference with a man's personal liberty is prima facie wrongful, and therefore has to be justified; but any one is prima facie entitled to set the criminal law in motion. Imprisonment is a tort : prosecution is not so in itself.

In an action for false imprisonment it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant was actuated by malice": vide Ratanlal's Law of Torts, Edn. 13, pp. 203 and 204; Fraser's Law of Torts, Edn. 11, 1927, pp. 195 and 196.

[10] The distinction between an action for malicious prosecution and an action for trespass is clearly brought out in the following passage by S. Ramaswamy Iyer in the Law of Torts, Edn. 3, 1944, at p. 330 :

"There are substantial points of distinction between an action for malicious prosecution and one for trespass to person like false imprisonment or trespass to property like seizure of goods. In an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff has to prove absence of reasonable cause. In an action for trespass he has only to prove a trespass and it is for the defendant to prove a good cause or excuse. In the former the plaintiff must prove malice. In the latter he need not, and it is no defence that the dedendant had no malice but made a bona fide mistake. Damage is the gist of the former but not of the latter form of action."

I hold, therefore, that in order to succeed it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause on the part of the defendant in causing his wrongful arrest and detention.

[11] It has also been contended that the finding that the defendant caused the arrest and detention of the plaintiff is erroneous in law. Reliance is placed on a decision of Ameer Ali J. in an original suit in 60 Cal. 955.[3] The facts of that case are by no means identical with the facts of the present case. Indeed it appears that the letter which the defendant in that case wrote to the police was for his personal protection and he had no intention whatever to cause the arrest of the plaintiff. After reviewing a large number of authorities including 52 Cal. 615,[4] the learned Judge observed :

"It will be seen that, in each case where the Court has held a private individual responsible for an arrest by the police, the individual has either 'given the plaintiff into custody', "directed the constable to arrest," or "signed the charge sheet" with the knowledge that the plaintiff would not otherwise be detained."

On the facts of that case he held that the defendant's letter contained no direction to arrest and the police officer who arrested him was not a mere "machine", "instrument" or "engine" of the defendant.

[12] In 52 Cal. 615[4] the police officer arrested the plaintiff, an employee of the defendant Bank, after the authorised agent of the Bank had signed a letter charging the plaintiff with a criminal offence. The arrest was effected as a direct consequence of the letter having been signed. The plaintiff was unanimously acquitted of the offence at the High Court Sessions. It was held that the defendant Bank was liable for damages for false imprisonment.

[13] In (1936) 1 ALL. E. R. 69[5] an agent of the defendants, thinking the plaintiff guilty of larceny, gave him into custody and signed the charge sheet. He stated in evidence : "I did give him in charge." This was held in law to amount to false imprisonment and the plaintiff was allowed damages.

[14] Coming to the facts of the case, the simple issue in the case was whether the defendant caused the arrest of the plaintiff. Two documents on this point furnish a conclusive answer. The former is the application made by the defendant to the Deputy Superintendent of Police. The very first paragraph states that at the request of the applicant the police officer had arrested

Asharfi Lal after great efforts and para. 2 of the letter made to the City Magistrate repeats the admission. A considerable emphasis is laid on the necessity of detaining Asharfi Lal in the lock-up and not releasing him on bail as he and his associates were dangerous people and his life would be in great danger if they were enlarged on bail. Another ground for not releasing them on bail was that they will tamper with evidence. The application wound up with the prayer that Asharfi Lal and his companions should not be released so that he may be able to produce ample evidence to obtain their conviction. In view of these admissions of the defendant and the contents of the two applications there is not the slightest doubt that Lalta caused the police to arrest Asharfi Lal. It is also clear that Lalta had not succeeded in getting Asharfi Lal arrested so long as Hamid Ali, the former officer in charge of the police station, was in Lucknow, but he continued his efforts and eventually succeeded in persuading his successor to arrest him. Balbhaddar Singh, Sub. Inspector who arrested him, could not have made the arrest in his discretion. He knew that his predecessor had not agreed to arrest Asharfi Lal and it is only when Lalta persisted in repeating the charge of murder against Asharfi Lal that he persuaded him to arrest him. Balbhadar Singh was not produced. In view of the admissions contained in Exs. 3 and 4, the burden for proving that the arrest was not caused at the instance of Lalta shifted on to him and it was his duty to produce Balbhaddar Singh, if he was anxious to show that the arrest was not brought about by his action but at the own discretion of the police officer. There is also the evidence of Behari (P. W. 6), which was accepted by the lower appellate Court, to the effect that Lalta told the Deputy Superintendent of Police in his presence that a clue to the mystery of murder could be found if Asharfi Lal and his associates were arrested. In view of this clear evidence it cannot be said that Balbhaddar Singh did not act as the agent or the instrument of the defendant. I agree with the finding of the lower appellate Court that the defendant caused the arrest of the plaintiff, that he had no justification for doing so and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for wrongful arrest.

[15] It was also contended that the counsel's fees allowed by the lower appellate Court are excessive. I see no force in this contention. One senior counsel was paid his consulting fee which is only Rs. 75. The other counsel represented him before the police and the City Magistrate and was paid Rs. 110 for his fees. I do not think that the fees are excessive.

[16] The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. As the appeal has been dismissed, stay order dated 5-2-1943, passed on Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 1020 of 1942 is hereby vacated.

Judgment. — Gargi Din, plaintiff-appellant, holds a considerable area of tenancy land at a rental of Rs. 436-11-0 per annum from the Kapurthala estate in village Bakaina, district Bahraich. Included in this land is plot No. 1309/1. It appears that, following floods in the year 1938, when the whole abadi of village Pachdeori was destroyed, the defendant, who was a resident of Pachdeori, was allowed by the Kapurthala estate to build a house on a part of plot No. 1309/1, which appears to have been lying vacant. The defendant built his house and moved into it and began living in it sometime in 1938 to 1939.

[2] On 25-1-1941, Gargi Din instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen against Bilas, alleging that :

(1) he was the tenant of the plot in suit;

(2) Bilas had, without any right, constructed a house on a portion of plot No. 1309/1 and had thus dispossessed the plaintiff; and

(3) damage amounting to Rs. 20 had been caused by this action to the plaintiff.

He accordingly claimed :—

(a) a decree for possession over the land in suit;

(b) a permanent injunction directing the defendant to remove the coustructions and not to interfere with the plaintiff's possession; and

(c) damages amounting to Rs. 20 as well as costs of the suit.

[3] The Kapurthala estate was no party to this suit and Bilas, the sole defendant, denied the plaintiff's tenancy and pleaded :

(a) That he had obtained the land from the landlord for construction of his house and had built his house more than 2½ years before the filing of the suit.

(b) That, even if the plaintiff was ever a tenant of the land in suit, he had lost his tenancy rights.

(c) That, if the plaintiff had any remedy it was against the Kapurthala estate which was a necessary party, and

(d) That the civil Court had no jurisdiction.

[4] The Munsif framed an issue on tenancy right and, under the provisions of S. 288, U. P, Tenancy Act, he referred it to the revenue Court for a finding. The revenue Court found that, though the plaintiff had been a tenant of the land in suit, he had lost his tenancy by reason of the fact that he had been dispossessed more than one year before the suit and consequently his claim for restoration of possession was barred by S. 129, Oudh Rent Act, which was in force at the time of his dispossession. On receipt of this finding, the Munsif framed two more issues, one as to damages and the other as to relief. It was agreed between the parties that the damages should be taken to be Rs. 10, but as a result of the finding of the revenue Court, the suit was dismissed.

[5] The plaintiff appealed and the Civil Judge of Bahraich upheld the decree of the trial Court. The trial Court had failed to frame an issue on the question of jurisdiction is spite of the plea having been taken by the defendant. The appellate Court felt it necessary to decide this point and held that the civil Court had jurisdiction. This finding as to jurisdiction is challenged by the defendant-respondent.

[6] The suit was instituted at a time when the U. P. Tenancy Act (17 [XVII] of 1939) was in force. The jurisdiction of rent Courts and the procedure to be followed must, therefore, be determined in accordance with the provisions of that Act since laws introducing a change in procedure have immediate effect : whatever may have been the position under the Oudh Rent Act we are no longer concerned with it because S. 242, U. P. Tenancy Act, clearly provides that "no Court other than a revenue Court shall .... take cognizance of any" suit of the nature specified in Sch. 4 to the Act. Among the suits so specified are suits under S. 183: vide Group B, item 19. Thus, if the present suit comes within the scope of S. 183, Tenancy Act, the civil Court will have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. That section covers the case of a suit not only against the landlord but also against "any person admitted to or allowed to retain possession of the holding by such land-holder, or person whether as tenant or otherwise."

[7] In the present case the defendant expressly pleaded, and the evidence clearly establishes that the defendant had been allowed to take possession of the land by the landholder. Thus the case was exclusively triable by the revenue Court and the civil Court had no jurisdiction. One of the grounds given by the learned Civil Judge for rejecting the plea of want of jurisdiction is that jurisdiction is determined according to averments in the plaint. This is, however, only prima facie and, if facts are brought to Court's notice which would indicate that a different Court has jurisdiction, it is bound to enquire into them : vide 5 O. W. N. 1117[1] and also Chitaley's Commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure, Vol. I, p. 95, Edn. 4, wherein the law is collected. In the present case it has been found by both the Courts below that the defendant had been allowed by the landlord to obtain possession. Thus the civil Court had no jurisdiction and the plaint should have been returned for presentation to the proper Court.

[8] The result is that the appeal is allowed and the judgment and decrees of both the Courts below are set aside. The case is sent back to the Court of the Munsif, Kaisarganj, Bahraich, with directions that he shall return the plaint under the provisions of O. 7, R. 10, Civil P. C., for presentation to the proper Court. In the circumstances the order of the lower appellate Court as to costs shall stand and the parties shall bear their own costs of this appeal.

Second Rent Appeal No. 33 of 1942, Decided on 24th September 1947, against order of Addl. Civil Judge, Sitapur, D/- 21st March 1942.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 101 — Ejectment suit —Question of title—Burden of proof—Weakness in defendant's case cannot be taken advantage of.

In a suit for ejectment, it is upon the plaintiff to make out his title by definite evidence which is not open to any reasonable doubt. He cannot succeed merely by showing a semblance of title or by adducing evidence which would support the case only so far as to establish it to some slight degree of probability. He cannot rely on the weakness of the defendant's title, but must succeed on the strength of his own. [Para 8]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 83 — Settlement maps are not documents of title.

The settlement maps, however important they may be, and whatever be their evidentiary value, cannot take the place of documents of title. [Para 8]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Inferences drawn from documents not being documents of title, in deciding question whether particular area falls within certain village — Interference in second appeal.

Even though the settlement maps which are not documents of title, prepared at the subsequent settlement supersede those prepared at the previous settlement, it is open to the Court to take them all into consideration as historical material in considering whether a particular field falls within a particular village. It is further entitled to draw inferences from all these documents and to form its conclusion on the basis of such inferences. Even if the lower Courts commit an error in drawing such inferences, that would not justify interference with the conclusion arrived at by them in second appeal. Whether a certain field is included within the boundaries of one village or another village is a question of fact. High Court has no jurisdiction to reverse the finding of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court, however erroneous, unless they are vitiated by some error of law. Where the question to be decided is one of fact, it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which were not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundation of rights, but were really historical material, have to be construed for the purpose of deciding the question : 17 A. Judgment.—This rent appeal arises out of a suit brought by the present appellant under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, for possession of plot of land in village Dulamau, which defendant-respondent 1 was cultivating without the plaintiff's consent and rent. The suit was dismissed by both the Courts below, hence this appeal.

[2] The material facts lie within a short compass : Villages Dulamau and Bhagat Sikror in tahsil Biswan of Sitapur District, lie adjacent to each other. The suit in the trial Court was brought on the allegation that the defendant had taken possession of Plot No. 479 (1·2 acres) two years before the institution of the suit and was cultivating the same without the plaintiff's consent. The plaintiffs prayed for rent for the period in suit and for the defendant's ejectment. The defendant pleaded that the land in suit did not belong to Dulamau but was part of village Bhagat Sikror, that it had been let out to him by Mallanpur estate to which Bhagat Sikror appertained and that he had been paying rent to the said estate. As the management of the Mallanpur estate had been assumed by the Court of Wards, it was also impleaded as a defendant. The Court of Wards supported the defence put forward on behalf of defendant 1.

[3] After the passing of the U. P. Tenancy Act the suit was treated as one under S. 180 of that Act. As a question of proprietary title was raised, an issue was framed on that point and referred to the civil Court.

[4] The learned Munsif of Biswan, before whom the matter came up for consideration, appointed a commissioner to survey the locality, prepare a plan and report whether the land in dispute lay in Dulamau or Bhagat Sikror. The commissioner prepared a plan and filed his report. Having considered the same and the oral evidence which was led before him, the Munsif came to the conclusion that the land in suit was not proved to belong to Dulamau but appertained to village Bhagat Sikror. On receipt of this finding the revenue Court dismissed the suit. An appeal preferred to the District Judge of Sitapur, which was disposed of by the Additional Civil Judge in that district, was unsuccessful. The present appeal is preferred against that decision.

[5] It was contended by the learned counsel for the respondent that the appeal was concluded by a finding of fact with which this Court had no jurisdiction to interfere in second appeal. Having given the matter my careful consideration, I am of opinion that this objection must prevail. The suit was decided by both the Courts below mainly on a consideration of the report submitted by the commissioner, to which no objection was taken by either party, and the documents produced before them. The commissioner had before him the maps prepared at all the four settlements, which had taken place from time to time in tahsil Biswan, wherein Dulamau and Bhagat Sikror lie. It appears from his report that the commissioner experienced considerable difficulty in ascertaining any fixed point in these villages from which he could start his survey. He took the boundary pillars (sihadda) between these two villages and the boundary pillar of Bahraich district as one fixed point, and the sihadda between villages Dulamau, Bhagat Sikror and Hariharpur as the second fixed point. He prepared three plans locating the position of the land in dispute on the basis of the maps of the last three settlements. The sketches numbered 1, 2 and 3 on the plan accompanying the report show the situation of the disputed land with reference to the three said maps: (1) that of 1936-37; (2) that of 1928-29; and (3) the third which is general known as the darmiani settlement. According to all these sketches part of the land lies in village Dulamau and the rest in village Bhagat Sikror. When the commissioner attempted to locate the position of this land with reference to the map of the first regular settlement, he was faced with another difficulty. He noticed that the present sihaddas between villages Dulamau, Bhagat Sikror and Hariharpur did not occupy the same position as appeared from the map of the first regular settlement. He could not ascertain definitely which of the sihaddas had changed their positions. He drew another figure, which is marked No. 4 on the plan accompanying his report, on the assumption that the west boundary pillar was in its old place and that the second boundary pillar did not occupy its old position. The sketch drawn on this assumption showed that no portion of the disputed land lay in village Dulamau. The commissioner, however, as is clear from his report, was very doubtful as to the accuracy of the figure drawn by him on the material furnished by the map of the first settlement.

[6] The plaintiff did not produce any document of title, nor did he produce the khasra of the entire village Dulamau which could have shown the area that was settled with him at the last settlement, and enabled the Court to infer, after a survey of the locality, that the land in dispute formed part of that area. Though settlement maps are official records entitled to weight, they are, it was frankly conceded by Mr. Niamatullah, learned counsel for the appellant, not documents of title. Copies of certain fards-mutabiqat which gave the numbers of different plots at one settlement, as also the corresponding numbers of those plots in the previous settlement, were produced; but it was seen that they were not at all helpful as they were obviously wrong. Accordingly there was no material before the Courts below, except the report of the commissioner, and the plan prepared by him, giving his conclusions as arrived at by reference to the map prepared at the four settlements. It was impossible to reconcile them. The Courts below had taken the view that though it would appear according to the maps of the last three settlements that part of the land in dispute lay within the boundary of village Dulamau as found by the commissioner, it was not clear that this was so according to the map of the first settlement. On the other hand, it appeared that probably the whole of this land belonged to village Bhagat Sikror at the time of the first regular settlement.

[7] In fairness to the commissioner, it must be conceded that he was doubtful if this conclusion was definitely borne out by the evidence furnished by the map of the first settlement. The Courts below, it would thus appear, were left in doubt. In fact they attached considerable importance to the map of the first regular settlement and were inclined to be of opinion that the disputed land really belonged to village Bhagat Sikror. This being a suit in ejectment, the plaintiff having failed to satisfy the Court as to the truth of his claim, the suit was dismissed.

[8] It was strenuously argued by the learned counsel for the appellant that though the settlement maps were not documents of title, they were very important documents and formed the basis of the record of rights which were documents of title, and accordingly considerable weight should be attached to them. The proposition as stated in this bald form is unexceptionable, but we cannot lose sight of the fact that the settlement maps, however important they may be, and whatever be their evidentiary value, cannot take the place of documents of title. In a suit for ejectment, it is upon the plaintiff to make out his title by definite evidence which is not open to any reasonable doubt. He cannot succeed merely by showing a semblance of title or by adducing evidence which would support the case only so far as to establish it to some slight degree of probability. He cannot rely on the weakness of the defendant's title, but must succeed on the strength of his own.

[9] Looking at the question from this point of view, the Courts below, when they were not satisfied with the proof adduced by the plaintiff, were justified in throwing out his claim.

[10] It was argued by the learned counsel that the Courts below had committed an error of law in so far that they attached undue importance to the map of the first settlement. Under S. 52, Land Revenue Act, when any local area is under record operations, the Record Officer is required to prepare for each village therein a map and field-book which shall thereafter be maintained by the Collector (as provided by S. 28), instead of the map and field-book previously existing. The learned counsel contended that the map prepared at each succeeding settlement superseded the map of the previous settlement and accordingly the Courts below should not have allowed themselves to be influenced by the map prepared at the first regular settlement. This argument is not without force, but herein lies the difficulty arising out of the distinction between a document of title and other documents. Settlement maps not being documents of title, even though maps prepared at the subsequent settlement supersede those prepared at the previous settlement, it was open to the Courts below to take all these documents into consideration. They were further entitled to draw inferences from all these documents and to form their conclusion on the basis of such inferences. Even if they committed an error in drawing such inferences, that would not justify interference with the conclusion arrived at by them in second appeal. Whether a certain field is included within the boundaries of one village or another village is a question of fact. Under S. 100, Civil P. C., a High Court has no jurisdiction to reverse the findings of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court, however erroneous, unless they are vitiated by some error of law. It was held in 57 I. A. 86[1] at p. 92 that where the question to be decided is one of fact, it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which were not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundation of rights, but were really historical material, have to be construed for the purpose of deciding the question. In A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 187[2] the question which the Judicial Committee had to decide was the date of the origin of an under-tenure. The first appellate Court fixed the date from the contents of some documents. It was held that the question being one of fact, could not be interfered with in appeal. In 19 W. R. 222,[3] it was held by the Privy Council that a second appeal would not lie because some portion of the evidence might be contained in a document or documents and the first appellate Court had made a mistake as to its meaning. In the case before me the lower Courts have considered the entire material placed before them, and the commissioner's report which was based on the maps prepared at the four settlements in Biswan tahsil. Both the Courts below have concurrently come to the finding that the land in dispute is not proved to belong to village Dulamau. Even if they drew any inferences from these settlement maps and the fards-mutabiqat produced before them with which I am not prepared to agree, sitting in second appeal I have no jurisdiction to interfere with their finding based on such inferences. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff came to Court on the allegation that he is the owner of village Lalpur included in village Shankarpur, pargana Mahmudabad and the defendant is a riyaya in the village. According to him, the defendant had made a pucca well on the disputed land in February 1939 without his permission and despite the opposition by the plaintiff's servants. He sued for the recovery of possession by demolition of the pucca well and Rs. 25 as damages.

[2] The defence was that the defendant and his ancestors had been in possession of the land in suit as sahan darwaza, that there was a chabutra used for worshipping Mahadeoji and a nim tree and that formerly the well was kachcha and was made pucca without any objection from the plaintiff. An application for amendment of the pleadings was made on behalf of the defendant whereby he further pleaded that the land was appurtenant to the defendant's house. He explained it to mean that the land is very necessary for the defendant's use.

[3] A commissioner appointed by the Court prepared a plan of the disputed land with reference to the khasra abadi of the first settlement. This shows that Plot No. 43 contained the house of Bakhtawar Singh, the great grandfather of the defendant; that Plot No. 69, which is to the east of it, was his sahan darwaza; that Plot No. 70 to the east of 69 was a chabutra with a nim tree and to the east of this plot is Plot No. 60, upon which admittedly the pucca well stands.

[4] The issue framed was :

"Does the well in suit stand on the sahan darwaza or the appurtenant land of the defendant's house? If so, its effect?"

[5] Upon this issue the trial Court held that the well in suit does not stand on the sahan darwaza or the appurtenant land of the defendant's house. The trial Court relying upon a decision in 1938 O. W. N. 285[1] which was reversed in 1942 O. W. N. 113,[2] did not decree the demolition of the well but awarded Rs. 30 to the plaintiff as compensation.

[6] The lower appellate Court has reversed the decree. That Court recorded the finding that Plot No. 60 was in the possession of the defendant as sahan darwaza. He further held that the defendant had been in possession of the plot in question as appurtenant to his house for a long time. Lastly he held that the well in suit had been built at the site of an old kachcha well and was made pucca by the defendant because it used to get chocked in every rainy season. According to the lower appellate Court, the construction of the pucca well was not a new encroachment and could not give any right of action to the plaintiff. The suit was dismissed as a result of these findings.

[7] The findings that the defendant had been using the plot as his sahan darwaza or as appurtenant to his house for a long time are findings of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. The first finding, however, depends upon the interpretation of the settlement khasra which does involve a question of law : see 1936 O.W.N. 153.[3] That finding depends upon the construction of certain entries in Ex. A-2, the khasra of the first settlement. It shows that No. 43 is the house of Bakhtawar Singh, No. 60 is shown as uftada main darakht nim qabza Bakhtawar Singh, No. 69 is shown as sahan darwaza of Bakhtawar Singh, No. 70 chabutra Bakhtawar Singh and a nim tree and 71 is shown as rasta. Now a careful examination of the map prepared by the Commissioner, in accordance with these entries, shows that the present position of these plots is that not only Plot No. 43 but Plot No. 69 which was the original sahan darwaza of Bakhtawar Singh has been built upon. This is obviously an unauthorised use of the sahan darwaza, which was acquiesced in by the plaintiff and no suit for demolition was brought in respect thereof. Plot No. 70, which was the chabutra, is also partly built upon so that the defendant has been from time to time extending his possession to the east of his house to land on the pretext of using it as sahan darwaza so much so that Plot No. 60, open parti land, came to be used by the defendant either as sahan darwaza or as land appurtenant to his house. The entry against Plot No. 60, in my opinion, was rightly interpreted by the trial Court as meaning that the words "qabza Bakhtawar Singh" relate to the nim tree only and not the entire Plot No. 60, the reason being that Bakhtawar Singh was already in possession of Plots Nos. 67, 68, 69 and 70 as his sahan darwaza and appurtenances and if Plot No. 60 was intended to be sahan darwaza of Bakhtawar Singh, it would have been shown as such and not as uftada land. I am, therefore, not prepared to hold upon the khasra entry that Plot No. 60 was used as sahan darwaza by the defendant. The first finding of the lower appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside as being vitiated by an erroneous interpretation of the khasra entry.

[8] The reversal of this finding, however, has no effect upon the plaintiff's case, as the second finding must stand undisturbed. The only thing that has been urged on behalf of the appellant is that the defendant's pleader in his pleadings before the Court merely introduced the amendment that the plot was appurtenant or necessary to his house but he nowhere stated that he had been in possession of the plot for the requisite period of 12 years, nor gave any evidence to show his possession for over 12 years. The plaintiff's possession, it is argued, must be presumed to exist over all parti land in view of 1940 O. W. N. 990.[4] This contention, however, is not tenable in view of the clear finding of the lower appellate Court based as it is on admissible evidence that the defendant has been in possession of Plot No. 60 as appurtenant to his house for a very long time. The finding, in my opinion, is not open to a reconsideration in second appeal. Such being the case, the only other question which remains to be decided is whether the conversion of a kachcha well into a pucca well furnishes any cause of action to the plaintiff to sue for demolition of the well. It was held as long ago as 1917 by Lindsay J. C. in 4 O. L. J. 454[5] that a riyaya is competent to sink a well without the permission of his landlord on such portion of the abadi land as has been used by him as an appurtenance to his dwelling house. The well constructed in this case was a pucca well without the permission of the zamindar. This view was followed by Kanhaiya Lal J. C. in 6 O.L.J. 281.[6] Both these cases were followed by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 47 ALL. 511.

[9] I hold, therefore, that the decree of the lower appellate Court is correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R 19 — Sufficient cause.

The appellant had engaged two counsel one of whom was in charge of the appeal and its file but on his appointment as Judge returned the file to the appellant. Notice of hearing was sent to the other counsel who intimated it by letter addressed to the agent of the appellant. The counsel for the appellant who had not been paid his fees, had left for Agra for some other engagement without making any arrangement for the representation of the appellant on the date of hearing. The appellant himself did not even care to pay his fees or to send the file of the appeal to the counsel to enable him to prepare the case and appear at the hearing. Nor did he take any steps for prosecution of his appeal. The appeal was consequently dismissed for default. On application for restoration of the appeal:

Held, that there was no sufficient cause within the meaning of O. 41, R. 19 as the non-appearance of the appellant at the hearing was due to his own negligence. [Para 4]

Order. — This is an application under O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C., for restoration of an appeal which was dismissed for default.

[2] The material facts lie within a short compass: In the appeal to which this application relates, the appellant Raja Bajrang Bahadur Singh, taluqdar of Gangwal estate, was represented by two counsel, Mr. M. H. Kidwai, Bar-at-law and Mr. Mohammad Yaqub Siddiqi, Advocate. Both counsel had signed the memorandum of the grounds of appeal. The appeal was fixed for hearing on 22nd August 1946. As no one appeared on behalf of the appellant when the case was called, the appeal was dismissed. The present application was made on 11th September 1946 for setting aside the order of dismissal for default and restoration of the appeal.

[3] It appears from the averments made in the application that before the date of hearing of the appeal, one of the appellant's counsel, Mr. M. H. Kidwai, was appointed a Judge of this Court. Accordingly, as he was in charge of the case, on his elevation to the Bench, he returned the file to the appellant because he could no longer appear as counsel. Notice of the date of hearing was in the circumstances issued by the office to the other counsel for the appellant Mr. Mohammad Yaqub Siddiqi. It is stated in the application that Mr. Siddiqi "was paid no fee." On receipt of notice of the date of hearing Mr. Siddiqi, as appears from an affidavit filed by him along with the application, sent by post a letter addressed to Sri Ram, the general agent of Raja Bajrang Bahadur Singh, appellant, informing him of the date of the appeal. We know, however, from an affidavit filed by Bharat Singh, another general agent of the appellant, that Sri Ram was dead long before the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal. Paragraph 6 of the affidavit filed by Mr. Siddiqi reads thus: "That due to postal strike, 'probably' the letter did not reach Sri Ram's house" We know further from this affidavit that no one on behalf of the appellant went to Mr. Siddiqi in connection with the appeal, and the latter left for Agra on 19th August 1946, where he had to attend to another engagement, and that he did not return to Lucknow till 22nd August 1946 the date fixed for hearing, and accordingly as no one appeared when the appeal was called, it was dismissed for default

[4] On the facts above stated, we are clearly of opinion that no sufficient cause, which prevented the appellant from appearing when the appeal was called, has been made out. Raja Bajrang Bahadur Singh had, as appears from the vakalatnama executed by him, engaged two counsel, Mr. M. H Kidwai and Mr. Mohammad Yaqub Siddiqi. He had paid no fee, as we gather from Mr. Siddiqi's affidavit, to the second counsel. It was the first counsel who was in charge of the appeal. When Mr. Kidwai accepted the appointment as a Judge of this Court, he naturally returned the file to the client. Raja Bajrang Bahadur Singh apparently did not take any steps for the prosecution of the appeal after that. He must be taken to have known that the notice of the date of hearing of the appeal would in the normal course be sent to Mr. Siddiqi. Mr. Kidwai had returned the file of the case to the Raja. The Raja had not paid any fee to Mr. Siddiqi. He did not even care to send the file to Mr. Siddiqi to enable him to prepare the case and appear at the hearing. Mr. Siddiqi, as stated in his affidavit, sent a letter addressed to the Raja's general agent, Sri Ram who was in charge of the appeal. We do not know what happened to this letter. It is stated, however, that Sri Ram was dead long before the date fixed for hearing of the appeal. The affidavit filed by Mr. Siddiqi only makes a guess that "probably the letter did not reach Sri Ram's house." The Raja had got back the file from Mr. Kidwai. The mukhtiar who was in charge of the appeal was dead. We do not know if any steps were taken to entrust the prosecution of the appeal to another mukhtiar. It will thus be seen that the non-appearance of the appellant at the hearing was due to his own negligence in taking no steps for the prosecution of his case. His counsel Mr. Siddiqi, though he had received notice of the appeal left for Agra on 19th August 1946 without making any arrangement for the representation of the appellant on the date of hearing. He did not return till 22nd August, with the result that the appeal was dismissed. He contended himself with merely posting a letter addressed to the Raja's general agent, Sri Ram who, as we know from Bharat Singh's affidavit, was dead long ago. There is nothing before us to show that this letter was not delivered either at Sri Ram's house or at the Raja's office as it was addressed to his mukhtiar. We find no justification for the guess made by Mr. Siddiqi that "probably the letter did not reach Sri Ram's house." Averments like these carry no weight merely because they are contained in counsel's affidavit. The application is accordingly dismissed with costs.

[5] Before taking leave of this case we should like to say a few words about Mr. Siddiqi's conduct in this matter. Apart from the duty which a counsel owes to his client, he owes an obligation to the Court also. This is well recognised, and happily counsel in general show by their conduct that they are alive to this duty. We are not oblivious of the fact that in this case Mr. Siddiqi had received no fee from the appellant. The client had not given him the file which was returned by Mr. Kidwai on his elevation to the Bench. Nothing was heard by him from his client in reply to the letter which he had posted to the address of the Raja's general agent, Sri Ram. Still as he accepted the vakalatnama and signed the memorandum of the grounds of appeal it was in our opinion up to him that before leaving for Agra he ought to have approached this Court and explained the circumstances which would prevent him from being present at the hearing. His failure to do so has made his conduct in this matter open to criticism.

Baldeo Sah — Mortgagor — Applicant v. Mt. Ram Dulari and others — Mortgagees— Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 90 of 1943, Decided on 25th August 1947, from order of Civil Judge, Hardoi, D/- 11th February 1943.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), Ss. 2 (10) (a) and 12—U. P. Debt Redemption Act (13 of 1940), Ss. 2 and 9 (4) — Fourth part of mortgage debt transferred—Unity of debt, if broken up — On accounting, three-fourth of debt found to be wiped off — Balance found in hands of mortgagee, if can be applied towards satisfaction of one-fourth part transferred.

Where the liability for payment of a fourth share of a mortgage debt constituting a "loan" was under a contract transferred to another person, that portion of the debt ceases to be a loan within the meaning of the Agriculturists' Relief Act. This would not, however, break up the essential unity of the debt as between the mortgagor and the mortgagees If any portion of the mortgage money is not paid, the entire property is still liable to be sold for satisfaction thereof. In these circumstances though the benefit of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act cannot be claimed with respect of a portion of the debt, the accounting in a suit for redemption should be done as in ordinary mortgage cases. The transfer of a part of debt constitutes a notional splitting up of the debt, but it cannot be said that for the purposes of accounting between the mortgagees, the debt should be treated as two debts, distinct and independent of each other. If the debt be treated as one, there is no reason why the surplus, which was left over in the hands of the mortgagees after three-fourths of the loan was found, on accounting to have been satisfied, should not be applied towards the satisfaction of the remaining one-fourth. It is not a case in which the mortgagor having paid something to the mortgagee wants a refund of an amount paid in excess of what was due within the meaning of S. 9 (4), Debt Redemption Act. Order.—This application under S. 115, Civil P. C., arises out of an application for redemption made under S. 12, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act.

[2] In order to bring into clear relief the points in controversy, it is necessary to state a few facts. A 7 biswansis zamindari share in thok Ram Singh, village Amrauli, Pergana Sarah Shumali, Hardoi district, was owned by three persons. Two of them, Kunwar Sah and his brother Gaya Dut, owned one half of this property. The remaining half belonged to Gajodhar Sah. On 5th September 1900, Kunwar Sah and Gajodhar Sah mortgaged this property with three persons, Bishambhar Nath, Bisheshwar

Nath and Parganni Lal for a consideration of Rs. 700. It may be mentioned that the zamindari share, which formed the security for this mortgage, was already subject to a previous mortgage in favour of one Raghubar Dayal. By the mortgage of 1900, Kunwar Sah and Gajodhar Sah stipulated that the mortgagee should advance them Rs. 400 in cash which was to carry interest at 18 per cent. per annum. It was further stipulated that in 1907, when the mortgage in favour of Raghubar Dayal could be redeemed, the mortgagee should pay Rs. 300 to him, redeem the mortgage, take possession of the property and remain in possession for 40 years. From 1907 the transaction was to be in the nature of a usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagee advanced Rs. 400 on 5th September 1900, and in July 1907, redeemed Raghubar Dayal's mortgage and obtained possession of the mortgaged property. On 15th May 1919, Kunwar Sah and Gaya Dut made a gift of their half share in the mortgaged property to the present applicant Baldeo Sah. On 9th October 1919, Baldeo Sah acquired by purchase from one of the two sons of Gajodhar Sah (who was dead and was succeeded by his sons Babu Ram and Gulzari Lal) a transfer of his interest in this zamindari share. The sale deed executed by Gulzari Lal, son of Gajodhar Sah, in favour of Baldeo Sah stipulated that his liability for the mortgage debt which was specified in the deed to be Rs. 300 should be discharged by the purchaser. It will thus be seen that Baldeo Sah had under the deed of gift of 15th May 1919, and the deed of sale of 9th October 1919, become the owner of three-fourths share in the mortgaged property. The remaining one-fourth share was owned by Babu Ram, one of the two sons of Gajodhar. On 17th December 1941, Baldeo Sah and Babu Ram jointly applied for redemption of the mortgage under S. 12, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act. They claimed the benefit of the Agriculturists' Relief Act as well as the Debt Redemption Act.

[3] It was among other pleas urged in defence that Baldeo Sah being a transferee only of three-fourths share in the property was not entitled to the benefit of the Debt Redemption Act.

[4] The trial Court held that inasmuch as one half-share of the property was transferred to Baldeo Sah by a deed of gift, it did not debar him from claiming the benefit of that Act. Babu Ram, being the son of one of the original mortgagors, was of course entitled to claim the benefit of the Debt Redemption Act. It further held that the benefit of that Act could not be claimed in respect of a fourth share of the loan corresponding to that share of the property which was acquired by Baldeo Sah under the deed of sale from Gulzari Lal. The Court went into accounts and after considering all the material before it came to the conclusion that three-fourths of the debt was paid off by 31st July 1934 and out of the usufruct of three-fourths share of the property a sum of Rs. 400 remained in the hands of the mortgagees as surplus. This sum was applied towards the liquidation of the balance of the debt, that is, the remaining one-fourth. As a result the entire debt was held to have been satisfied, and redemption was allowed by the trial Court without payment of any money to the mortgagees. Dissatisfied with this decision, the mortgagees preferred an appeal which was disposed of by the learned Civil Judge of Hardoi. It was contended before him that the sum of Rs. 400 which was left over in the hands of the mortgagees after satisfaction of three-fourths of the debt in respect of which the benefit of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act could be claimed, could not be applied to wipe off the remaining one-fourth of the mortgage debt. This contention was accepted by the learned Civil Judge, and he made out a fresh account of the money payable to the mortgagees. He gave the debtor the benefit of the Agriculturists' Relief Act as regards this portion of the debt, and found, that a sum of Rs. 289 was still due to the mortgagees on 11th February 1943. He allowed redemption on payment of this sum to the mortgagees within three months. The decree of the trial Court was varied accordingly. Dissatisfied with this decision the present revision application was filed.

[5] Having heard the learned counsel for the parties I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Civil Judge of Hardoi cannot be upheld. He disposed of the contention that was put before him in two sentences. He observed:

"It was, however, contended that this sum (Rs. 400) could not be taken to wipe out the remaining one-fourth share of the mortgage money because so far as the share of Gulzari was concerned, the provisions of Debt Redemption Act did not apply. The argument is most plausible and I have no doubt that the trial Court erred in setting off the excess sum in liquidating the amount that was due in respect of the one-fourth share of the mortgage money."

This was a case for redemption initiated by an application under S. 12, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act. Under the provisions of that Act, an account was to be taken between mortgagor and the mortgagees. With respect to three-fourths of the debt the mortgagor was held entitled to the benefit of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act, but not with regard to the remaining one-fourth of the debt. This necessitated a notional splitting up of the debt, but it cannot be said with any good reason that for the purposes of accounting between the mortgagor and the mortgagees, the debt should be treated as two debts, distinct and independent of each other. If the debt be treated as one, there is no reason why the surplus, which was left over in the hands of the mortgagees after three-fourths of the loan was satisfied, should not be applied towards the satisfaction of the remaining one-fourth. I am not oblivious of the provisions of S. 9 (4), U. P. Debt Redemption Act, which lays down that nothing in that section shall entitle a debtor to a refund of any sum already paid by him. This, however, does not touch the case before us. This was a case in which there was an advance constituting a "loan" within the meaning of that expression as used in the U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act as well as in the Debt Redemption Act at its inception. Subsequently, however, as the liability for payment of a fourth share of the debt was under a contract transferred to another person, that portion of the debt ceased to be a loan within the meaning of the Agriculturists' Relief Act. This would not, however, break up the essential unity of the debt as between the mortgagor and the mortgagees. It is clear that if any portion of the mortgage money was not paid, the entire property was still liable to be sold for satisfaction thereof. In these circumstances, I am clear that even though the benefit of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act could not be claimed with respect of a portion of the debt, the accounting in a suit for redemption should be done as in ordinary mortgage cases. It is not a case in which the mortgagor having paid something to the mortgagee wants a refund of an amount paid in excess of what was due.

[6] The result therefore is that the revision application is allowed. The decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the trial Court restored. The applicant shall get his costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court, from respondents 1 to 3.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11, Expln. 4 — Defence which ought to have been taken in previous suit not taken—Suit for arrears of maintenance charged on property—Partial liability denied—Res judicata.

Under a will, two villages A and G were charged with maintenance in favour of M and others at Rs. 15 per month. M sued the transferees of the villages in the Court of Munsif, the claim being below Rs. 2000, for the recovery of the arrears of maintenance from both the villages. In that suit it was decided finally that village G was not liable for the charge as it was transferred without notice of charge and the entire claim was decreed against village A. Subsequently, M brought another suit to recover arrears of maintenance in the Court of the Civil Judge, as the amount claimed was over Rs. 2000, claiming the entire amount from the village A. The defendants contended that since in the previous suit village G was held not liable for the charge, village A was liable only to a proportionate share of the charge. The question was whether the defendants were barred by res judicata from denying their liability for the whole claim :

Held, that the defence raised in the subsequent suit ought to have been raised in the previous suit as it would have made it necessary to determine the extent of the rights of the plaintiff to claim maintenance from the defendants. It was a defence which ought, in the circumstances of the case, to have been taken and as it was not taken, it should be deemed to have been taken and decided against the defendants The defence in the subsequent suit therefore was barred by S. 11, Expln. 4: 32 A. The mere fact that the previous suit was filed before the Munsif and the subsequent one before the Civil Judge was not material and S. 11 applied to such a case : 30 A. I. R 1943 Oudh 338 (F. B.), Foll. [Para 14]

Judgment. — In these three appeals the material facts are practically the same and by the order of the Court they have been connected and are being disposed of together.

[2] Appeal No. 10 of 1946. — This is an appeal under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act against the judgment and decree of a learned Single Judge (Kidwai J.) of this Court, dated 24-9-1946, in a suit, instituted by Mt. Masuda Begam for recovery of Rs. 1635 as principal and Rs. 443-3-6 as interest as arrears of maintenance at Rs. 15 per month for the period from 1-8-1929 to 31-8-1938 from village Aumau on which the said maintenance was alleged to be a charge. Full facts of the case are given in the judgment of the learned Single Judge of this Court but the relevant facts are briefly as follows:—Muhammad Ahmad Khan was taluqdar of Kasmandi Khurd in the Lucknow District. He executed a will in 1898 and several codicils to that will by virtue of which he transferred eight annas share in village Gahdeo and the full sixteen annas share in village Aumau to his three sons, Khwaja Ahmad Khan, Muhammad Zaman Khan and Muhammad Saeed Khan, from his fourth wife, Mt. Imtiazi Begam. It was also provided in the will that their three full sisters, Mt. Masuda Begam (plaintiff in the present suit), Mt. Ahmad Jahan Begam (appellant in Second Civil Appeals Nos. 90 and 91 of 1944) and Mt. Asia Begam shall get Rs. 15 per month each from the profits of these two villages. The brothers by various transactions transferred their eight annas share in village Gahdeo to Majlis Rai and Lala Reghubar Dayal and by other transfers and court-sales the entire property in village Aumau passed to Lal Raghubar Dayal and later to his sons, B. Brij Gopal etc., defendants-appellants in the present appeal. The transfer of village Gahdeo took place without notice of charge to the transferees but that of village Aumau took place with notice of charge.

[3] In 1925, Mt. Masuda Begam filed a suit in the Court of Munsif, South Lucknow (Suit No. 111/26 of 1925) for recovery of arrears of maintenance at Rs. 15 per month from both the villages. All her brothers and their transferees were parties to the litigation. It was finally decided in that suit that village Gahdeo was not liable at all for the charge of maintenance but village Aumau was, and the entire claim for arrears of maintenance was decreed against village Aumau. Mt. Masuda Begam filed another suit for recovery of arrears in 1929 and that suit was also decreed and finally in 1938 she filed a third suit in the Court of the Civil Judge from which the present appeal arises. The plaintiff, Mt. Masuda Begam, claimed the entire amount from village Aumau only against the appellants, Raghubar Dayal and his three sons. The plaint also recited the fact that in the previous suit of 1925 the entire claim had been decreed against village Aumau. The defence set up was that as in the previous suit between the parties it had been decided that village Gahdeo was not liable for the charge and the property had escaped from the liability by laches of the charge-holder, village Aumau was liable only to a proportionate share of the charge and this they valued at Rs. 5 per month. The right to claim interest was denied. In the oral pleadings of the parties the plaintiff's pleader admitted that owing to the decision in the previous suit, he was not entitled to claim anything from village Gahdeo but the defendants were also barred by the rule of res judicata from denying their liability as owners of village Aumau for the whole allowance. The defendants denied that the previous decision operated as res judicata so far as village Aumau was concerned. Several issues were framed out of which Issues 2 and 6 are material for this appeal. They are:

"2. Is the plaintiff's maintenance liable to any reduction as alleged ? If so, by how much ?

6. Is the question that the maintenance is not liable to any reduction on account of Gahdeo having been freed from its charge res judicata between the parties?"

Thereafter the counsel for the parties admitted that if there was no reduction on account of Gahdeo having been released from the charge, then the defendants would not be entitled to any reduction as the income of village Aumau had not gone down and that if any reduction was made on account of Gahdeo having been freed from all liabilities, the amount of maintenance payable to the plaintiff would be Rs. 6 per month. The trial Court held that as it was admitted by the plaintiff's counsel that both the previous suits were fought out in the Munsif's Court, the decisions in those suits would not operate as res judicata and that it was the duty of the plaintiff as charge-holder to give notice of her charge to the purchasers of village Gahdeo and, on account of the plaintiff's own default, the security had been reduced and so the maintenance charge would be proportionately reduced. Accordingly a decree at the rate of Rs. 6 per month was given, the interest was reduced and the suit was decreed for Rs. 654 with future interest from the date of the decree at 3½ per cent. per annum to the date of realization.

[4] The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, Lucknow and claimed the entire amount of the maintenance allowance from village Aumau only and denied that she had been guilty of any laches or that any case had been made out for reducing her claim for the maintenance allowance and urged:

"That the judgment of the highest Court of appeal for the province was entitled to the greatest weight even though the matter was technically not res judicata."

The learned District Judge relied upon a decision of this Court in 1940 O. A. 1210.[1] This was a suit of Mt. Asia Begam, a sister of the present plaintiff and the right, she claimed, was identical with the right, claimed in the present suit. There also the present defendants claimed a reduction in the amount of the charge on the ground of release of village Gahdeo from the charge. This plea found favour with the learned Single Judge of this Court. The District Judge relying on this decision, holding that the previous decision in suit of 1925 did not operate as res judicata dismissed the appeal.

[5] The plaintiff came up in appeal to this Court against the decision of the learned District Judge. As she died during the pendency of the appeal, her sons were substituted and the points, raised before the Court were whether the whole of the maintenance allowance could be recovered from village Aumau only and whether the decision in the previous case operated as res judicata. The learned Single Judge of this Court (Kidwai J.) has held that the authorities, relied upon by Yorke J., in 1940 O. A. 1210[1] were of doubtful validity in view of a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 69 I. A. 98,[2] that every bit of the property, charged with maintenance, was liable for the whole of the charge, that the question of contribution as between the owners of the various properties subject to the charge was irrelevant for the purpose of this case and that the previous decision in 1925 suit operated as res judicata. The learned Single Judge of this Court has certified that this is a fit case for appeal to a Bench of this Court and granted permission accordingly.

[6] Now two questions arise for consideration in this appeal. They are:—(1) When two properties are burdened with the charge of a charge-holder and one of the properties is relieved of the liability of paying the charge as a result of its transfer by the owner to a person for consideration but without notice of charge, can the charge-holder recover the entire charge from the remaining property, or can he realise from it only a proportionate share of the charge? (2) Does the decision in the previous suit of 1925 between the parties operate as res judicata?

[7] As regards the first question, the learned counsel for the appellants urges that as one of the properties has been relieved of the burden, its effect is to wipe off or extinguish a proportionate share of the charge. No authority is cited for the proposition and the learned counsel contends that although the authority of 1940 O. A. 1210[1] has been shaken by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 69 I. A. 98,[2] the principle, laid down in 1940 O. A. 1210.[1] is the correct principle. Now it is settled law that considerations of equity do not arise where a matter is specifically provided for by statute If any authority is needed for this proposition, it will be found in the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in 40 Mad. 968[3] which has been approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 69 I. A. 98.[2]

[7a] The law on the subject of charges will be found in S. 100, T. P. Act, which reads as follows:

"100. Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property; and all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge. Nothing in this section applies to the charge of a trustee on the trust property for expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust, and, save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, no charge shall be enforced against any property in the hands of a person to whom such property has been transferred for consideration and without notice of the charge."

This shows that a charge is not a transfer of interest in the property. Section 58, T. P. Act, defines a mortgage and, according to it, a mortgage is a transfer of interest in the property, Section 100, T. P. Act, provides that provisions which apply to a simple mortgage, shall apply, so far as may be, to a charge also and a charge cannot be enforced against the property subject to the charge if the property is transferred for consideration and without notice of the charge. Our question must, therefore, depend for its answer upon the existing provisions of law.

[8] Now it is clear that a charge can be created by a contract between the parties or by operation of law or by a decree of a Court while a mortgage can only be created by a contract between the parties. It is for this reason that in S. 100, T. P. Act, the expression "so far as may be" has been used when defining the extent of applicability of the provisions, relating to simple mortgages, to a charge. Section 100 itself lays down one important difference between a mortgage and a charge namely, that a charge cannot be enforced against the property subject to a charge if the transferee thereof takes it from the owner for consideration and without notice of the charge. In the case of a mortgage a transferee whether he has or has not any notice of the mortgage takes it subject to the mortgage because the mortgage is a transfer of interest in an immovable property. Now it is true that a transferee without notice of the charge takes the property free from the charge but this does not mean that the proportionate share of the charge is thereby wiped out. The learned counsel for the appellants says that the proportionate share of the charge is extinguished because the transferee of the property takes it free from the charge and he cannot be made to contribute towards the charge payable by the owner or transferee of the rest of the property with notice of the charge. This argument recognises the principles; (1) that where two properties or more are subject to a charge, the charge-holder is entitled to recover his charge from the entire charged property or from any portion thereof, and, (2) that the owners of the property subject to the charge can claim contribution from one another. These, in fact, are the principles applicable to mortgages under Ss. 60 and 82, T. P. Act, and these principles do apply, so far as the nature of the charge will permit, to a charge also. In the present case, the charge has been created by a will and it has been created by the act of parties and is, in all respects, to be treated like a mortgage except that due effect must be given to the provisions of law (S. 100) that a transferee without notice of the charge takes the property free from the charge. This exception clearly relates only to the contribution which the property is liable to make and has nothing to do with the right of the charge-holder to realise his entire charge. The appellants thus raise, in effect, the question of contribution between the various owners of the properties inter se, a question which does not concern the charge-holder at all.

[9] Now the law is well settled that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the integrity of a mortgage can be broken only if the mortgagee himself becomes the proprietor of either the whole or a part of the property mortgaged and the release of a portion of the mortgage property from a portion of the mortgage debt does not break the integrity of the mortgage and the remaining mortgagors or their transferees or any one of them can redeem the mortgage only on paying the whole debt then due and there can be no piecemeal redemption. The authority for this is contained in 69 I. A. 98.[2] It follows, therefore, that a charge also cannot be split up in this manner even if the charge holder were willing by her own action to release any one of the charged properties from the liablity of her charge. The position of the plaintiff is as a matter of fact, very much stronger. It is not she but the owner who has transferred the jointly charged property. There is no duty whatever cast upon her in such circumstances to inform the transferee of her charge. There can be no doubt that the whole of village Aumau is liable for her entire charge in the present case.

[10] There are two cases of this Court, 9 O. W. N. 900[4] and A. I. R. 1936 Oudh 52[5] in which it has been held that a charge is in the nature of a mortgage and the charge-holder is entitled to recover the amount due to him from whichever portion of the property that he chooses and the question how far each of the owners of the property burdened with the charge is liable is a question of contribution among the owners themselves and does not concern the charge holder. In 9 O. W. N. 900[4] a maintenance charge holder claimed the entire charge from a transferee with notice of charge as in the present case. The reason for the decisions, mentioned above, is that the charge-holder is not interested in the question of contribution between the properties subject to his charge. This is the right approach to the question like the present one.

[11] For the reasons indicated above, we hold that the view of Kidwai J is correct and village Aumau is liable for the entire claim of maintenance.

[12] The next question that arises is whether the decision in the suit of 1925 operates as res judicata. It is not disputed that the defendants-appellants and their predecessors-in-interest and the plaintiffs of the present suit were parties to the previous suit, and that the claim in that suit was similar to that in the present suit. It is also not disputed that the previous suit was filed before the Munsif on account of the arrears claimed being below Rs. 2000 and the present suit was filed before the Civil Judge because the claim exceeded Rs. 2000. Exhibit 5 is the plaint in the suit of 1925, Ex. 8 is the judgment of the appellate Court while Ex. 3 is the judgment of this Court. In the plaint the amount of the charge was claimed jointly and severally from both the properties, that is, villages, Gahdeo and Aumau. The relief claimed was a decree for the entire sum separately or jointly. The written statement has not been filed but from the documents, mentioned above, it is clear that no issue was directly and specifically raised by the appellants that they were liable only to the proportionate share of the charge on village Aumau.

[13] Now it is clear that this was the defence which would have made it necessary to determine the extent of the rights of the plaintiffs to claim maintenance from the appellants. This is a defence which ought, in the circumstances of the case, to have been taken and as it was not taken, it shall be deemed (to have been taken?) and decided against the defendants. It was contended that in cases where, as in the present case, there are recurring causes of action, it is not necessary to raise a plea, regarding the extent of liability and the rule of res judicata would not apply. Some authorities, A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 650,[6] 1941 O. W. N. 22,[7] 1944 O. W. N. 245,[8] and A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 794[9] were cited. These cases were decided on the peculiar facts of those cases and on the pleadings, raised therein. It is not necessary to comment further on them because of the authority in A. I. R. 1945 P. C. 132.[10] In that case the plaintiff in the previous suit between the same parties claimed that he was entitled to one half of the entire income from the offerings made by pilgrims to the idol of Shree Onkarjit at the time of certain annual fairs. The plaintiff's title to one half of the entire income was upheld. In the subsequent suit, the plaintiff claimed a half share in the income from entire offerings made at subsequent annual fairs. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the defence in the subsequent suit that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the income of only one portion of offerings, namely, the shamlat khut or joint account, was a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the previous suit and was therefore to be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit within the meaning of explanation 4 to S. 11, Civil P. C. The defence in the subsequent suit therefore was barred by S. 11, Expl. 4 It is clear that the decision in the previous suit will operate as res judicata in the present case, provided the other requirements of S. 11, Civil P. C., are satisfied.

[14] In the present case, it was urged that the decision in the previous suit did not operate as res judicata because the first suit was filed before the Munsif and the the present suit was filed before the Civil Judge. This contention has no force. Section 11. Civil P. C., applies to such a case as held by a Full Bench of this Court in 1943 O. W. N. 280.[11]

[15] It was also urged that the plea of res judicata was abandoned at least in the first appellate Court and it could not be agitated in second appeal. The plea was, in fact, not abandoned. Ground No. 8 in the memorandum of appeal before the District Judge reads as follows:

"9 That the judgment of the Highest Court of appeal for the Province was entitled to the greatest weight even though the matter was technically not res judicata."

This sort of plea was taken because till then it seemed to be more or less the view that a suit or any issue, decided by a Munsif would not be res judicata in a subsequent suit before a superior Court. We are accordingly satisfied that the decision in the previous suit does operate as res judicata in the present suit. The result, therefore, is that Appeal No. 10 of 1946 is hereby dismissed. Plaintiffs' suit is decreed for Rs. 1635 with interest at 3¼ per cent. per annum from the date of trial Court's decree till realization. If the amount is not paid within six months, the plaintiffs shall be entitled to apply for a final decree for sale of village Aumau. Plaintiffs are entitled to costs here and hitherto.

Second Civil Appeals Nos. 90 and 91 of 1944.

[16] It has been seen above that Mt. Masuda Begam claimed her maintenance from villages Aumau and Gahdeo, but in her first suit she was eventually given her claim from village Aumau only. Her sister, Mt. Ahmad Jahan Begam also filed a similar suit for maintenance in 1925 from 1918 to December 1924 in the Court of Munsif. Her brothers and their transferees were impleaded in this suit. It was finally decided that the entire charge was recoverable from village Aumau. On 3-6-1942, she filed her second suit No. 54/95 of 1912 in the Court of Munsif for the period from 1-7-1930 to 31-5-1942. Although her claim amounted to Rs. 2145 at Rs. 15 per month, she gave up Rs. 145 and filed a suit to recover Rs. 2000 only from village Aumau. The defendants in the suit were the sons of Lala Raghubar Dayal who had obtained by then the whole of village Aumau. Several grounds were taken in defence but those which are relevant for our purpose are that the previous suit of 1925 did not operate as res judicata, and that only a proportionate share of the charge could be realised from village Aumau as village Gahdeo had become free from the charge due to the laches of the plaintiff. While the above suit of Mt. Ahmad Jahan Begam was pending, the defendants, sons of Lala Raghubar Dayal, filed suit No. 16/42 of 1942 in the Court of the Civil Judge for a declaration that as Gahdeo had become free from the charge, the plaintiff could realise from village Aumau only a proportionate share of the charge. Mt Ahmad Jahan Begam's defence to that suit was that the previous decision in the suit of 1925 operated as res judicata and according to that decision she was entitled to recover the whole charge from village Aumau itself. On an application being made that the two suits should be tried by the same Court Mt. Ahmad Jahan Begam's suit, filed before the Munsif, was also transferred to the Civil Judge and both the suits were disposed of by one judgment. It was held that the previous suit did not operate as res judicata as it was filed in the Court of Munsif and the second suit was filed in the Court of Civil Judge and that the defendants, sons of Lala Raghubar Dayal, were entitled to a reduction in the charge on account of release of village Gahdeo from the charge. The claim was accordingly reduced to Rs. 6 per month and the plaintiff's suit was decreed for Rs. 929/8/0 and the defendants were granted the declaration sought for. Dissatisfied with this decision, the plaintiff, Mt. Ahmad Jahan Begam appealed to the District Judge. It was held that the previous suit did not operate as res judicata and, in view of the ruling in 1940 O. A. 1210,[1] the plaintiff-appellant could claim only a proportionate share of the charge on village Aumau. The appeals were accordingly dismissed. Second Civil Appeal No. 90 of 1944 arises from the plaintiff's suit, No. 54/95 of 1942 for recovery of maintenance and second Civil Appeal No. 91 of 1944 arises from the declaratory decree, granted by the Courts in suit No. 16/42 of 1942. Both these appeals are being disposed of together as they involve the same questions.

[17] It has been urged for the plaintiff-appellant who is now represented by her sons that the decision in 1940 O. A. 1210[1] is not correct in view of the Privy Council decision in 69 I. A. 98[2] and that the previous decision clearly operated as res judicata.

[18] For reasons, already given in detail in Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1946 under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act, we hold that the appellants are entitled to claim the whole maintenance from village Aumau.

[19] Now comes the question of res judicata. It is not disputed that the previous suit of 1925 for recovery of maintenance was filed in the Court of Munsif. It is also clear that the second suit of the appellants (Suit No. 54/95 of 1942) was filed in the Court of Munsif though later on it was transferred to the Court of Civil Judge because the declaratory suit was pending in that Court. There can be little doubt that the decision in the first suit does operate as res judicata in the second suit for arrears. The question is whether the fact that the declaratory suit was actually tried by the Civil Judge a higher Court affects the principle of res judicata or not. According to a Full Bench decision of this Court in 1943 O. W. N. 280,[11] the previous suit will operate as res judicata notwithstanding that the subsequent suit, in which the same issue arose, was tried by the Civil Judge and could not have been tried by Court, deciding the first suit. There can be little doubt, therefore, that the decision in the 1925 suit does operate as res judicata in the subsequent suits that were tried by the Civil Judge In view of this decision, it is clear that the decrees, passed by the Courts below, cannot stand. We accordingly allow Second Appeals Nos. 90 and 91 of 1944 with costs in all the Courts and set aside the decrees of the two lower Courts. Suit No. 54/95 of 1942 is decreed with costs for Rs. 2000 with interest at $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent from the date of the suit till the date of realisation. Should the money due be not paid within six months from today the appellants shall be entitled to apply for a final decree for sale of village Aumau on which the decretal amount is a charge.

[20] Suit No. 16/42 of 1942 is dismissed with costs,

(a) U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), S. 30—Mortgage—Rate of interest reduced under Act — Agreement to further reduce rate—Registration—Registration Act (1908), S. 49 (c).

Section 30, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act does not put an end to any contract entered into between the parties to a loan. All that it says is that the contract shall be enforced subject to the limitation that interest allowed by the Court shall not exceed the rates specified in the Act. Hence, notwithstanding the fact that the rate of interest mentioned in the mortgage deed has been already abrogated by the provisions of the Act, an agreement by which the parties agree to further reduce the rate of interest provided by that Act requries registration and cannot be received in evidence if not registered : 18 A. Judgment. — This appeal arises of a suit brought to enforce a mortgage. On 1-12-1932, a simple mortgage was executed by the present appellant Rudra Partap Singh and his son Turambuk Sah in favour of Ballabh Das and Madan Murari for a consideration of Rs. 25,000. The mortgage was for a period of ten years. The deed carried interest at 10 per cent. p. m. compoundable with half yearly rests. The mortgaged property comprised shares in three villages Sonikpur, Qazipur and Chilauli. The deed further stipulated that the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for his mortgage money without waiting for the expiry of the stipulated period of ten years, if the interest for two six months (one year) fell in arrears. The suit was brought on 16-2-1941 for a sum of Rs. 33,228-6-0 with future interest and costs by sale of the property mortgaged. As the defendants were agriculturists the interest claimed by the plaintiffs was limited to the rate specified for such a loan in the U. P. Agriculturist's Relief Act.

[2] A number of pleas were raised in defence. They were, however, rejected and the plaintiffs were granted a decree for Rs. 33,228-6-0 together with costs of the suit and interest in Rs. 33,065-11-4 from 18-2-1941 upto the date of the decree at $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum. The entire amount decreed was to carry future interest till realisation at 2 per cent. per annum. It was made payable in thirty equal six monthly instalments. In case of default of three instalments by the judgment-debtors the mortgagee decree-holders were under the decree entitled to take out execution of the entire decretal amount. The present appeal has been preferred against this decree.

[3] Of the various defences urged in the trial Court only three now survive.

1. That the mortgagors were entitled to the benefit of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act;

2. That there was an agreement arrived at between the parties under which the plaintiffs were, in spite of the Agriculturists' Relief Act having allowed a higher rate of interest, entitled to charge interest only at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum; and

3. That by an arrangement arrived at between the mortgagors and the mortgagees the latter were put in possession of the mortgaged property and out of the income a sum of Rs. 7000 was paid towards the mortgage debt.

[4] It was frankly conceded by Mr. Das, learned counsel for the appellants, that he could not in view of the evidence on record press the first point with any hope of success. It was admitted by appellant 2 in the witness box that the legal rate payable by the family of the mortgagors was more than Rs. 100 per year. Thus it is clear that ten times of this figure will exceed Rs. 1000 and accordingly under S. 3 (e) (ii), Debt Redemption Act no member of that family can be said to be agriculturist for the purpose of the said Act. The first point therefore must be found against the appellants.

[5] A suit under S. 33, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act was brought by the present appellants to get a declaration in respect of the amount of money due under the deed of mortgage. On 6-4-1936, a decree was passed in the suit and it was declared that Rs. 28,600-10-3 was due to the mortgagee under their deed of that date. There was again a second settlement of accounts between the parties on 22-12-1936. On that date the mortgagee received a sum of Rs. 373-12-3 and granted a receipt (Ex. A49) for the same. After acknowledging the receipt of the above sum the document proceeds to recite as follows :

"In the principal amount under the said mortgage deed which is for Rs. 25,000 the outstanding interest to the extent of Rs. 4000 has already been included in accordance with the decision of the case under S. 33, Agriculturists' Relief Act. Now the entire sum of money due under the said mortgage deed is Rs. 29,000 whereon interest shall be charged at 3/8/- from 1-12-1936 in accordance with the mutual settlement."

[6] Reliance is placed on the last sentence in the above quoted paragraph and it was contended that in view of the settlement referred to therein the mortgagees could not charge interest at a rate higher than Rs. 3-8-0 per cent. per annum. On behalf of the mortgagees it was contended in reply that they were prepared to make a concession to the mortgagors in the matter of interest provided that they made prompt and regular payments as stipulated by the deed. The concession was conditional upon regular payment and as this condition was not complied with, the mortgagors were not entitled to claim the benefit of this concession. Apart from this contention it was pleaded that the agreement relied on by the mortgagors could not be enforced as it varied the terms of a document which was compulsorily registrable and was without consideration. Both these contentions were accepted by the trial Court and the issue was found against the appellants. The same contentions were repeated before us.

[7] It was pointed out on behalf of the respondents that this point was not raised in the grounds of appeal and accordingly could not be permitted to be argued. Even if the appellants were permitted to raise the point the finding arrived at by the lower Court could not be successfully challenged. We have examined the appellants' memorandum of the grounds of appeal with care and find that none of the grounds mentioned therein covers the points sought to be argued before us. The memorandum of the grounds of appeal contains five grounds. The first of these is directed to the contention raised as regards the U. P. Debt Redemption Act. Grounds Nos. 2 and 3 deal with the payment of Rs. 7000 towards mortgage debt. This is the third point mentioned above. By ground No. 4 the appellants wanted reduction of future interest and ground No. 5 prays for grant of yearly instalments. It is, therefore, clear that the appellants are not entitled to raise this contention. Apart from this technical ground on which the appellants' contention must be ruled out, we are of opinion that the finding of the lower Court that Ex. A49 being an unregistered document "cannot be received as evidence of any transaction affecting the mortgaged property covered by the deed of mortgage and the agreement to reduce interest being without consideration, could not be enforced in a Court of law."

[8] The question as to Ss. 17 and 49, Registration Act is covered by the Bench decision of this Court in S O. W N. 279.[1] It was held in that case that if a document is required to be registered its terms cannot be varied by an unregistered agreement. In the case before their Lordships, one Sadiq Ali executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of three persons Baldi Ram, Pohkar Mal and Kanhai Lal for Rs. 8000 bearing interest at Rs. 1/2 per cent. per mensem. compoundable six monthly. When the deed was sought to be enforced it was pleaded among other defences that the mortgagees had agreed to reduce the rate of interest to -/14/6 only. It was found that by an unregistered document the mortgagees had agreed to reduce the interest from 1/2 per cent. per mensem to -/14/6 p. m. with effect from a certain date. Reference was made in the course of their Lordships' judgment to a number of decided cases, and it was held that such an agreement fell under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act and the document could not be received under S. 49, Registration Act as evidence of any transaction affecting the mortgaged property in suit. It was contended by Mr. Das that in the present case the rate mentioned in the deed was already abrogated by the provisions of the U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act and that there was nothing in law which required registration of an agreement by which the parties agreed to further reduce the rate of interest provided by that Act. We have no hesitation in holding that the argument is without substance. Section 30, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act does not put an end to any contract entered into between the parties to a loan. It lays down that in spite of any contract to the contrary that may be entered into between the debtor and a creditor interest allowed by the Court shall not exceed the rates specified in the Act. It does not put an end to the contract between the parties. All that it says is that the contract shall be enforced subject to this limitation. What Ex. A 49 did was to vary the terms of the mortgage deed as regards interest and this the parties could not do except by a registered document. But apart from this ground, it is clear that it was an agreement for which there was no consideration. The appellants' counsel contended that the mortgagors had failed to pay interest every six months as was agreed to, the mortgagees were anxious that regular payments should be made, so on 22nd December 1936, the mortgagors undertook to do so. In consideration thereof the mortgagees agreed to reduce the rate of interset. We are clear that the mortgagors were under their contract of mortgage under an obligation to pay the interest regularly every 6 months and if they were already under a legal obligation to do so, this could not form a consideration for a fresh agreement. The law on the subject is thus laid down in Pollock's Principles of Contract, p. 181:

"Promise of performance of existing duty—Similarly, neither the promise to do a thing nor the actual doing of it will be a good consideration if it is a thing which the party is already bound to do either by the general law or by a subsisting contract with the other party."

Reference in support of this proposition is made to Leake 436.

[9] In 2 Bom. 362[2] an agreement was executed by a client in favour of his vakil after the latter had accepted a vakalatnama to act for him in a certain suit whereby the client bound himself to pay to the vakil in the event of his conducting the suit to a successful termination a certain sum in addition to the vakil's full fees. A suit was brought by the vakil to enforce the agreement. It was held by Westropp C. J., that the plaintiff had accepted vakalatnama from the defendant previous to the execution of the agreement to render his best services as a pleader to him in the suit. There was no fresh consideration proceeding from the plaintiff for the agreement that he obtained. He could not be bound by it to render to the defendant his professional service. This he was bound to do by the existence of the vakalatnama. The agreement was accordingly held unenforceable. We are clear that the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court on this contention is simply supported by principle as well as authority.

[10] The third point need not detain us long. [Their Lordships agreed with the Court below that the mortgagees were never put in possession of the mortgaged property and further held after discussing the evidence, that the sum of Rs 7000 was not paid towards the mortgage debt.]

[11] We see no sufficient grounds to interfere with the lower Court's order making the decretal amount payable in instalments.

[12] No other question was raised before us. The result therefore is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Civil Appeal No. 169 of 1942, Decided on 20-8-1947, against order of Civil Judge, Partabgarh, D/- 14-11-1941.

Landlord and tenant—Grove lands — Abandonment — Custom prohibiting sale — Sale in execution of decree against grove-holder—Effect.

Where there is a custom prohibiting the sale of groves a sale of the grove lands in execution of a decree against the grove-holder amounts to an abandonment and the proprietor of the village in which the groves are situated, thereupon becomes entitled to possession of the grove land, although right of re-entry has not been specifically reserved to the proprietor. The sale being invalid as being in contravention of the custom the position of the auction-purchaser and persons holding the land on his behalf is that of a trespasser : 15 O. C. 91; 17 A. I. Judgment. — This is the defendants' appeal. One Sital Singh had two sons, Ganesh and Lal Bahadur. Ganesh had a son Arjun. Arjun owned a half share as groveholder in ten grove plots. His half share devolved on Sheo Ratan. Mata Badal is the son of Sheo Ratan and Bindeshwari is the brother of Sheo Ratan. All the three are defendants to the suit. The other half share in the grove plots devolved upon the descendants of Lal Bahadur. In execution of a decree obtained against Arjun, half share in the grove plots was sold and purchased by Mata Badal. The plaintiff, who is admittedly the proprietor of the village in which the groves are situate, sued for possession of the grove plots on the ground that Arjun had no transferable rights in the groves, nor could those rights be sold in execution of the decree. Mata Badal, who had purchased the grove-holders' rights at the auction in 1928 and had taken possession of the grove plots, acquired no rights thereunder and whatever rights existed in the groves had been extinguished. According to the plaintiff, two more plots which were other than the grove plots had been encroached upon by the defendants, hence he asked for possession of all the 12 plots.

[2] The defence was that under the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz, there was no clause for re-entry in the case of sale of the groves and consequently the plaintiff had no right of possession. The sale in favour of Mata Badal was characterised as fictitious. As regards the two plots, it was pleaded that a certain portion of these plots belonged to the plaintiff and the other portion to the defendants. No controversy any longer survives respecting these two plots.

[3] The trial Court held that the sale was not fictitious, that the custom applied to voluntary as well as involuntary sales, that it was not rebutted by the instances produced by the defendants, that although the custom prohibiting the transfer of groves existed, yet no right of re-entry being reserved in favour of the landlord, the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the defendants from the grove plots. The suit was, therefore, dismissed in respect of these plots.

[4] The lower appellate Court reversed the decision of the trial Court. According to the view taken by that Court the wajib-ul-arz of the village clearly recorded a custom prohibiting sale or mortgage of groves by tenants. The sale in question being in contravention of the terms of the wajib-ul-arz amounted to an abandonment which gave a right to the zamindar to re-enter.

[5] The sole question that has been argued before me is that the sale in execution of the decree did not amount to an abandonment in law as abandonment connotes change in possession and as there was nothing to show that Mata Badal as a result of the auction sale obtained possession, no abandonment should be held to have been established. Reliance is placed on 15 O. C. 91.[1] The terms of the wajib-ul-arz were, more or less, identical with the terms of the wajib-ul-arz before me The grove-holder had no right to sell or mortgage the groves without the permission of the proprietor. There was no express provision as to the proprietor's right in the event of the grove-holder selling or mortgaging the grove in contravention of the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. The learned Judicial Commissioners differentiated the case of a mortgage from that of a sale. They held that in the case of a mortgage the grove-holder cannot be said to have entirely parted with or abandoned his own rights and he has still something left which he can plead against the landlord so as to protect the mortgagee. whose right of possession is subject to the right of redemption of the mortgagor. They observed :

"At any rate, in the case of a transfer by way of sale it may be said that there has been on the part of the transferor an entire abandonment of his rights in favour of another person, so that if a grove-holder in a case like the present purports to sell outright whatever rights he may possess in respect of his grove, he clearly has no rights left which he can set up against another person, and the transferee who is left in actual possession cannot plead that there exists as between himself and the landlord any contract of license in respect of the trees in the grove, or the land on which they stand, which can secure him against ejectment or prevent the landlord from treating him as a mere trespasser."

This case, therefore, far from helping the appellants helps the respondents.

[6] In the well-known Pihani case, 7 O. W. N. 271[2] a person who was merely a riyaya had made a waqf of the land and it was held that the riyaya had no right of occupation left in the land after the execution of the waqf. The learned Judges held that he had abandoned that right and had become a trespasser liable to ejectment at the instance of the superior proprietor.

[7] In 1938 O. W. N. 176[3] it was held that where a grove-holder sells trees which he is forbidden to do under the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz the sale amounts to an abandonment and as the purchaser gets nothing by the invalid purchase, the taluqdar is entitled to get possession of the grove so sold.

[8] The point that Mata Badal was not in possession was not raised in the lower Courts. All that was urged there was that the transfer was fictitious but that case was negatived. Mata Badal, therefore, was a real transferee since the date of the purchase. If the purchase in his favour was invalid, he acquired no rights under it and became a trespasser. Assuming that the other defendants are in possession of the groves with the acquiescence of Mata Badal, their position is no better than that of a trespasser. I hold, therefore, that the decision of the lower appellate Court cannot be disturbed.

[9] The only cross-objection that has been pressed is with regard to costs. It is urged that full costs should have been allowed and not proportionate costs. This is agreed to by the appellants. Apart from this, I am of opinion that the order as regards costs was not correct. The lower appellate Court had allowed the appeal and there was no reason why full costs should not have been allowed. I dismiss the appeal with costs and allow the cross-objection with costs.

Ex. of Decree Appeal No. 43 of 1945, Decided on 15th September 1947, against order of Civil Judge, Unao, D/- 23rd March 1945.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 15 — Joint decree-holders applying for execution in favour of one only — Non-mention of O. 21, R. 15 — Application whether in accordance with law — Limitation Act, Art. 182.

Under a decree for foreclosure passed jointly in favour of A and B, A applied for execution by delivery of possession of entire property. On the same date B filed a separate application praying that property be delivered to A only as he had transferred his interest to A. Subsequently, A's application was amended by including the prayer in B's application. Order 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., was not mentioned in the application nor was it stated that it was for the benefit of both the decree-holders. In an objection that it was not in accordance with law so as to save limitation :

Held, that provided there was substantial compliance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 15, it was not necessary that the rule should be mentioned in the application ; that its non-mention was not a defect and even if it were, it was removed by the simultaneous application by B; that there was nothing in law to prevent the joint decree-holders from applying that actual possession may be delivered to one of them alone ; that considering both the applications together, it was an application in accordance with law and the amendment by addition of a prayer which could not be granted did not affect its validity. Gajodhar Prasad in person.

Judgment. — Mani Ram and Gajodhar Prasad obtained a final decree for foreclosure against Sheodayal and others on 9th September 1939. On 6th July 1943, Gajodhar alone applied for execution of this decree by the delivery of possession of the entire property. At the same time Mani Ram filed a separate application praying that the decree be executed in favour of Gajodhar alone because he had transferred his interests to him. Thereafter, on 7th July 1943, the advocate for Gajodhar stated before the Court that on that very date Mani Ram had executed a deed of transfer in favour of his client and that this matter should be mentioned in the application for execution. He asked for time to amend his application in order to mention this fact. Time having been granted to him, he applied on 8th July 1943, adding to his original application the following words :

"Since decree-holder 1 has transferred his share by means of a sale deed, dated 7th July 1943, in favour of decree-holder 2, therefore notices may be issued under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., to the judgment-debtor and the vendor and, after making substitution, proprietary possession be delivered to decree-holder 2 alone. The sale deed is attached to this application."

[2] Notices were issued accordingly, and the judgment-debtor filed an objection on three lines : — (1) That Mani Ram was minor and could not make a valid transfer ; (2) That the assignment was not registered and could not be considered by the Court ; and (3) That possession could not be delivered as the property was "protected land." While these objections were pending, Sheodayal died and the decree-holder had his execution application consigned to the records. On 3rd December 1943, another application for execution was made by Gajodhar alone in which he set out the transfer to him and prayed for execution of the decree in his favour alone. He also prayed for substitution of his own name in the place of that of Mani Ram and for the heirs of Sheodayal in his place. After the necessary substitution had been effected the heirs of the judgment-debtor took the same pleas which the original judgment-debtor had taken. The Court executing the decree dismissed the objections but, on appeal, the objection that the deed of transfer not having been registered, could not be considered by the Court was allowed. Accordingly, the prayer for delivery of possession to Gajodhar alone was rejected.

[3] Gajodhar, thereafter, obtained a fresh registered sale deed and then applied on 29th May 1944, for execution on the basis of the transfer. To this an objection was taken that it was barred by time. The contention was that, although the two prior applications were presented in time, having regard to the provisions of the U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, they were not applications in accordance with law and so could not save limitation. The argument was that one of several joint decree-holders can only present an application for execution in accordance with and under the provisions of O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., and that, if the application is not in accordance with that rule, no action can be taken upon it and it is not an application in accordance with law. The learned counsel relies on 2 Luck. 259[1] and A. I. R. 1919 Pat. 286[2] in support of this proposition. The first decision does not cover this case because in that case, the application was by one of the decree-holders to execute the decree in so far as his share was concerned. Such an application is warranted by law and it was held that it could not be acted on. In the present case one of the joint holders—apart from the transfer of the decree, to Mani Ram Gajodhar was also a joint decree-holder—applied for execution of the whole decree. Thus, the application was in accordance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., though the rule was not mentioned. The second decision no doubt supports the appellant's contention but a contrary view has been taken by other High Courts.

[4] It has been laid down in a large number of decisions that, provided the application is substantially in compliance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C. it is not necessary that that rule should be mentioned in the application. Indeed the Lahore High Court has gone to the extent of holding that the procedure provided in O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., is for the benefit of the joint decree-holders and the judgment-debtor cannot object to execution by one of the joint decree-holders: vide A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 655.[3]

[5] In the present case one of the two joint decree-holders applied for execution of the whole decree. He did not ask for delivery of possession of the property to himself alone but he asked for action under Rr 22 and 35 of O. 21, Civil P. C. If this application is considered by itself, there is no defect in it except that O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C. is not mentioned and it is not mentioned that execution is sought for the benefit of all the decree-holders. That is not a defect at all—vide A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 603[4] but, even if it is, in the present case the defect was removed because at the same time as the execution application was presented, the other joint decree-holder also applied, praying that the decree may be executed by delivery of possession of the property to Gajodhar alone. There is nothing in law to prevent two joint decree-holders applying that actual possession should be delivered to one of them alone. Thus, if the two applications are read and considered together, as they were by the trial Court, they evidenced an application by both the decree-holders for execution of the decree. The mere fact that one of the two applications does not mention all the details required to be mentioned in an application for execution is immaterial because it was only a part of the execution application proper which did give all the particulars. The mere fact that a reason is given for the prayer for delivery of possession to one of the decree-holders, which the Court could not consider, does not make the application itself defective. Thus the application presented on 6th July 1943, was in accordance with law and can be relied upon to save limitation.

[6] The next question that arises is whether the amendment made subsequently by reason of something that had happened later, can have the effect of making the original application itself invalid. The amendment was the addition of another relief, leaving the two original reliefs unaffected. The new prayer could not be granted but there was nothing to prevent the grant of the original prayers' execution. Thus, the amendment cannot affect the validity of the original application.

[7] The result, therefore, is that the application for execution presented on 29th May 1944, is not barred by time. The order of the lower appellate Court is maintained and this appeal is dismissed with costs. The stay order dated 8th November 1945, is vacated.

Civil Revn. Applns. Nos. 57 and 141 of 1946, Decided on 20-8-1947, from order of Civil Judge, Lucknow, D/- 22-12-1945.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 33, Rr. 1 and 5 (b)—Applicants having assets and funds sufficient to raise money for court-fee but mentally incapacitated —Whether can be allowed to sue in forma pauperis.

Rules 5 and 7 of O. 33 imperatively enjoin that if the applicant for permission to sue in forma pauperis has sufficient funds or property from which he can pay court-fee or on which the requisite money can be raised for that purpose permission to sue in forma pauperis must be refused. According to the explanation attached to O. 33, R. 1 a person can be held to be a pauper only when he is not possessed of sufficient 'means.' The latter expression covers all realisable assets within the applicant's reach. The fact that he is mentally incapacitated from contracting or transferring the property is hardly material, since the law provides proper methods by the adoption of which the property of a person of unsound mind can be converted into money. [Para 7]

Where in an application to sue in forma pauperis by next friend on behalf of a lunatic, the plaint of the proposed suit is filed on the last date of limitation and the application is refused on the ground that the lunatic plaintiff had sufficient means to pay the court-fee, assuming that the suit is founded on a title which deserves to be investigated refusal to permit the plaintiff to pay the necessary court-fee is likely to entail the extinction of the plaintiff's claim. The conduct of the next friend in minimising the extent of the plaintiff's properties should not be allowed to prejudice the plaintiff's interests. The provisions of S. 149, Civil P. C., are sufficiently wide and should be applied for granting time for filing the requisite court-fee even at the stage of revision against the rejection of the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. [Para 8]

It is not possible to ascertain the value of a claim in an application to sue as a forma pauperis. The plaintiff merely seeks immunity from payment of court-fee, but since that immunity is not absolute, it is difficult to regard the sum payable as its true value. Sub-rule (11) of R. 289, Oudh Civil Rules prescribes that in cases in which the subject-matter of a claim does not admit of valuation the fee must be calculated according to the rules framed under the Suits Valuation Act if they are applicable and in other cases reasonable fee must be fixed in view of the time occupied in the trial of the case and the nature of the question involved. Under sub-r. (9) the fee payable to the Government pleader for opposing an application to sue as a pauper is 10 per cent. on the amount of the court-fee leviable on the plaint subject to a maximum of Rs. 75. The fee payable to defendants' pleader obviously should not be larger. Computation of pleaders' fees, on the valuation of the suit, made in application for leave to sue as pauper is not warranted by R. 289. [Para 9]

Order.—These connected revisions are directed against two orders passed by the learned civil Judge, Lucknow. The first order rejected the applicant's prayer for grant of leave to sue as a pauper and the second refused to amend the memo of costs in the formal order.

[2] Kr. Tej Singh applicant is alleged to be a person of unsound mind. Whether or not he is in fact mentally afflicted as alleged has yet to be determined.

[3] The plaint of the proposed suit was filed by one Thakur Ganga Singh purporting to act as the next friend of Kr. Tej Singh. It prayed for delivery of possession of the taluqa of Oel as well as diverse other properties from the present holder of the estate, namely Raja Yuvraj Dutt Singh and Guzaredars of the estate. The claim was founded on the allegation that the plaintiff was the nearest heir of the previous taluqdar, namely, Raja Krishna Dutt Singh who died on 15th December 1932. The suit was valued at Rs. 1,10,00,000. The court-fee payable on the aforesaid sum amounted to Rs. 12,500. The value of the plaintiff's total assets was shown in a schedule attached to the plaint as Rs. 1275 only, and in its para. 18 Thakur Ganga Singh who signed as the next friend for the plaintiff averred that Kr. Tej Singh was a pauper and did not possess sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law. He prayed, therefore, for leave to sue in forma pauperis. Notice was issued to the Government pleader and to the defendants in due course. Both denied Thakur Ganga Singh's averments regarding the plaintiff's means. In a written statement filed by the Raja it was mentioned that Kr. Tej Singh possessed properties which were worth at least Rs. 94,000. Their details were given in eight lists. The allegations as to plaintiff's infirmity of mind were denied. The interests of Thakur Ganga Singh were said to be adverse to those of the plaintiff. The Raja maintained that the so-called next friend was actuated by self-interest in instituting the suit, and he characterised the action as vexatious and calculated to defeat the ends of justice.

[4] As stated above, the controversy regarding Kr. Tej Singh's mental condition was not entered into. It was left for disposal after the question of pauperism was decided. The parties agreed to the adoption of this course.

[5] The inquiry under O. 33, Civil P. C., revealed that the plaintiff's assets were worth more than Rs. 70,000, that the schedule containing the list of assets attached to the plaint omitted to disclose the existence of many valuable properties of Kr. Tej Singh and that this was done in a deliberate attempt on the part of the next friend to conceal them in order to avoid the payment of the court-fee. The learned Civil Judge, therefore, holding that the plaintiff was possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the requisite fee refused to give leave to sue as pauper. It transpired from the evidence that previously Thakur Ganga Singh's brother Madho Singh had instituted a title suit for possession of the taluqa and other properties left by Raja Krishna Dutt Singh and claimed that he was the nearest heir of the late Raja. In it Tej Singh who is his junior son was alleged to be a congenital lunatic and therefore excluded from inheritance. The right of succession of Raja Yuvraj Dutt Singh, who is a son of a predeceased son of Raja Krishna Dutt Singh was disputed on various grounds which do not concern us. All that we need state is that the suit was not pressed for decision. It was withdrawn apparently because Madho Singh who had simultaneously started proceedings under the Lunacy Act in order to obtain a declaration regarding Kr. Tej Singh's mental infirmity, miserably failed to substantiate his allegations. Soon afterwards another suit instituted in this Court on behalf of the present plaintiff by one Raja Jai Indra Bahadur Singh of Mahewa who purported to act as his next friend was also withdrawn presumably for the same reason. In view of the aforesaid litigation, the learned Civil Judge, it would seem, considered that Thakur Ganga Singh's attempt to set up the title of Kr. Tej Singh and to fight out his battle by characterising him as a lunatic was a part of the design conceived by his brother in 1933 to harass, and, if possible, to dislodge the present holder of the Oel estate. The learned lower Court, therefore, awarded three sets of costs against Thakur Ganga Singh personally. It also allowed special costs to the Raja under S. 35-A, Civil P. C. The costs of opposite party No. 1, Raja Yuvraj Dutt Singh, were taxed at rupees 5281-1-0. This amount included Rs 5000 in respect of pleader's fee on the valuation of the suit, namely Rs. 1,10,00,000. A further sum of Rs. 500 was shown as the Raja's special costs. The costs of the other defendants were taxed at Rs. 1506-9-0 including Rs. 1500 for pleader's fee as per certificate. The Government pleader's fee was shown as Rs. 75. Thakur Ganga Singh was dissatisfied with the taxation of pleader's fee. According to him, the valuation of the suit should not have been regarded as the valuation of the prayer for leave to sue as a pauper. He, therefore, applied under S. 152, Civil P. C., for reduction of the legal fee but remained unsuccessful. Revision Application No. 57 of 1946 is directed against the order refusing leave. Revision Application No. 141 of 1946 challenges the order whereby the plaintiff's application for correction of the memorandum of costs was rejected.

[6] The elaborate arguments which were addressed to us on behalf of the applicant resolve themselves into three main contentions :

(1) that in view of the mental condition of the applicant he must be deemed to be incapable of actually possessing the property of which he has been found to be the owner,

(2) that in the circumstances of the case the Court below ought to have permitted the plaintiff to make good the deficiency in court-fee within a reasonable time,

(3) that the pleader's fee ought not to have been taxed on the valuation of the suit.

[7] The first of the aforementioned contentions rests upon the assumption that Kr. Tej Singh is a person of unsound mind. It is pointed out that though the applicant has been found to have cash and silver of considerable value they are kept with the treasurer of the estate and are out of reach of the next friend. In our opinion the circumstances indicate that the plaintiff has full control over his assets. He keeps a safe in the Raja's treasury. The value of its contents would seem to be more than what is necessary for payment of the court-fee. The safe has two keys. One of them is kept by the plaintiff himself, while the other is kept by the estate treasurer who makes disbursements on plaintiff's orders and gets from him a separate allowance for the services which he is called upon to render. There is also reliable evidence to show that apart from what is contained in the safe there are other properties such as groves, a motor car and a number of milch cattle which are in the sole control of the plaintiff. The value of these properties also exceed the amount necessary for meeting the court-fee. Besides, Kr. Tej Singh who lives with the Raja gets a maintenance allowance of Rs. 700 per month. We are satisfied, therefore, that the plaintiff is in a position to pay Rs. 12,500 as court-fee. Rules 5 and 7 of O. 33 imperatively enjoin that if the applicant has sufficient funds or property from which he can pay court-fee or on which the requisite money can be raised for that purpose permission to sue in forma pauperis must be refused. According to the explanation attached to O. 33, R. 1 a person can be held to be a pauper only when he is not possessed of sufficient 'means.' The latter expression covers all realisable assets within the applicant's reach. The fact that he is mentally incapacitated from contracting or transferring the property is hardly material, since the law provides proper methods by the adoption of which the property of a person of unsound mind can be converted into money. There is no evidence to show that Ganga Singh ever made any efforts to secure the necessary funds from the plaintiff's safe or from any other property. The learned Civil Judge was, we think, justified in refusing leave to Kr. Tej Singh to sue as a pauper. There is, in our judgment, no illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of the lower Court's jurisdiction, and there is no reason, therefore, to interfere with the order refusing to grant the leave sought.

[8] As regards the applicant's request to permit him to make good the deficiency in court-fee we have come to the conclusion that reasonable opportunity should be given to him The plaint of the proposed suit was filed on the last day of limitation, and assuming as we must assume at this stage that the suit is founded on a title which deserves to be investigated refusal to permit the plaintiff to pay the necessary court-fee is likely to entail the extinction of Kr. Tej Singh's claim. The conduct of the next friend in minimising the extent of the plaintiff's properties should not be allowed to prejudice the plaintiff's interests. The provisions of S. 149, Civil P. C., are sufficiently wide and should be applied for granting time even at this stage for filing the requisite court-fee. In the circumstances of the case, we think we should grant the indulgence which the plaintiffs seeks.

[9] As regards the third contention our conclusion is that the computation of pleader's fee on the valuation of the suit was not warranted by R. 289, Oudh Civil Rules. The defendants' costs have been apparently taxed by the lower Court under sub-r. (8) read with sub-r. (5). The applicant's prayer for leave to sue as a pauper has been treated as a miscellaneous case and has been valued at Rs. 1,10,00,000. It seems to us hardly possible to ascertain the value of a claim in an application to sue as a forma pauperis. The plaintiff merely seeks immunity from payment of court-fee, but since that immunity is not absolute, it is difficult to regard the sum payable as its true value. Sub-rule (11) of R. 289 prescribes that in cases in which the subject-matter of a claim does not admit of valuation the fee must be calculated according to the rules framed under the Suits Valuation Act if they are applicable and in other cases reasonable fee must be fixed in view of the time occupied in the trial of the case and the nature of the question involved. Under sub-rule (9), the fee payable to the Government pleader for opposing an application to sue as a pauper is 10 per cent. on the amount of the court-fee leviable on the plaint subject to a maximum of Rs. 75. The fee payable to defendants' pleader obviously should not be larger. In our judgment, therefore, first defendant's pleader's fee should be taxed at Rs. 75, and the same amount should be taxed as the pleader's fee of the other defendants.

[10] We accordingly uphold the order of the learned Civil Judge, Lucknow, so far as it refuses leave to the plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis. We, however, modify the formal order to this extent that in the costs of defendant 1 his pleader's fee shall be taxed at Rs. 75 instead of Rs. 5000, and in the costs of the other defendants a similar sum shall be substituted for Rs. 1500. We allow three months' time to Kr. Tej Singh from the date of this order to make good the deficiency in court-fee. If the court-fee is paid, the plaint shall be registered as a suit. The applicant having substantially failed in S. 115-Application No. 57 of 1946. Thakur Ganga Singh shall personally pay the costs of this Court to the opposite parties. We fix Rs. 75 as pleader's fee. In S. 115-Application No. 141 of 1946 parties will bear their own costs.

Second Appeal No. 340 of 1943, Decided on 9-9-1947, against order of Civil Judge, Bahraich, D/- 9-9-1943.

(a) Will—Bequest—Validity—Bequest in favour of body corporate.

There is no restriction in Indian law to a corporation taking property under a will. Consequently a bequest in favour of Radha Swami Satsang Sabha, Dayal Bagh, a body corporate under Societies Registration Act, is valid. [Para 3]

(b) Succession Act (1925), S. 114 — Will taking effect immediately on death of testator.

Where the will takes effect immediately on the death of the testator and the property bequeathed vests in the legatee forthwith, no question of offending against rule of perpetuity arises. The fact that a corporate body may hold the property for ever is no infringement of the rule against perpetuity. [Para 4]

Judgment. — This is a defendant's appeal against an appellate decree passed by the learned Civil Judge of Bahraich confirming the decree of the Munsif in the same district.

[2] The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Radha Swami Satsang Sabha

Dayalbagh, a body corporate registered under the Societies Registration Act. It appears that on 17th May 1939, one Sheo Ratan executed a will in favour of Radha Swami Satsang Sabha, Dayal Bagh (hereinafter referred to as the Sabha) plaintiff-respondent 1 in this appeal, by which he bequeathed all his property in favour of the said Sabha. On Sheo Ratan's death Shri Bhokhan, appellant, and certain others claiming to be collaterals of the deceased, took possession of his property. The Sabha accordingly brought a suit for recovery of the same. A number of points were raised in defence, but it is unnecessary to refer to them in detail. It was found by the Munsif, Bahraich, in whose Court the suit was brought, that Radha Swami Satsang Sabha was an institution in the nature of a math and so capable of holding property under a will. A contention put forward on behalf of the defendants that the will not being in favour of a deity but in favour of Sabha was invalid, was repelled. It was further held that the will did not offend against the rule of perpetuity. The Sabha's claim was ultimately decreed. Dissatisfied with this decision Shri Bhokhan, Indar Datt and Inder Pal, defendants in the suit, preferred an appeal before the District Judge of Gonda. The case was disposed of by the Civil Judge, Bahraich, who agreed with the trial Court and dismissed the appeal; hence the present second appeal.

[3] Only two points were raised by the learned counsel for the appellant in support of his contention that the bequest in favour of the Sabha was invalid. He contended : (1) that a body corporate like the Radha Swami Sat Sang Sabha could not take any property under a will, and (2) that the will of Sheo Ratan offended against the rule of perpetuity. I am clear that there is no force in either of these contentions. In support of the first contention, Mr. Siraj Husain relied on the following passage from Broom's Legal Maxims, Edn. 9, p. 292 :

"The latter of these statutes was explanatory of the former, and declared that every person (except as therein mentioned) having a sole estate of interest or being seised in fee-simple of and in any manors, lands, tenements, rents, or other hereditaments in possession, reversion, remainder, or of rents or services incident to any reversion or remainder, shall have full and free liberty, power and authority to give, dispose, will, or devise to any person or persons (except bodies politic and corporate) by his last will in writing, all his said manors, lands, tenements, rents, and hereditaments, or any of them, at his own free will and pleasure."

He emphasised the words which have been underlined (here italicized) in the above passage and contended that the law as laid down there should be applied to the present case. It is always unsafe to rely on stray passages found in English Law Books and to treat them as stating either the whole of the law on the subject to which they relate or the present law applicable to cases in this country. The passage referred to occurs in a part of the book which describes how the law relating to transfer of property developed in England in the different periods of history after the Norman Conquest. It was pointed out that it was the well-known policy of English law to favour alienations and to discountenance every attempt to tie up property unreasonably; or in other words, to create a perpetuity. The feudal system which prevailed in England for a long time was, however, directly opposed to this view. Under the heading "Alienatio rei praefertur juri accrescendi (Co. Litt. 185-a) alienation is favoured by the law rather than accumulation" the author discusses the different steps by which restrictions which were, in accordance with the spirit of the feudal laws, imposed upon the alienation of land by deeds, were gradually relaxed. It was further pointed out that the power of disposing of land by will was equally opposed to the policy of feudal law. The learned author observes (p. 291) :

"Consequently, although land was devisable until the conquest, yet shortly afterwards, it became inalienable by will and so remained until the enactment of the statutes 32 Hen. VIII, c. 1, and 34 & 35 Hen. VIII, c. 5."

Then follows the passage on which reliance was placed by Mr. Siraj Husain. But what is stated there is not the present law in force in England far less law applicable to cases in this country. As pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 8, p. 88, para. 142 :

"Apart from the provisions of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts, a corporation aggregate is as much entitled to take property under testamentary disposition as an ordinary person, for the Wills Act repealed all the former statutes restricting corporations from taking under such a disposition, and itself imposed no restriction of any kind: (Wills Act 1837 (7 Will IV & 1 Vict. c. 26), S. 2 (repealed)."

There is no doubt now that even in England land may be granted to a corporation sole (by a deed) and a corporation sole may acquire land under a will (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 8, para. 141). But whatever be the law in England, there can be no doubt that there is no restriction in Indian law to a corporation taking property under a will. The first of the contentions therefore fails.

[4] The second contention raised with reference to the rule of perpetuity is equally without substance. The rule of perpetuity briefly put is: No bequest is valid where the vesting of the thing bequeathed is delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the time of the testator's decease and the minority of some person who comes into existence at the expiration of that period and to whom the thing bequeathed is to belong if he attains full age. The fact that a corporate body may hold property for ever is no infringement of the rule of perpetuity. The will was to take effect immediately on the death of the testator, Sheo Ratan, and the property bequeathed vested in the Sabha forthwith; hence no question of the bequest offending against the rule of perpetuity arises. The appeal is without substance and is dismissed. Respondent 1 will get his costs from the appellant.

Misc. Appeal No. 53 of 1945, Decided on 25-9-1947, from order of Special Judge, 1st Grade, Unao, D/- 28-5-1945.

(a) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S 20—Decrees under S.14 passed—Proceedings cannot be quashed under S. 20 even if claim is subsequently entertained and determined.

When once decrees under S 14 have been passed, the Special Judge cannot quash proceedings under S.20 even if a bona fide claim is subsequently entertained under S. 11 (2) proviso and determined by him : 31 A. I. R. 1944 Oudh 277; 34 A. I. R. 1947 Oudh 66 and Misc. Appeal No. 14 of 1944, Approved. [Para 17]

(b) Interpretation of statutes — Plain language—Effect to be given to its plain meaning even if serious anomalies may result thereby.

It is one of the cardinal principles of the interpretation of statutes that, where the language is plain and unambiguous and admits of but one meaning, the Courts must give effect to it according to its plain meaning and they are not justified in departing from it even though serious anomalies result or what the Court conceives to have been the intention of the Legislature is not carried out. [Para 6]

(c) Interpretation of statutes — Harmonious construction — Meaning of words depends on context — All parts of Act to be considered together — Words in one part to be so construed as to be consistent with other parts and intention of legislature.

The meaning of the words used in any portion of the statute must depend upon the context in which they are placed. Moreover in interpreting an enactment all its parts must be considered together as forming one whole and it is not in accordance with sound principles of construction to consider one section, or group of sections alone, divorced from the rest of the statute. Further, so far as possible, that construction must be placed upon words used in any part of the statute which makes them consistent with the remaining provisions and with the intention of the Legislature to be derived from a consideration of the whole of the enactment. The words may be given a wider or a more restricted meaning than they ordinarily bear if the context requires it: 19 A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 152, Ref. [Para 6]

(d) Interpretation of statutes — Amending Act —Vested rights cannot be allowed to be abrogated unless such intention is clearly expressed.

It would not be in accordance with sound principles of construction to allow vested rights to be abrogated by action under the amendment unless there was clear indication of an intention on the part of the Legislature to allow that to be done. [Para 14]

Judgment.—The respondents made an application under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act, and notices under S. 11 of the Act were published in the Gazette on 8-1-1938. Claims were filed and were disposed of by the Special Judge on 15-12-1942 Thereafter no application having been made under S 20 of the Act, claims by creditors were taken up and decrees were passed in their favour on 5-3-1943. Gur Charan, the appellant, obtained a decree for Rs. 24,000. The Special Judge passed an order for the transmission of the decrees passed by him to the Collector but this was not in fact done since, in connexion with an appeal in this Court, the transmission of decrees had been stayed by an order dated 28-1-1943.

[2] On 3-1-1945, one Sheo Prasad filed a claim under S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act, in respect of a few bighas of "haqqiat mutafarriqua." The delay in filing this claim was excused under the proviso to S. 11 (2) of the Act and, on 15-5-1945 it was allowed. Eleven days later, the landlord-applicant prayed that, under S. 20 of the Act, proceedings be quashed, and this was done by an order passed on 28-5-1945, without notice to the other parties.

[3] Gur Charan Lal, the principal creditor, appealed and a division bench of this Court, finding that there is a conflict of opinion between this Court and the High Court at Allahabad as to the interpretation of S. 20 and as to whether an application can be made under that section in circumstances such as the present, has referred the following question for determination by a Full Bench :

"Whether when a bona fide claim has been entertained under the proviso of S. 11 (2), and has been decided by the Special Judge, an application under S. 20 can be entertained although the claims under S. 14 have been determined and the decrees have been passed?"

[4] The Encumbered Estates Act is not happily worded and the interpretation of various provisions contained in it has caused considerable trouble to the Courts and anomalies and differences of opinion have resulted. In respect of the matter before us, three division benches of this Court have laid down the proposition that, if decrees under S. 14 of the Act have been passed, proceedings cannot be quashed under S. 20. These cases are : 1944 O. W. N. 297,[1] 1946 O W.N. 258[2] and the unreported decision in Misc. Appeal No. 14 of 1944.[3] In the judgment in the first of these decisions the question is discussed while the other two decisions follow the first case. In the last case an application was made for review of judgment on the ground that the remarks in the first case were obiter dicta and that, in any case, the decision was incorrect. This application for review was rejected and it was ruled that the remarks were not obiter dicta but were necessary for the decision of the case. It was also held that the opinion expressed in that case did not call for reconsideration.

[5] It is true that none of these cases was exactly similar to the present case. In the first two of the cases mentioned, the claim was not entertained as the conditions laid down in the proviso to S. 11 (2), Encumbered Estates Act, were not fulfilled. Thus there was no decision of the case on the merits. In the third case there was a decision of the claim on the merits but the claim was rejected, though this does not make any difference in principle, since even the rejection of a case on the merits is a "determination". This case was not available to the Counsel for the parties since it has not been reported and was not laid before the division Bench which has referred the case. On the othar hand, in (I. L. R. 1945 ALL. 588=A. I. R. 1946 ALL. 508)[4] a division Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in a case in which the circumstauces were very similar to those in the present case, held that S. 20 of the Encumbered Estates Act allowed the quashing of proceedings even after decrees under S. 14 of the Act had come into existence. The learned Judges considered that the use of the word "any" before the word "claim" in S 20 gave it a wide scope. They held that, in the absence of any exception or proviso to S. 20, they were bound, on the language of the section, to hold that when a claim under the proviso to S. 11 (2) is decided by the Special Judge, a fresh period of limitation for making an application under S. 20 commences. In view of this difference of opinion, it becomes necessary for us to examine the language of the Statute, but before we do this, it will be as well to summarise some of the well-established rules relating to the interpretation of Statutes.

[6] It is one of the cardinal principles of the interpretation of Statutes that, where the language is plain and unambiguous and admits of but one meaning, the Courts must give effect to it according to its plain meaning and they are not justified in departing from it even though serious anomalies result or what the Court conceives to have been the intention of the Legislature is not carried out. It is, however, equally well settled that the meaning of the words used in any portion of the statute must depend upon the context in which they are placed. Moreover, in interpreting an enactment all its parts must be considered together as forming one whole and it is not in accordance with sound principles of construction to consider one section, or group of sections alone, divorced from the rest of the statute Further, so far as possible, that construction must be placed upon words used in any part of the statute which makes them consistent with the remaining provisions and with the intention of the Legislature to be derived from a consideration of the whole of the enactment. The words may be given a wider or more restricted meaning than they ordinarily bear if the context requires it. These principles are so well settled that it is not necessary for us to quote authority to support them but it would be useful to refer to a Full Bench decision of this Court in 9 O. W. N. 229.[5] In that case on a consideration of the remaining provisions of the statute, the Full Bench greatly cut down the meaning to be given to general words used in S. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863).

[7] Coming then to a consideration of the policy of the Legislature as derived from the provisions enacted by it, we find that the first objective was that proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act should be commenced and terminated as expeditiously as possible, though unfortunately, this objective has not been attained. It was a measure enacted to give relief to encumbered estates, the burden upon which had become very heavy owing to great economic depression and the consequent increase in the value of the currency. Thus immediate relief was required, and efforts were made to secure it. Section 4 limits the time, within which applications could be made, to one year, with some extension if the circumstances justified it from the date of the enforcement of the Act. Sections 9 and 11 originally fixed short periods of time for making claims to property and to money decrees Section 7 (1) results in a stay of all suits and execution proceedings by which creditors sought to enforce their rights and S. 14 gives the date of the making of the application as the point of time at which liabilities were to be determined, that is to say, a moratorium for the payment of all debts, principal as well as interest, was granted and, for the period no provision was originally made for the protection of the interests of the creditors from destructive and wasteful acts by the debtor who continued in possession. At the same time S. 26 fixed the year of the application as the year on the basis of which the ability of the landlord to pay instalments was to be determined and it was considered that all the property available then, even movable property, would continue to be available-vide Ss. 24(1) and 19(2). Section 7, sub-ss. (2) and (3) forbid the execution of decrees and all dealings with property until certain stages in the proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act have been passed, that is to say, they hold up all transactions relating not only to land but to all the property of the debtor which is the subject-matter of the proceedings. These, as well as other provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, clearly indicate that the Legislature contemplated that proceedings under that Act would be completed very expeditiously.

[8] We next come to a consideration of the procedure to be followed in disposing of proceedings under the Act. These proceedings are divided into four stages. First there is the preliminary stage, namely the stage of presenting an application before the Collector, filing a written statement before the Special Judge and getting notices under Ss. 9 and 11 of the Act published in the Gazette. Failure to comply with the provisions of the Act, or of the rules framed under it, or a default in the prosecution of the case at this stage entails the penalty of dismissal of the application. The next stage is the stage of an enquiry into the extent of the landlord's property. Claims to property were to be made within three months of the publication of the notice in the Gazette and, originally, no extention of time was allowed. Within one month of the completion of the enquiry under S. 11, the landlord-applicant had a right, which the Court was bound to enforce, of getting the proceedings quashed under S. 20 of the Act. During this period of one month no decrees under S. 14 of the Act were to be be passed: vide S. 11 (3). Thereafter comes the third stage, namely the determination of claims to money and finally the fourth stage, namely proceedings to liquidate the debt, for which the case goes back to the Court of the Collector. Once the stage contemplated by S. 20 is past there is no provision for the termination of proceedings which must continue their course till liquidation of debt takes place in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Even if the landlord-applicant dies the proceedings are to be "continued as nearly as may be possible in all respects as if the landlord were living."

[9] No doubt the choice given under S. 20 is offered at the stage at which it is offered for two reasons. Firstly, on the determination of claims to property the position is crystallised and the landlord-applicant is in a position to know how much property is available for the satisfaction of his debts. He also knows the full extent of the claims for money against him because claims which have not already been made under the provisions of Ss. 9 and 10 of the Act are, by virtue of S. 13, deemed "for all purposes and on all occasions to have been duly discharged". Secondly, no rights have arisen in favour of creditors by having decrees passed in their favour. It is no doubt true that decrees will, by this time, have been passed in favour of persons having a right to property but their rights will not be adversely affected by reason of the quashing of the proceedings since there is no impediment in their way in establishing them in civil Courts. In the case of creditors, however, the position is different because if their decrees are set aside, the priority which they acquire by reason of those decrees over persons who have become creditors since the commencement of the proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act, is lost and they are placed on the same footing as the subsequent creditors. Thus their rights under decrees will be materially affected.

[10] The scheme of the Act, as well as the considerations which we have just mentioned, lead us to the conclusion, in agreement with the three decisions of this Court to which we have referred in an earlier part of this judgment, that an order quashing proceedings can only be passed before any decrees have been passed under S. 14 of the Act. We consider that the provision of the Act, which prohibits the passing of decrees under S. 14 before the period allowed for applying to get proceedings quashed conclusively shows that the Legislature meant that the landlord-applicant was to make his choice before his creditors had obtained decrees for money against him.

[11] It is no doubt true that the general word "any" has been used before the word "claim" but this is so not because any occasion could arise for a claim to be disposed of after the passing of decrees under S. 14—we have just shown that this was not possible under the Act, as it originally stood—but because the Legislature wished to make it clear that it was not necessary for the landlord—applicant to wait till all the claims under S. 11 had been disposed of but that it was possible for him to apply when any one claim had been disposed of.

[12] We were also pressed with the argument that, on this construction, the words "notwithstanding anything contained in S. 18" in S. 43

(a) of the Act have no meaning. It is contended that these words clearly indicate that decrees under S. 14 might have been passed before the proceedings are quashed, since S. 16 relates only to the effect of decrees passed under that section. These are words which occurred in the unamended Act also.

[13] Under the Act, as it then stood, no decrees could have been passed under S. 14 before the quashing of proceeding because S. 11·(3) expressly forbade the passing of such decrees so long as the period fixed for making an application for quashing had not expired and it was certainaly not contemplated that any decrees would be passed after such an application had been made but before it was disposed of. Thus it appears that these words were inserted by the Legislature not to indicate that there could be any quashing of proceedings even after decrees under S. 14 of the Act, had been passed but, as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said in respect of some words used in S. 3 of the Oudh Estates Act, " ex abundanti cautela"— vide 11 O. W. N. 977[6] at p. 983.

[14] Thus under the unamended Act there can be no doubt that proceeding could only be quashed so long as the stage for passing decrees under S. 14 had not arrived. Then came the amendment. It would not be in accordance with sound principles of construction to allow vested rights— the rights under decrees passed under S. 14— to be abrogated by action under the amendment unless there was clear indication of an intention on the part of the Legislature to allow that to be done.

[15] In the present case the amendment was made not for the benefit of the landlord-applicant but because it was realised that the period of three months was too short for the purpose of enabling persons, who had no connection with the landlord-applicant or with his creditors but whose property had wrongly been entered in the list of the landlord's property by the landlord himself or by his creditors, to file claims. It was felt that injustice had resulted, the consequences of which might be serious; but there is no indication that the Legislature intended that; in making provision for removing this injustice, whatever had passed, or whatever proceedings had in the meanwhile taken place, between the landlord or his creditors should in any way be affected or that proceedings should be in any way delayed.

[16] It is worthy of note that, in spite of the addition of the proviso to S. 11 (2) allowing claims to be filed even at a stage when all decrees under S. 14 had been passed and the case had been forwarded to the Collector, S. 11 (3) and S. 20 have both been left unaltered and no amendments have been made even to the Rules framed by the Government under the powers conferred by S. 54. In the absence of any such amendment there is no reason for giving to the words "any claim" in S. 20 a more extended meaning than that which they had under the unamended Act, nor can it be assumed that the Legislature intended to confer any fresh right upon the landlord-applicant to apply for the quashing of proceedings and consequently the setting aside of decrees already passed, the right originally conferred having already terminated by efflux of time.

[17] Having regard to all these considerations, we see no reason to differ from the opinion consistently held by this Court and expressed in three decisions of division Benches to which we have referred and we answer the question referred to the Full Bench as follows:

"When once decrees under S. 14 of the Encumbered Estates Act have been passed the Special Judge cannot quash proceedings under S. 20 of the Act, even if a bona fide claim is subsequently entertained and determined by him."

[18] The case will now be laid before theB ench for disposal.

Baldeo Singh — Plaintiff — Appellant v. Achal Singh and another — Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 100 of 1942, Decided on 4-11-1947, from decree of Civil Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 30-5-1942.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11—Suit against Hindu widow by third person—Compromise — It operates as res judicata in subsequent suit between third party and reversioner if compromise is bona fide and for benefit of estate — This principle applies in case of talukdar's widow.

If a litigation is fought out bona fide between a Hindu female and a person who threatens the estate, the decision in that litigation operates as "res judicata" in a subsequent litigation between the third party and the reversioner. The mere fact that the person with whom the litigation was fought was not a Hindu widow but a talukdar's wldow does not make any difference because, during her lifetime the talukdar's widow, though not an heir, alone represents the estate and no one else has any interest in it. Thus the same principles as to res judicata apply to a decision to which she was a party. Neither under the Hindu law nor under the Talukdari law does the reversioner claim under the widow. Section 11, Civil P. C., has been made applicable to a decision obtained against the widow because she represents the estate but this is subject to an important condition, namely, that the "decree must be fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate", and not have been obtained by fraud and otherwise. This does not mean that the widow must necessarily fight out the case. She may effect a compromise and the compromise decree will bind the estate as much as a decree after contest, provided always, that the action of the widow is for the protection of the estate. If, however, the widow looks not to the benefit of the estate but to her advantage and after securing her own rights abandons the reversion to the assailant, it cannot be said that she has entered into the compromise bona fide for the benefit of the estate: 5 AIR 1918 P C 87; 12 AIR 1925 P C 272 and 9 A I R 1922 Oudh 236, Rel. on. [Paras 17, 20]

Held on facts, that the final decision, the compromise and the withdrawal of the appeal in pursuance of it in a litigation between a talukdar's widow and a third person could not be said to have been arrived at in such a way as to bind the estate and it could not operate as res judicata against the plaintiff in a subsequent suit. [Para 21]

(b) Succession Act (1925), S. 61 — Plea of undue influence — Such importunity as takes away the free agency of testator, must be proved — Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), S. 11.

In the case of a will where a plea of undue influence on the testator is taken, what is required to be proved is not "undue influence" as such but "such importunity as takes away the free agency of the transferor or testator." [Para 22]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 111—Will—Plaintiff pleading undue influence—Evidence not disclosing use of undue influence — Burden is on plaintiff to substantiate his plea—Court must however determine whether evidence adduced by legatee is sufficient to remove all suspicion—Evidence Act (1872), S. 10.

Where in a suit challenging the validity of a will in favour of the defendant, the plaintiff pleads exercise of undue influence by the father of the defendant on the testator on the ground that he stood in the position of active confidence to the testator, but the evidence does not establish this, the burden lies upon the plaintiff to substantiate his allegations of undue influence. [Para 24]

Of course, in spite of this, when considering whether the will has been proved to be the voluntary act of an intelligent testator the burden of which rests upon the propounder of the will, the Court must bear in mind any suspicious circumstances that exist and must determine whether the evidence adduced by the legatee is sufficient to remove all suspicion: 9 A.I.R. 1922 PC 366, Rel. on. [Para 25]

Annotation : ('46-Man.) Evi. Act, Ss. 101 to 103, N. 52; S. 111, N. 3.

(d) Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), S. 13A (2) Interpretation — Remoter male agnate of testator is covered by S. 13A (2) in absence of nearer male agnate.

Section 13A cannot be read by itself but must be considered along with Ss. 14 and 15. The plain intention of Ss. 13A, 14 and 15 is that so long as the estate remains in the talukdar's family, no matter how remotely connected the legatee might be, it will continue to be governed by the Act while if it is bequeathed to a stranger, a person between whom and the testator there is no heritable blood it will cease to be governed by the Act. All that S. 13A (2) provides is that the person must be one "who might in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded." It does not provide that he must be a person coming within any particular clause of S. 22. The use of the words "in the absence of nearer heirs" indicates that the Courts are to determine the possibility of succession of the legatee to the testator in the absence of any person standing between him and the testator in the line of heirship. Such an event would presuppose the absence of male agnates nearer in degree than him to the testator and in that event he would be the nearest male agnate and entitled to succeed as such. Thus a legatee who is a remoter male agnate is covered by cl. (2) of S. 13A if there is no nearer male agnate of the testator. [Paras 39, 40, 41]

[2] This pedigree is admitted except for the fact that the defendants allege that Chandika Bakhsh Singh was the eldest, and not the youngest, son of Sadhan Singh. Moreover, the defendants put forward a fuller pedigree to show the connection between defendant 1 and the last holder, Shahdeo Bakhsh Singh. This pedigree, which has been held by the learned Civil Judge to have been proved—a finding which is not challenged in appeal—shows that defendant 1 is the great-grandson of Sheo Dayal Singh who had been adopted by Sardar Singh, a descendant of Mardan Singh grand-uncle of Ganga Singh.

[3] Sheoambar Singh, mentioned in the above pedigree, was the taluqdar or Taluqua Osah, district Rae Bareli, and his name was entered at No. 203 and 93 in lists I and II prepared under S. 8 of Act I of 1869. He was thus a taluqdar to whom the provisions of Act I of 1869 applied and it is agreed that all the property mentioned in lists A, B and C attached to the plaint was governed in his hands by the Act. He died on 1st September 1871 and his widow, Anand Kuer, entered into possession of his estate, although nearer heirs under S. 22 of Act I, his brother Mahip Singh, and his real nephew, Sheo Sahai were then alive. On 21st October 1877, Babuain Anand Kuer died and Sheo Sahai entered into possession. Sheo Sahai died in December 1903 and was succeeded by his only son Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh. About two years after he had succeeded to the property on 18th June 1910 Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh then a childless man, about 36 years of age, executed a will in favour of Achal Singh, defendant 1, and deposited it with the District Registrar under S. 43, Registration Act. Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh lived for anothor 10 years and died on 5th December 1920. He left no issue and his widow, Babuain Saghunath Kuer, took possession of the property ignoring the will.

[4] Achal Singh, the legatee, was not well off, consequently he sold a ten annas share in the property to the father of defendant 2 and the vendor and the vendee jointly instituted a suit on 30th August 1921 for recovery of possession of the estate on the basis of the will (vide Ex. A–52). The widow resisted the claim and challenged the genuineness of the will and alleged the absence of mental and physical capacity in the testator to execute the will (vide Ex. A-53). The trial Court held that Babu Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh had executed the will and that he was possessed of a sound disposing mind at the time. It, however, held that the will was not properly registered as required by S. 13A, Oudh Estates Act. It, therefore, decreed the suit with regard to non-taluqdari property but dismissed it with regard to taluqdari property (Ex. A-55). Both parties appealed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and the Judicial Commissioner's Court, after a difference of opinion between the two Judges composing the Bench which heard the appeal had been resolved by reference to third member of the Court, uphold the will in its application to taluqdari property also. The appeal of the widow was, therefore, dismissed and that of Achal Singh was allowed (vide Exs. A-68, A-33 and A-40). The widow appealed to His Majesty in Council but the appeal was compromised and it was agreed that Babuain Saghunath Kuer should remain in possession during her lifetime and after her death the plaintiffs of that suit should obtain possession.

[5] On the 23rd April 1929, Partap Singh, first cousin of the plaintiff, instituted a suit against the present defendant 1 as well as against his own brothers and the present plaintiff, for recovery of possession of the ornaments and other movable property left by Saghunath Kuer. He claimed that Babuain Saghunath Kuer was the taluqdar of Osah and he and his brothers and cousin were her heirs being the reversioners of her husband (vide Ex. 4). Achal Singh set up the will and claimed to be entitled to the property either as legatee of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh or the heir of Saghunath Kuer (EX. 16 and EX. 1). In the oral pleadings the plaintiff's counsel denied the genuineness and validity of the will. He also pleaded that the will, if held proved,

"was obtained by undue influence by defendant 1's father inasmuch as he was in a position of active confidence and he dominated the will of Sahdeo Bakhsh" (Ex. 1).

This suit was decreed and the movable property was obtained by Partap and others (EX. A-5).

[6] The suit, out of which this appeal arises was instituted on 18th February 1941. With the plaint the plaintiff put forward a pedigree which showed him as not only one of the four persons nearest in the degree but also as the seniormost in the line among the male agnates of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh. The statement of the plaintiff's claim in the plaint is not very happily worded but the case is made quite clear in the oral pleadings of 19th February 1942, when the plaintiff's advocate stated that his first case was that Babu Sahdeo Singh was the last male-holder of the Osah estate and was governed by the Oudh Estates Act. He died on 5th December 1920. After his death, his widow Mst. Saghunath Kuer, succeeded to the estate as the widow of a Taluqdar. She died on 20th February 1919. The plaintiff is the nearest heir to the Taluqa..... His case in the alternative is that Mst. Anand Kuer widow of Sheoambar Singh, remained in possession of the estate from 1st September 1871 to 21st October 1887 adversely against the rightful heir under the Oudh Estates Act. Therefore the Taluqua went out of the Act and consequently succession to the property known as Taluqua Osah is governed by ordinary Hindu law.

[7] The will in favour of Achal Singh is noticed in the plaint in which it is said that the will

"was executed under undue influence, is not admissible and is void and ineffectual as against the plaintiff ....."

The pleas were made clearer in paragraph 15 of the replication and in the oral pleadings of 19th February 1942. Paragraph 15 stated:

"Babu Bishnath Singh who was the father of Babu Achal Singh, always remained in company of Babu Sahdeo Singh and managed all his business and whatever Babu Bishnath Singh said, Babu Sahdeo Singh used to act upon. Babu Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh was a man of weak understanding and all along remained ill."

[8] In the oral pleadings it was stated:

"Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh being physically and mentally weak and was constantly ill and consequently the estate was managed and everything was done by Bishnath Singh, father of Achal Singh. Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh did what he was asked to do by Bishnath Singh and was completely under the influence of the latter."

It was also pleaded that the will was not registered as required by law—S. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act—and that Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh was not of sound disposing mind owing to a severe attack of small pox in May 1910 which had caused a serious deterioration in his health and had left after-effects lasting till NOVEMBER 1910.

[9] The defendants pleaded that (1) the will was a genuine and valid document which was properly registered since the legatee defendant 1, was also a male agnate of the testator within the meaning of S. 22 (10) of the Act I of 1869 and (2) That the decision in the case of Achal Singh against Babuain Saghunath Kuer operated as res judicata. Other pleas were also taken with which we are no longer concerned since they are not raised in the appeal. They will, however, appear in the issues framed by the trial Court which were as follows:

"1. Was Mardan Singh a son of Nehal Sah and is the line of Mardan Singh downwards as given in para. 1 of the written statement correct? 2. Was Hardayal Singh second son of Sadhan Singh and is plaintiff the nearest heir of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh according to the rule of lineal primogeniture? 3. (a) Did Sheoambar Singh execute a will on 14th August 1871 in favour of his wife? If so, is it invalid and its effect upon the possession of his widow? 3 (b) Whether the estate went out of the Oudh Estates Act by virtue of the possession of Mst. Anand Kuer or not? If so, its effect on the present case? 4. (a) Was Sahdeo Bux Singh the executant of the will dated 18th June 1910, not possessed of sound disposing mind? 4 (b) Was the will in question properly registered? 5. Was its execution brought about under undue influence as alleged by the plaintiff? 6. (a) Whether the property left by Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh is governed by ordinary Hindu Law? 6. (b) If so, is plaintiff his next reversioner and entitled to succeed under Hindu Law? 7. Did Mt. Saghunath Kuer die on 20th February 1929 and is the suit within time? 8. Is the suit not maintainable unless and until the decree of Mt. Saghunath Kuer is set aside? 9. Did defendants enter into a compromise with Babuain Saghunath Kuer on 8th November 1926 and is plaintiff bound by it? 10. Is the plaintiff bound by the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in re: Babu Achal Singh and another v. B. Saghunath Kuer and does the decision operate as res judicata. 11. To what relief and mesne profits, if any, is plaintiff entitled?

[10] Upon these issues the learned Civil Judge found:

1. That the pedigree set up by the defendants is proved and Achal Singh is a male agnate of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh. This finding is not challenged in appeal except as regards seniority among the sons of Sadhan Singh. 2. That it is not proved that, among the Sons of Sadhan Singh, Har Dayal was senior to Chandika Bakhsh Singh. 3. That Sheoamber Singh did not execute a will in favour of his wife. 4. That the estate did not pass out of the Act by reason of the possession of Mt. Anand Kuer after the death of Sheoambar Singh. 5. That Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh was of sound disposing mind on 18th June 1910 when he executed the will in question (Ex. A-20). 6. That the will was properly registered by deposit with the registrar inasmuch as S. 13A (2) of Act 1 of 1869 applied to the case 7. The will was not executed under undue influence. 8. That the issue as to whether the property passed out of the Act was not argued by the plaintiff and in any case this was not so because there was no evidence that Mt. Anand Kuer prescribed anything more than a life estate. 9. That the suit is within limitation. 10. That it is not necessary to set aside the decree against Saghunath

Kuer before any relief can be granted to the plaintiff. 11. That although Babuain Saghunath Kuer and the present defendants did enter into a compromise that does not bind the plaintiff. 12. That the decree in the previous case does not operate as res judicata.

[11] As a result of these findings the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and his learned counsel has raised four points in this appeal : 1. That, whether he belongs to the senior line or not, the plaintiff is one of the nearest reversioners and entitled to oust a trespasser since the property is governed not by Act 1 of 1869 but by the Hindu law. 2. That, even if the property is governed by Act 1 of 1869 the plaintiff is entitled to it under S. 22 (10) of the Act as the nearest male agnate of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture; 3. That the will was obtained by the exercise of undue influence by Bishunath Singh, father of Achal Singh, upon Sahdeo Singh and 4. That the will was inoperative because it was not registered in accordance with the provisions of S. 13A (3) of Act 1 of 1869 and sub-ss (1) and (2) of that section were inapplicable to it.

[12] Mr. Wasim in reply contended : 1. That the estate was still governed by Act 1 of 1869 and consequently the heir has to be found under S. 22 (10) and not under the Hindu law. 2. That the plaintiff has not been proved to be the nearest male agnate of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh within the meaning of S. 22 (10). 3. That the will in favour of Achal Singh was not obtained by "undue influence." 4. That the will was validly registered; and 5. That the pleas as to the invalidity of the will be barred by the rule of res judicata.

[13] With regard to the question as to whether the property in suit is governed by the Oudh Estates Act or by the Hindu law the answer depends upon the nature of the estate acquired by Mt. Anand Kuer. It is agreed that, in the absence of any will, she could not succeed to her husband in the presence of his brother and nephew. Her possession was, therefore, adverse and she was in possession for over 12 years. If, however, her possession was adverse only to the extent of a limited extent, it came to an end on her death and the title of the real owner was relieved of the cloud which had been cast upon it. If, on the other hand, it was absolute then succession took place on her death and the property passed out of the purview of Act 1 of 1869: vide (1934) 11 O. W. N. 351.[1] Thus the question whether the property was governed by the Act or not depended upon proof of particular facts and those facts were agreed upon by the parties who agreed that the estate in the hands of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh was governed by Act 1 of 1869. This could only be if Mt. Anand Kuer had prescribed for a life estate. Indeed the plaintiff clearly asserted in his plaint that she succeeded as a Hindu widow and in the oral pleadings, that she was in possession as a taluqdar's widow. This position was accepted by the defendants who agreed that the estate continued to be governed by the Act. In view of this agreement of the parties it is not possible to hold that Mt. Anand Kuer prescribed for any estate greater than a widow's estate. On her death, therefore, succession did not take place to her and the estate reverted to the real owner who accordingly obtained possession. The estate in the hands of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh was accordingly governed by Act 1 of 1869 and the plaintiff can only succeed if he proves that he is the nearest male agnate of Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture.

[14] On the question of seniority of the plaintiff's line, reliance is placed on the testimony of five witnesses P. W. 1 Jagannath, P. W. 2 Ram Swarup, P. W. 4 Jagdamba Singh, P. W. 5 Partab Singh and P. W. 7 Baldeo Singh, the plaintiff. The learned civil Judge has discussed this evidence at considerable length and we agree with him that it cannot be accepted as proving that Chandika Bakhsh Singh was not senior to Har Dayal Singh among the sons of Sadhan Singh. (After discussing the evidence of these witnesses the judgment proceeded.)

[15] Thus the evidence which the plaintiff has led to prove the seniority of Har Dayal Singh is not satisfactory and it cannot be accepted as discharging the onus which rested upon him.

[16] This finding is sufficient to dispose of the appeal since when the plaintiff has failed to establish his title it does not matter whether the defendants have any title or not. The case, has however been fully argued by the learned counsel on all the points and we think it advisable to indicate our decision on these points also.

[17] We shall first take up the question of "res judicata". It is not disputed that if a litigation is fought out bona fide between a Hindu female and a person who threatens the estate, the decision in that litigation operates as "res judicata" in a subsequent litigation between the third party and the reversioner : vide 45 I. A. 168[2] and 52 I. A. 398.[3] In the present case the person with whom the litigation was fought was not a Hindu widow but a taluqdar's widow. It is agreed that this does not make any difference because, during her lifetime the taluqdar's widow, though not an heir, alone represents the estate and no one else has any interest in it. Thus the same principle as to "res judicata" apply to a decision to which she was a party : vide 25 O. C. 189[4] at pp. 199 and 200, which was affirmed in appeal by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 52 I. A. 398.[3] We have, therefore, to see whether there is any such decision in the present case as may operate as "res judicata."

[18] The decision which is relied upon is the decision in the suit which Achal Singh and the then Raja of Sheogarh instituted against Babuain Saghunath Kuer to recover possession of the estate from her on the basis of the will now in suit (EX. A-52). In that suit Babuain Saghunath Kuer challenged the will and alleged that it was not genuine or valid and that the testator was not possessed of a sound disposing mind. She also pleaded that the will failed for want of registration according to law (EX. A-53). The trial Court held that the will was proved and that the testator did possess a sound disposing mind but that the will could not have effect in respect of the taluqdari property because it was not properly registered. It accordingly decreed the suit with regard to the non-taluqdari property but dismissed it with regard to the taluqdari property, (EX. A-55). Both parties appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The appeal of Babuain Saghunath Kuer was dismissed while the appeal of the present defendants was allowed and it was held that the will was properly registered (EXS. A-68, A-33 and A-40). Babuain Saghunath Kuer filed a further appeal to His Majesty in Council but before the hearing of the appeal, the matter was compromised and the appeal was withdrawn: (vide, plaint and written statement, para. 6).

[19] Mr. Wasim contends that the effect of the withdrawal of the appeal was that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner remained the final decree and continued to have binding effect. He relied upon 6 Mad. 43[5] at p. 44, 1 ALL. 293,[6] 15 Bom. 370[7] and 14 Pat. 633.[8] Of these, only the first decision is in point since only in that case was the appeal withdrawn as a result of a compromise. The Madras case too will, however, not govern this case because in that case the compromise was between a male-holder and another person. In the present case the compromise is between a person holding a widow's estate and a third person and this makes all the difference.

[20] Neither under the Hindu law nor under the Taluqdari law does the reversioner claim under widow. Section 11, Civil P. C., has been made applicable to a decision obtained against the widow because she represents the estate, but this is subject to an important condition namely that the "decree must be fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate" and must not have been obtained by fraud and otherwise: vide 45 I. A. 168[2] at p. 178. This does not mean that the widow must necessarily fight out the case. She may effect a compromise and the compromise decree will bind the estate as much as a decree after contest provided always that the action of the widow is for the protection of the estate. If, however, the widow looks not to the benefit of the estate but to her advantage and after securing her own rights, abandons the reversion to the assailant, it cannot be said that she has entered into the compromise bona fide for the benefit of the estate.

[21] In the present case Achal Singh had won throughout and the will had been upheld. It was open to the lady not to appeal further if she was advised that no advantage could be gained by the estate and that would have been an end of the matter. She, however, did pursue the matter further and appeal to His Majesty in Council. Before that appeal could be heard, she agreed to a compromise under which she obtained possession of village Osah, shown in the plaint as having a net profit of Rs. 3107-11-6, in lieu of her "guzara" which had been fixed at Rs. 1500 in the will, and abandoned the rest of the estate and the reversion in Osah to Achal Singh, vide, para. 20 of the written statement. It cannot be said that action was a bona fide one for the protection of the estate though it may have been fully justified in so far as the protection of her own rights went. Thus the final decision, the compromise and the withdrawal of the appeal in pursuance of it cannot be said to have been arrived at in such a way as to bind the estate and it cannot operate as res judicata against the plaintiff. We have, therefore, to determine the pleas on the merits.

[22] We have already stated in an earlier part of this judgment the exact plea of undue influence which has been taken. We would first of all note that this being a case of a will what is required to be proved is not "undue influence" as such but 'such importunity as takes away the free agency of the transferor or testator"—vide, S. 11 of the Act 1 [I] of 1869 and S. 61, Succession Act.

[23] Much argument was addressed to us as to the person upon whom the burden of proof lay in such a case. Mr. Hyder Husain contended that the evidence disclosed that Bishnath Singh stood in a position of active confidence to Sahdeo Singh and that, therefore, by reason of S. 111, Evidence Act, the burden lay upon Achal Singh, the son of Bishnath Singh, to prove the good faith of the transaction. On the other hand, Mr. Wasim contended that the evidence on the record did not disclose any relation of active confidence and that in any case if a will has been proved to have been duly executed, it is for a person asserting it, to prove that it was obtained by such importunity as took away the free agency of the testator. He relied upon 1920

A. C. 349,[9] (1868) 1 P. & D. 481,[10] (1858-67) 175 E. R. 860,[11] (1885) 11 P. D. 81[12] and 99 I. C. 571[13] and contended on the basis of 38 I. A. 15[14] at p. 19 that the same principle applied to India also.

[24] It is really not necessary for us to consider this question in the present case because even if we were to accept the principle of law for which Mr. Hyder Husain contends, the evidence which has been adduced does not disclose that Bishnath Singh stood in a position of active confidence to Sahdeo Singh. This evidence consists of some letters written by Sahdeo Singh to Bishnath Singh, Exs. A-34 to A-39 and Exs. A-40 to A-43 and oral evidence. All that this evidence discloses is that Bishnath Singh managed the estate of Sahdeo Singh who consulted him off and on. It does not establish that Bishnath Singh was ever the general agent of Sahdeo Singh or that he had any very wide or unlimited powers of management. Indeed, the letters prove the reverse and show that Sahdeo himself took an intelligent interest in the work which he supervised and in respect of which he issued instructions from time to time. Sahdeo was not a weakling or a young man who had just emerged into maturity. In these circumstances it cannot be held that Bishnath Singh stood in a position of active confidence to Sahdeo Singh. The burden was, therefore, in any case upon the plaintiff to substantiate his allegations of undue influence.

[25] Of course, in spite of this, when considering whether the will has been proved to be the voluntary act of an intelligent testator, the burden of which rests upon the propounder of the will, we must bear in mind any suspicious circumstances that exist and we must determine whether the evidence adduced by the legatee is sufficient to remove all suspicion—49 I. A. 413[15] at p. 417.

[26] In the present case the learned Civil Judge has found that the testator possessed a sound disposing mind and that the will was his voluntary act. The first finding was not challenged in this appeal. It is supported not only by the oral evidence produced by the defendant but also by the letters to which reference has already been made. They show that Sahdeo Bakhsh took an intelligent interest in his affairs and there is no indication of mental weakness. All these letters were written between the date of the execution of the will and the death of Sahdeo Bakhsh a period of close on 10 years.

[27] As to the voluntary execution of the will—apart from the question of undue influence—the will was deposited by the testator himself in a sealed cover with the District Registrar under the provisions of Ss. 42 and 43, Registration Act. This was done about 10 years before the death of the testator and he made no attempt during all this time to withdraw it or alter it in any way. D. W. 6, Ganga Prasad, an attesting witness, proves the due execution of the will. Thus apart from the question whether any such importunity as would take away the free agency of the testator is proved, the due execution and attestation of the will is proved.

[28] We come then to a consideration of the question whether the requisite degree of importunity has been established. Mr. Hyder Husain contends that all that the words of S. 11 of Act 1 of 1869 require to be proved is undue influence and it is not necessary or always feasible, to give direct evidence of such influence which may be inferred from the circumstances. Before we come to consider whether any such inference can be drawn from the facts of the present case we shall briefly review the law on the point.

[29] In (1885) 11 P. D. 81[12], at p. 82, Sir James Hannen said:

"To be undue influence in the eye of the law there must be, to sum it up in a word—coercion. It must not be a case in which a person has been induced by means such as I have suggested to you to come to a conclusion that he will make a will in a particular person's favour, because if the testator has only been persuaded or induced by considerations which you may condemn, really and truly to intend to give his property to another though you may disapprove of the act, yet it is strictly legitimate in the sense of its being legal. It is only when the will of the person who becomes a testator is coerced into doing that which he does not desire to do, that it is undue influence.

"The coercion may, of course, be of different kinds it may be in the grossest form, such as actual confinement or violence, or a person in the last days or hours of life may have become so weak and feeble that a very little pressure will be sufficient to bring about the desired result, and it may even be that the mere talking to him at that stage of illness and pressing something upon him may so fatigue the brain that the sick person may be induced, for quietness' sake, to do anything. This would equally be coercion, though not actual violence."

"These illustrations will sufficiently bring home to your minds that even very immoral considerations either on the part of the testator or of some one else offering them do not amount to undue influence unless the testator is in such a condition, that if he could speak his wishes to the last, he would say, 'this is not my wish, but I must do it.'"

"If, therefore, the act is shown to be the result of the will and wish of the testator at the time then, however, it has been brought about—for we are not dealing with a case of fraud—though you may condemn the testator for having such a wish, though you may condemn any person who has endeavoured to persuade and has succeeded in persuading the testator to adopt that view—still it is not undue influence."

[30] This exposition of the law is so clear and complete that it is not necessary for us to refer to numerous other authorities on the subject. We would, however, say that this is the law which has been deliberately adopted by the Indian Legislature with regard to wills, vide S. 11 of Act 1 of 1869 and S. 61, Succession Act, both of which lay down that a will is only void if the importunity is such as to take away the free agency of the testator. If the testator is responsible for what he is doing and it is really a case of his being persuaded to do it, that does not invalidate the will. The difference between undue influence and persuasion is a real one and will be found set out in Basu's Commentary on the Indian Succession Act, Edn. 3, p. 185.

[31] In this connection it will be useful to refer to the following remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 47 I. A. 1[16] at pp. 3 and 4:

"It is a mistake . . . to treat undue influence as having been established by a proof of the relations of the parties having been such that the one naturally relied upon the other for advice, and the other was in a position to dominate the will of the first in giving it. Up to that point 'influence' alone has been made out. Such influence may be used wisely, judiciously and helpfully. But whether by the law of India or the law of England, more than mere influence must be proved so as to render influence, in the language of the law, 'undue'. It must be established that the person in a position of domination has used that position to obtain unfair advangage for himself, and so to cause injury to the person relying upon his authority or aid."

[32] Again in 38 I. A. 13[14] p. 22 their Lordships say :

"The onus of proving the testamentary capacity of Shib Singh of course lies on those by whom the will is propounded and in their Lordships' opinion they have discharged that obligation by the evidence indicated above. Such evidence is not displaced by mere proof of serious illness and of general intemperance, and yet that is as far as the evidence of the respondents can fairly be said to go. So far as the charge of undue influence is concerned, all that is shewn on the part of those attacking the will is that there was motive and opportunity for the exercise of such influence by the defendants, and that some of them in fact benefited by the will to the exclusion of other relatives of equal or nearer degree. Circumstances of that character may sometimes suggest suspicion, and would certainly lead the Court in the present case to scrutinise with special care the evidence of those who propound the will, but in order to set it aside there must be clear evidence that the undue influence was in fact exercised, or that the illness of the testator so affected his mental faculties as to make them unequal to the task of disposing of his property."

[33] Judged by the standards laid down in the above decisions the case of undue influence is not established. Mr. Hyder Husain relied upon the following circumstances for inferring undue influence. He contended that the testator was only 36 years of age and there was no ill-feeling between him and his wife: he had consequently no reason to despair of issue and the will should in any case, have provided for the eventuality of the birth of a son. Moreover, if he had so despaired, it would be natural for him as a Hindu, to adopt a son. Furtber there was no special attachment on the part of the testator for the legatee and the sole reason for the will in his favour seems to have been the special position occupied by Bishnath Singh vis-a-vis the testator. Moreover, the widow and the mother were both excluded from the succession—not to mention the near reversioners — in favour of a distant collateral. It is contended that in these circumstances, when taken in conjunction with the dominating position of Bishnath Singh, undue influence should be inferred since the will was executed in favour of his son, then a young boy.

[34] The first thing which was required to be proved to make out this case was that Bishnath Singh was in a position to dominate the will of the testator. Neither the oral nor the documentary evidence proves this. All that is established is that Bishnath Singh was managing the estate of the testator. It is not, as if he was an old servant of the estate who had had ample opportunities of establishing his hold on the mind of the youth as he advanced to manhood. P. W. 5 Partab Singh states that Bishnath was never in the service of Sheo Sahai father of Sahdeo Bakhsh nor had he ever done any work for him. There is no evidence against this and it is the plaintiff's own evidence. Thus Bishnath had only been in the service of the estate for about a year and a half at the most and that at a time when Sahdeo Bakhsh was a fully grown up man. Moreover, the letters which have been filed, Exs. A-34 to A-39 and A-41 to A-43, clearly established that Sahdeo Bakhsh was by no means a mere non-entity, accepting whatever Bishnath did but that he always had opinions of his own and issued directions to Bishnath to do things in a particular manner. It is no doubt true that the letters are couched in respectful terms but that was only to be expected having regard to the ordinary courtesies of Indian life because Bishnath was not merely the manager but also the uncle of Sahdeo Singh, however remote the relationship might be. The mere fact that Sahdeo entrusted the management of the estate to Bishnath cannot prove that the latter dominated the will of the former. Thus the very foundation upon which the plea of undue influence is based is not established.

[35] The circumstances too upon which reliance is placed do not make out a case of undue influence. The testator informs us in the will that he did despair of issue and as a matter of fact, although he lived another ten years, he did not have any issue. The testator might of course have adopted a boy but if desired to benefit Achal Singh, he could not in accordance with ordinary conceptions do so by adoption because Achal Singh was the only son of his father. Moreover he thought that he was attaining this object by directing in the will that Achal Singh (alias Lal Madho Singh) "having remained joint with them, shall obey and be subservient to them" (EX. A-20). These words indicate that be expected the legatee to live with his mother and widow and to look up to them as his elders in the family. Further from an estate yielding a net income of about Rs. 12,000, he made a maintenance allowance of Rs. 1,500 per annum payable to each of the two ladies for their pocket expenses. This did not include other expenses such as food, conveyance etc., which the testator contemplated though he did not expressly so provide should remain a charge upon the estate. According to the conception of Sahdeo Bakhsh this provision would have been quite sufficient for the comfort of two widowed ladies neither of whom would have any issue on his death. Moreover, it may well be, as has been stated in EX. A-20, the will, that he did not consider either of the two ladies competent to manage the estate. As to the exclusion of the near reversioners, there is evidence on the record to show that he was not on good terms with this branch and the pedigree establishes that by blood relationship, Achal Singh was as closely related, though by reason of an adoption his great-grandfather had passed to a more distant branch of the family. Even so, however, Achal Singh belonged to nearest line next after that of Sadhan Singh. Thus all these circumstances do not justify any inference that the execution of the will was obtained by undue influence.

[36] This is, however, not an end of the matter. There is evidence to negative undue influence. Even if we do not attach any value to the oral evidence adduced by the defendants there is sufficient documentary evidence in this respect. The first piece of evidence is EX. A-61 which shows that on 16th December 1913 Babu Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh, on being elected a member of the Co-operative Bank, Ltd., of Rai Bareli declared that Achal Singh was his heir. Then we have the written statement filed by Babuain Saghunath Kuer (EX. A-33) in the suit by Achal Singh against her to establish the will. In this document the will is challenged on various grounds but no allegation as to undue influence is made. Obviously, if there had been any such influence the testator's wife would have been in the best position to know and her failure to take any such undue influence. [sic] Thus, we agree with the learned Civil Judge that it is not proved that the execution of the will, EX. A-20 was obtained by the exercise of undue influence.

[37] We come now to consider the last point raised, namely that the will fails for want of registration. Mr. Hyder Husain contends that EX. A-20 being the will of a Taluqdar is required to be registered "according to the law for the time being in force relating to the registration of assurances," under S. 13A (3) of ACT I of 1869, since sub-ss. (1) and (2) of that section were not applicable. He relies in support of this proposition upon the judgment of Dalal A. J. C., in the previous case relating to this estate between Achal Singh and Babuain Saghunath Kuer, EX. A-33. The learned Judicial Commissioner did not agree with this view (vide EX. A-33) and on the case being referred to the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner the decision went against Mr. Dalal's opinion (EX. A-40). The decision is, therefore, not relied upon as an authority but Mr. Hyder Husain contends that the reasoning of Mr. Dalal should be adopted by us in preference to the reasoning of the other two members of the Court. Neither of the learned counsel have been able to refer us to any other authority on the interpretation of S. 13A in so far as it is involved in this case.

[38] Section 13A of Act, I of 1869, reads as follows:

"13A. No taluqdar or grantee and no heir or legatee of a taluqdar or grantee and no transferee referred to in S. 14, and no heir or legatee of such transferee shall have power to bequeath his estate, or any portion thereof or any interest therein:

1 (a) to a person who would have succeeded to such estate, portion or interest under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate, had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate at the time when the bequest took effect.

(b) to his daughter,

(c) to a son of his daughter, or

(d) to a younger son.

except by a will duly executed and attested;

2. to a person who might in the absence of other heirs have succeeded to such estate, portion or interest under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate, had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate at the time when the bequest took effect,

Except by a will duly executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the testator and presented for registration within one month from the date of its execution and registered;

3. to any person other than a person mentioned in clauses (1) and (2), except by a will duly executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the testator and registered according to the law for the time being in force relating to the registration of assurances but presented for such registration within one month from the date of its execution."

It is now agreed that Achal Singh is a male agnate of Sahdeo Singh but it is contended that the advantage of S. 13A (2) accrues only to the nearest male agnate and not to all male agnates so that a will to a remoter male agnate comes under S. 13A (3).

[39] According to the words of S. 13A (2) there is no difficulty in holding that the will in favour of Achal Singh comes within its purview. All that that section provides is that the person must be one "who might, in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded." It does not provide that he must be a person coming within any particular clause of S. 22. There can be no doubt that Achal Singh would in the absence of nearer heirs have succeeded to the testator.

[40] The use of the words "in the absence of nearer heirs" indicates that we are to determine the possibility of succession of Achal Singh to the testator in the absence of any person standing between him and the testator in the line of heirship. Such an event would presuppose the absence of male agnates nearer in degree than him to the testator and in that event he would be the nearest male agnate and entitled to succeed as such. As Mr. Daniels remarked in his judgment in the case of Saghunath Kuer v. Achal Singh (Ex. A33):

"What the learned Subordinate Judge means by talking about a possibility upon a possibility I cannot pretend to say. The simple question for decision is whether the words 'in the absence of nearer heirs' include the absence of nearer heirs under Cl. (10) of S. 22, or are confined to the absence of heirs who would tak under the preceding clauses. Nor can I follow him in drawing any conclusion from the absence of the words 'and his male lineal descendants' in Cl. (10) of S. 22. He is willing to allow that a will in favour of any descendant of a brother however remote is governed by sub-s. (2) of S. 13A because the male lineal descendants of the brother are mentioned in S. 22 (5), but would exclude a will in favour of the second nearest agnate because the words 'male lineal descendants' do not occur in S. 22 (10). But on any construction of S. 13A, these words are unnecessary. When the Legislature is dealing with a single line of succession such as that of a brother of a son they are appropriate but they are quite out of place in dealing with an agnate. Inasmuch as the nearest agnate is to be found according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, as soon as the father dies the son becomes the nearest agnate in his place. As soon as that particular line is exhausted the senior representative of the next senior branch becomes the nearest agnate. In fact as soon as the nearest agnate dies the next nearest steps automatically into his place. A person who would be a remote agnate in presence of another agnatic heir becomes at once the nearest agnate in his absence."

[41] Further, it must be remembered that S. 13A cannot be read by itself but must be considered along with Ss. 14 and 15. By S. 14, if the bequest is to a person mentioned in cls. (1) and (2) of S 13A, the estate continues to be governed by the Act while if the bequest is to a person not covered by these clauses the estate ceases to be governed by the Act. If Mr. Hyder Husain's argument were accepted, an estate bequeathed to a male agnate in the presence of a nearer male agnate would cease to be governed by the Act while a bequest to a cognate, if he were the nearest amongst cognates, would keep the estate within the Act although he is a remoter heir than the remotest male agnate. This is not construction which commends itself to us. The plain intention of Ss. 13A, 14 and 15 is that so long as the estate remains in the taluqdar's family, no matter how remotely connected the legatee might be, it will continue to be governed by the Act while if it is bequeathed to a stranger, a person between whom and the testator there is no heritable blood it will cease to be governed by the Act.

[42] Mr. Dalal raised various objections to the contention which we adopt and out of deference to his opinion we think it proper to consider those objections one by one. He was of the opinion that cl. (2) "includes every kind of heir mentioned in the amended S. 22 and none else." From this he proceeds to hold that, since cl. 10 of S. 22 provides only for the nearest male agnate and as the plaintiff was not such male agnate at the time of the taluqdar's death when the bequest took effect he does not come under that clause. This reasoning entirely ignores the force of the words "in the absence of other heirs" used in Cl. (2) of S. 13A. In the absence of such heirs including nearer male agnates—Achal Singh would be the nearest male agnate and he would have succeeded under S. 22 Cl. (10).

[43] It was also urged that the words "under the provisions of the Act applicable to such estate" used in Cl. (2) of S. 13A would be redundant if the interpretation which we have adopted is accepted. This is not so. Unamended S. 13 recognised a privilege in favour of the person who would have succeeded "under the provisions of this Act or under the ordinary law. . . ." The words now used were intended to make it clear that if a person were not an heir under the provisions of this Act, even though those provisions be S. 22 (11) or S. 23, he could not be entitled to the benefit of S. 13A Cl. (2) even though he might have succeeded to an interest in the estate under the law that would have been applicable to him had the Act not been passed.

[44] We accordingly hold that Achal Singh was a person who was covered by cl. (2) of S. 13A of Act, I of 1869 and that a will in his favour could be validly registered by deposit with the District Registrar under the provisions of Ss. 42 and 43, Registration Act. Thus, this ground of attack on the will also fails. We accordingly uphold the will, in favour of Achal Singh as genuine, valid and binding.

[45] The result is that the judgment and decree of the learned Civil Judge are upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs. This appeal was preferred in forma pauperis. The appeal having been dismissed the appellant shall pay the court-fee which would have been paid to him if he had not been remitted to sue as a pauper.

Judgment.—Execution Decree Appeals Nos. 9 and 10 of 1942. In these execution of decree appeals two principal points are raised for determination: (1) Whether the judgment-debtor's applications which purported to be under Ss. 47 and 151, Civil P. C, and which gave rise to the proceedings culminating in what may be called decrees under appeal could be entertained as valid objections to the execution of the two simple money decrees which had already been satisfied. (2) If so were the aforesaid applications barred by time?

[2] The facts are these In execution of two simple money decrees of 1932 the appellant Rani Kaniz Abid purchased certain zamindari shares of her judgment debtor Zahir-ud-din in 1939. The sales were held under Sch. 3 of the Code and were confirmed by the learned Munsif, Barabanki, in whose Court the execution proceedings were initiated. Possession was delivered in due course and the decrees were satisfied and the execution cases consigned to records. At the time when the proceedings in the Court of the sale officer were going on the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (10 of 1937) was in force by virtue of subsequent legislation extending its operation. Section 3 of the enactment prescribed inter alia that all proceedings in execution of money decrees passed previously by civil Courts against agriculturists should be stayed during the currency of the Act if the judgment-debtor's land revenue or rent did not exceed Rs 250. On 29th June 1938 the decree-holder's general agent accordingly stated before the sale officer that from inquiry he was satisfied that Zahir-ud-din's land revenue exceeded Rs. 250 but as he did not know the exact figure the judgment-debtor might be summoned and inquiries might be made from him. Notice was, therefore, issued to Zahir-ud-din for 16th July 1938. He was served personally and the notice was signed for him by his son Raziuddin. The judgment-debtor, however, did not appear before the Court of the Sale Officer on 16th July 1938. He died soon afterwards, and his sons Raziuddin, Rafiuddin and Fasihuddin were substituted in place of their father on 17th December 1938. On that date a rubkar giving intimation of substitution was sent to the Sale Officer. Thereafter Fasihuddin and one of his brothers, namely Rafiuddin who also appended his signature on the petition applied for stay of execution on the ground that the judgment debtor's land revenue was less than Rs. 250, and that he was entitled to the benefits of S. 3 of Act 10 of 1937. This claim was not persisted in and the applications were dismissed for default on 28th April 1939. The property was sold and purchased by Rani Kaniz Abid on 20th June 1939. About a month later the sale was confirmed. The case was consigned to records and possession of the property was delivered to the decree-holder on 5th November 1939. About three months after that date Raziuddin preferred two applications in the Court of the Munsif, Barabanki, alleging that the sales were void as they were in contravention of s. 3, Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act He claimed that the land revenue paid by him and his brothers did not exceed the specified amount and the proceedings in the two executions, therefore, ought to have remained stayed. The claim was contested and he failed to obtain the declaration from Munsif's Court. In appeal, however, he succeeded. The Courts below differed on the two points stated above as also on the question regarding the amount of the applicant's land revenue. Rani Kaniz Abid has appealed.

[3] On the first principal point of controversy considerable amount of case law has been cited before us in respect of the parties' respective view points, but we are of opinion that it is unnecessary to consider it in the facts and circumstances of the case. We will assume for the sake of argument that the judgment-debtor's applications, which in substance prayed for setting aside the sales, were permissible as objections under S. 47 or S. 151 of the Code as held by the Court of first appeal and we will proceed to consider the second principal point stated above, namely, whether the limitation bar operated to put Raziuddin out of Court.

[4] It has been mentioned above that the sales were made on 20th June 1939. Their confirmation took place on 25th July 1939. An application to set aside a sale in execution of decree whether by a judgment-debtor or any other person under the Civil Procedure Code must be made within 30 days of the date of the sale according to Art. 166 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act. The applications with which we are concerned were not filed till 9th February 1940. Apparently, therefore, they are time-barred. The applicant, however, alleged in para. 2 of his petitions that he came to know of the sales only 25 days previous to the date of his objections that he was in service abroad and that the decree-holder's agent acted fraudulently throughout. These allegations were not pressed before the learned Munsif or before the lower appellate Court apparently because there was no reliable evidence to support them. The Court of first instance held that Art. 166 applied and the objections were barred by time. The Court below on the contrary arrived at the conclusion that the execution sales were void and the applications were governed by three year's rule under Art. 181. If this approach to the question was correct there is no doubt that the applications were well within limitation. The question whether the sales were or were not void depended on the further question whether the Court which executed the decrees possessed the jurisdiction to sell. Obviously the Court would have jurisdiction to proceed with execution unless and until facts entitling the judgment-debtor to the benefit of S. 3 of Act 10 of 1937 were satisfactorily made out. In absence of proof which the judgment-debtor was called upon to adduce after notice served on the applicant's father it cannot be said that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to proceed to sell the property. The burden to make out a case for the application of S. 3 lay on Zahiruddin and after his death on his sons. There was no obligation on the Court to stay its hands in spite of their failure. Distinction must be drawn between a case where there is total absence of jurisdiction and a case where the executing Court works out the decree under an impression that the legislative injunction to keep the proceedings stayed did not apply. In the former case the sale is void and can be ignored. In the latter case it is voidable and can be set aside if irregularity is established. The importance of the distinction was pointed out by Spencer J. in 47 Mad. 525.[1] In the cases before us the sales were not vitiated by any inherent lack of jurisdiction because the conditions precedent to the application of S. 3 of Act 10 of 1937 were not established. The fact that the evidence now adduced by the judgment-debtor has induced the lower appellate Court to hold in his favour that the land revenue of Zahiruddin was less than Rs. 250 does not appear to have much materiality for, it may render the Court's action irregular and may entitle Raziuddin to set aside the sales but until they are avoided they must stand and cannot be ignored as void. We are clear, therefore, that Raziuddin's applications of 9th February 1940, were governed by Art. 166. As such they were belated and should have been rejected.

[5] We accordingly allow these appeals, set aside the orders of the learned Additional Civil Judge, Barabanki, and restore those passed by the learned Munsif. The appellant is entitled to her costs of this Court and of the Courts below.

Judgment. — This is an execution of decree appeal. The sole point which falls for determination is whether the third application for execution of the decree, dated 14th December 1934, was barred by time. This question depends upon the view that may be taken of the second application for execution which was presented by the decree-holder, Kr. Shyama Kumar Singh on 15th December 1939, and rejected on 30th September 1940. It is conceded that if the consequence of making the second application was to keep the decree alive as contemplated by Art. 182, Limitation Act, the execution cannot be time-barred. The Court of first instance allowed the judgment-debtors' objection on the plea of limitation. It did not, therefore, decide other matters in controversy and dismissed the application as barred. The lower appellate Court on the other hand held that the previous execution application of 15th December 1939, could be availed of by the decree-holder for holding that the present execution was within limitation. Since the decree the judgment-debtor had died. His representatives were the persons against whom the decree was sought to be executed, and they have come up in appeal against the remand order of the Court below.

[2] The learned counsel for the appellants has again pressed the point which his clients took up in the Courts below, and he has urged that the order dismissing the second execution conclusively determined that the application was incompetent. He says that the matter is no longer res integra. It appears to me that the question which was before the executing Court in 1939 is not exactly the question which arises for decision now. What is to be determined in the present case is whether the second execution application was a mere nullity or whether it could operate to keep the decree alive for a further period of three years after the orders thereon were passed. Article 182, Limitation Act, provides a period of three years from the date of the final order passed on an application made "in accordance with law" to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order. In order that the extension granted by this article may be available, it is necessary that the previous application must be one for execution or to take a step-in-aid of execution : that it must be "in accordance with law": that it was made to proper Court and that there was a final order on the application. It has been held in numerous cases that even though an application may be defective and was rejected on that ground, it could nevertheless be regarded as an application "in accordance with law," within the meaning of Art. 182. In 13 Luck. 162,[1] a Division Bench of this Court held that the expression "in accordance with law" should be taken to mean that the application, though defective in some particulars, was one upon which execution could lawfully be ordered. If on the other hand the omissions were such as to make it impossible for the Court to issue execution upon it, it should be held that such an application was not "in accordance with law." Section 51, Civil P. C., provides that > "Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may, on the application of the decree-holder, order execution of the decree."

[3] Section 146 of the Code authorises the taking of proceedings or the making of an application by or against a person claiming under the decree-holder. It follows that a decree may be executed either by the decree-holder himself or by those who claim under him namely his assignees. The fact that O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., makes a provision for execution of the decree by the assignees does not debar the person in whose name the decree stands from taking an action for satisfaction of the decree or for keeping his decree alive. Kr. Shyama Kumar Singh's application of 15th December 1939 must, therefore, be held to be "in accordance with law." In determining this point I need not concern myself with the reasons which actuated the executing Court in dismissing the second execution application on 30th September 1940. It is true that it took the view that decree-holder had divested himself of the power of the proprietor of the estate and was debarred from executing the decree. It is clear, however, that the disability to which the then executing Court referred cannot operate to render the application otherwise than in accordance with law for the purposes of Art. 182, Limitation Act. I have only to determine whether the defect which was pointed out in the second execution application of 1939 was or was not such as to make it impossible for the Court to issue execution upon it. The fact that the executing Court did not issue execution on it is scarcely of any materiality. I concede that if Raja Shyama Kumar Singh sought to resuscitate the second execution application or if he desired to execute it again during the subsistence of the trust, the finding given by the execution Court on 30th September 1940, might have stood in his way. The present application for execution was made by the president of the trust, and there is no doubt that he could avail himself of Art. 182 and of the application made by Kr. Shyama

Kumar Singh in 1939 for maintaining it. I hold, therefore, that the decision of the Court below was sound. This appeal must, therefore, fail and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Order. — The applicant, Gaya Prasad, obtained a decree against Ram Abhilakh and his son for a sum of Rs. 129-9-0 on 29th September 1926. The first application for execution of the decree was made on 4th September 1938, and this was stayed under Act 10 [X] of 1937 but later it was dismissed in 1941. In that application, execution was sought by sale of the agricultural land of the judgment-debtor as well as the trees standing on various plots. On 29th July 1942, the decree-holder again applied for execution and on 9th December 1942 he filed a declaration under section 4, U. P. Debt Redemption Act. The judgment-debtor also applied for amendment of the decree. In reply the decree-holder pleaded that the decree was not based on a loan and could not be amended. He further pleaded that in view of the declaration which he had made under section 4, U. P. Debt Redemption Act, the amendment could not be allowed. It appears that the file of the original case has been weeded out. The parties therefore led oral evidence to show the nature of the transaction which resulted in the decree. The judgment-debtor came into the witness-box and stated that originally he had bought some grain from the decree-holder and as he could not pay the price he had executed a bond for Rs. 60. Later this bond was renewed for Rs. 100 which consisted of the principal and interest on the previous bond.

[2] The trial Court held that the transaction in question was a loan and that by reason of proviso 3 to S. 4, sub-s. (3), U. P. Debt Redemption Act, the declaration could not operate so as to prevent the amendment of the decree. He accordingly allowed the amendment of the decree. The decree-holder has come up in revision under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and his learned counsel contends that the transaction was really one of purchase on credit and the fact that the promissory note was executed for the purpose would not bring it within the definition of loan contained in S. 2, sub-s. (9), U. P. Debt Redemption Act. He also contended that the application for execution which had been made before the enforcement of the Debt Redemption Act, did not come within the purview of proviso 3 to S. 4, sub-s. (3) of the Act.

[3] It is settled law that if goods are purchased on credit that does not amount to a loan, nor is the transaction in substance a loan. This has been laid down by a bench of this Court in 1936 O. W. N. 1158.[1] This is also the interpretation placed by the Allahabad High Court on the definition of loan contained in the Agriculturists Relief Act. The question, however, which falls to be determined in this case is whether the execution of the bond by the person who purchased the grain makes any difference in the relation between the parties. In 1939 A. L. J. 241[2] a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court has laid down the proposition that if a mortgage deed is executed by a person who purchases some property and is unable to pay for it at the time of the purchase the transaction is still one for the price of the article sold and does not evidence a loan. The learned Judge gives no reasons for his decision. A bench of the Allahabad High Court of which the same learned Judge was a member has held in A. I. R. 1945 ALL. 144[3] that if a promissory note is executed in satisfaction of the amount due under a decree, the promissory note evidences a loan as defined in the Agriculturists Relief Act. The learned counsel for the applicant sought to distinguish this last mentioned case on the ground that in that case the promissory note clearly mentioned the fact that the money had been received by way of a loan in exchange for the decree. In the case of every promissory note the person who executes it undertakes to repay a certain sum of money for consideration received. The exact words used cannot affect that relation which is established between him and the person in whose favour the promissory note is executed. The rights of the parties in respect of the unpaid purchase money of articles sold are quite different from the rights of the parties in a case where there has been a contract by which the liability has been converted into one evidenced by a bond or a promissory note. In the former case the person suing for recovery of the price must prove the sale and the rate at which the goods were sold. Moreover, he does not in every case get interest while in the case of a promissory note or bond it is presumed, unless the contrary is shown that consideration passed and the person in whose favour the document is executed is entitled to the interest specified in the document. In fact the parties agreed to terminate their old contract and replace it by a contract of loan. The execution of the bond is evidence of the intention of the parties to place themselves upon a new footing entirely. The result therefore of the execution of the bond was to convert the liability of the judgment-debtor for the unpaid price of the wheat supplied to him into his liability to pay the consideration of the bond. The transaction was therefore thus changed into a loan in the same way as a transanction of loan may by the execution of sale-to satisfy the loan, be changed into a sale.

[4] On the second question as to whether the declaration of the decree-holder is operative or not it has been held by this Court that proviso 3 to S. 4, sub-s. (3), Debt Redemption Act, applies also to cases in which execution has been sought prior to the enforcement of that Act : vide 1943 O. W. N. 133[4] and 1943 O. W. N. 150.[5] The same view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in A. I. R. 1942 ALL. 394.[6] The lower Court therefore, acted rightly in amending the decree.

[5] This application is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Wazir—Accused—Appellant v. Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 116 of 1947, Decided on 3-10-1947, from order of Sessions Judge, Gonda, D/-28-3-1947.

Penal Code (1860), S. 84—Essentials—Mere abnormality not enough—Proof of insanity—Person since death of his wife showing abnormal state of mind and believed to be insane by his father and others in his village—Person killing his sons without any motive—Person held suffered from complete unsoundness of mind and acquitted of murder.

Mere abnormality of the mind is not an excuse for the commission of crimes. To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the accused person was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or if he did know it that he did not know that he was doing what was wrong. Proof as to the state of mind with reference to cognitive faculties of a person said to be of unsound mind at the time of committing a crime is always an extremely difficult problem particularly in cases where a person has not exhibited any signs of violent insanity before the crime though he has shown some abnormality of the mind. Of necessity the Court must arrive at conclusion from surrounding circumstances such as the personal history of the accused, absence of motive particularly in multiple murders, want of preparedness or prearrangement and finally the connection or relationship of the murderer with victim. [Para 9]

A person, since the death of his wife and a child was in an abnormal state of mind and was believed to be insane by his father and others in the village and an attempt had been made to 'charm away his insanity'. There was no evidence against him of his cruelty or indifference towards his family. One day after his two sons about eight or ten years old had gone to bed, the person completely severed the heads of these two sons from the trunk and killed them without any motive.

Held that such a conduct could only be explained upon the hypothesis that he had gone completely mad and was not conscious of the terrible crime that he was committing. The frightful act was in itself to a very great extent substantial evidence of the fact that the person's cognitive faculties had been completely affected by reason of unsoundness of mind. He was therefore not guilty of murder. [Para 10]

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a jail appeal submitted on behalf of Wazir who has been convicted under S. 302, Penal Code, for the murder of his two small sons Rojat and Raza Mohammad Khan alias Rajai and sentenced to transportation for life by the Sessions Judge of Gonda.

[2] The facts alleged by the prosecution are that sometime during the night between 12th and 13th October 1946, the appellant murdered his two sons by severing their heads with a gandasa. The murder was discovered the following morning by Sulaiman. It is said that Sulaiman who lived next door called out to his son, the appellant, about having the bullocks ready for ploughing. On not receiving a reply, he went to the house and on entering it found one of the boys lying on a cot with his head completely severed from the trunk while the other with his head also severed was lying on the floor. He then raised an alarm and ultimately went and lodged a report (Ex. 1) on 13th October 1946, at 8 A. M. at police station Colonelganj. The appellant was arrested by police constable Sheonandan Singh who was on his way from the police station to the village in which the murder had been committed. It appears that the appellant himself was going to the police station. He was arrested and taken to the police station. Later, upon inquiry it is alleged, the appellant produced from under a heal of katia a gandasa which he handed over to the station officer.

[3] The appellant was ultimately sent up before a Magistrate who recorded a statement (EX. 7). Before the Magistrate he stated that his wife died of cholera in Chait since when his mind was not under his control. On the night of the occurrence, he and his children were asleep. He did not know what had come over him but during the night he cut up his two children. The children were about ten or twelve years of age. For the last six months he had been running about hither and thither since the death of his wife.

[4] In addition to the confession recorded, 11 witnesses were examined on behalf of the prosecution. Their statements are more or less of a formal character. There is absolutely no direct evidence to prove that the appellant had in fact committed the murder. His guilt is sought to be proved by circumstantial evidence and confession, EX. 7. The only circumstantial evidence is the recovery of blood-stained clothes which the appellant was wearing at the time of his arrest on his way to the police station and the alleged recovery of gandasa at his indication by the station officer said to be blood-stained.

[5] From the evidence of Sulaiman, P. W. 1 the father of the appellant, it appears that the appellant had four sons and three daughters. In Chait previous to the murder, the appellant's wife and one of his sons died of cholera. Since then the appellant's mind appears to have been unhinged. Of the remaining six children the eldest daughter is married and lives in her husband's house. The remaining two daughters live with Sulaiman himself and two boys, namely, Subrati and one of the murdered boys, namely, Raza Mohammad, normally lived with their uncle in village Kusehri ka Monja. Only one boy, namely, Rojat lived with his father, the appellant. It seems that Raza Mohammad had come only the day before the murder to see his father. It further appears that Sulaiman had taken the appellant to places for, in the words of the witness, himself, "charming away his insanity." He stated that when these fits of insanity came over the appellant he would not eat or do any thing but sit silently for long periods.

[6] The appellant was kept under observation in jail by the Civil Surgeon of Gonda who expressed the opinion that it was possible that on the day of the occurrence the appellant was incapable of knowing the nature of his acts. In cross-examination by the Government Pleader, the Civil Surgeon stated that during the time he was under observation, the appellant did not exhibit any sign of insanity but his mental condition was below normal and it was highly probable that he may have had a fit on the day of the occurrence as to have rendered him incapable of knowing the nature of his act.

[7] P. W. 6 Kali Prasad Singh inter alia stated that the appellant sometimes became insane for which he was given treatment without any effect.

[8] The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the guilt of the appellant had been established and though some evidence of the unsoundness of mind had been given there was no evidence on the record to establish that at the time of the commission of the offence, the appellant was of such unsound mind as not to know the nature of the act he was doing or that he was doing wrong. He, however, inflicted the lesser of the two punishments provided under the law, holding that "in the circumstances of the case and specially because there was no motive for the murders," the ends of justice would be met by a sentence of transportation for life.

[9] We have given this case our very anxious consideration and we do not feel satisfied with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge as to the culpability of the appellant. Proof as to the state of mind with reference to cognitive faculties of a person said to be of unsound mind at the time of committing a crime is always an extremely difficult problem particularly in cases where a person has not exhibited any signs of violent insanity before the crime though he has shown some abnormality of the mind. As the law stands, mere abnormality of the mind has never been accepted as an excuse for the commission of crimes. The law relating to criminal responsibility of a person said to be of unsound mind was laid down in England in the celebrated Mcnaughton case over a century ago by fourteen English Judges on questions put to them by the House of Lords, since when it has not only been the law in England but also in India. The answers given by the learned Judges to the House of Lords epitomised come to this that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act the person accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or if he did know it that he did not know that he was doing what was wrong. This legal test was embodied in S. 84, Penal Code. Though a century has elapsed during which the science of psychology has made great advances the law as then laid down has remained unmodified. Problems frequently arise as to what evidence can be considered to be sufficient to establish that at the time of the doing of an act by a person pleading insanity he did not know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or that what he was doing was not wrong. To our mind, it is absolutely impossible to give positive evidence as to the state of mind of any person about whom there is some history of abnormality of his mental condition. Of necessity, the Court must arrive at conclusion from surrounding circumstances such as the personal history of the accused, absence of motive particularly in multiple murders, want of preparedness or prearrangement and finally the connection or relationship of the murderer with the victim. Complete idiots, imbeciles and persons who are deprived of all understanding and memory can easily be shown as not responsible for the criminal offences and their cases do not present any difficulty in law Courts. The difficulty, however, arises in those cases where a person labours under a partial delusion or becomes a victim of sudden fits of insanity. A person for some undiscoverable reason may temporarily be afflicted with such a fit of insanity as to urge him to commit an atrocious act as the present without knowing the nature of the act he was committing or that what he was doing was wrong and yet ordinarily nothing can be specifically pointed to as showing unsoundness of mind. In such a case of necessity, one is forced to consider whether the act of a person who commits the murder of his own children without any motive can be explained upon any other hypothesis except an act of an insane person or at least of a person who had been temporarily afflicted with a fit of insanity which drove him to commit an act of such a terrible nature.

[10] In the present case the undisputed evidence on the record is that ever since the shock of his wife and child's death the appellant had shown some abnormality of conduct. He was believed to be insane by his father and others in the village and an attempt had been made to "charm away his insanity." There was no burden upon him in regard to taking care of his children because except for the youngest who remained with his father, all others had been living either with their grandparents or their uncle. One of the victims of this murder had come only a day before on a visit to his father. The appellant and his two children in the evening after taking their meal, had gone to bed in the normal manner. In these circumstances, the question which is pertinent to the problem before us is, why should the appellant against whom there is no evidence of cruelty or indifference to his family a man who had felt great grief on the loss of his wife and child have got up in the night and murdered his two young children who according to the medical evidence are said to be about eight and ten years of age by severing their heads completely from the trunk. Such conduct in a man like the appellant can only be explained upon the hypothesis that he had gone completely mad and was not conscious of the terrible crime that he was committing. To our mind, the frightful act was in itself to a very great extent substantial evidence of the fact that the appellant's cognitive faculties had been completely affected by reason of unsoundness of mind. Added to this, the evidence of his peculiarity of conduct since the death of his wife and child and the opinion expressed by the Civil Surgeon as to the possibility of the appellant being of such unsound mind at the time of committing the terrible murders of his two young children leaves little doubt as to the complete unsoundness of mind of the appellant at the time of committing the murders. We are, therefore, of opinion that this appeal must be allowed and the conviction and sentence set aside. We order accordingly.

[11] The next question to be considered is, what appropriate orders should be passed as to the appellant's future. We are satisfied on the evidence that the appellant had committed a terrible crime of which he was convicted, in a fit of insanity. He has, however, not since then exhibited any violent symptoms of unsoundness of mind. We are, however, required under S. 471, Criminal P. C. to direct his detention in safe custody and report the action taken to the Local Government. We are of opinion that in the present case, the appellant should be sent to a mental hospital to be kept under observation and if necessary treated for any symptoms of abnormality of mind and if it is found that he has regained normal mental balance, he may be released on such terms as the authorities then may think fit. Let a report of this be made to the Local Government.

The Municipal Board, Bahraich — Applicant v. Ram Lal—Accused—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 32 of 1947, Decided on 3rd October 1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Bahraich, D/- 5th February 1947.

U. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1916), S. 153—Bye-laws under — Bye-laws 2 and 7 of Bahraich Municipality—Rules for assessment and collection of terminal toll in Bahraich Municipality, R. 2—Person or cart entering into Municipal limits but not passing toll-bar—Toll cannot be charged.

Rule 2 of the rules for assessment and collection of terminal toll in the Bahraich Municipality cannot be construed to mean that tolls become payable the moment a cart or person enters the municipal limits irrespective of whether a toll-bar is passed or not. The rule should be construed to mean that entry into such area of the municipality as was not covered by the toll barrier is to be free from the payment of toll and it is only when a toll barrier is crossed that the toll becomes payable. [Para 6]

K. P. Misra — for Applicant.
Siraj Husain — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This is an application in revision against an order of acquittal. The applicant is a cartman and was prosecuted for non-payment of toll while carrying certain goods from the Sheo Rice Mills in Bahraich to the railway station. He was convicted under bye-laws 2 and 7 made under S. 153, Municipalities Act and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 10 or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for two weeks by a Bench of Second Class Magistrates. The applicant preferred an appeal to the District Magistrate who set aside the conviction and sentence and acquitted the applicant. The Municipal Board of Bahraich, who are the complainants, moved the Additional Sessions Judge in revision against the order of acquittal but he refused to interfere. The Municipal Board has now come to this Court in revision against the order of acquittal.

[2] The facts which influenced the learned District Magistrate in acquitting the accused are that the question with regard to payment of terminal tax or toll on goods going to or coming from the Sheo Rice Mills had been agitated as far back as the year 1920. It was claimed by the Sheo Rice Mills that their mill lay outside Municipal limits and that though some portion of the road which was used by them for carting their goods to and from the station lay within Municipal limits, it was partly a private road and partly a District Board road and therefore the Municipality was not justified in charging them either toll or terminal tax. By G. O, No. 863/XI-D.-D./100 dated 3rd June 1920, the Local Government agreed with the recommendation of the Commissioner of the Division that no terminal tax, etc., on goods to and from the Sheo Rice Mills should be levied by the Municipal Board, Bahraich. It also appears that the Municipal Board unsuccessfully attempted to enlarge the limits of Bahraich Municipality in order to bring the Sheo Rice Mills within its ambit. Although goods have been carried to and from the railway station never before has there been any question of exacting toll upon carts passing along the road leading to the Mills.

[3] The learned counsel for the applicant has strenuously contended that the Courts below have completely confused the two different forms of tax that could be levied by the Municipal Board. One is a terminal tax which is exacted on goods imported into Municipal limits and the other is a terminal toll levied upon vehicles, other conveyances, animals and laden coolies entering Municipal limits. It is urged that what the Government exempted was the terminal tax and not the toll which is normally levied at the toll barriers. Assuming that the learned counsel is correct that there was some confusion in the minds of the Courts below as to whether terminal tax was exempted by Government as well as toll, or whether terminal tax alone was exempted and further assuming that terminal tax alone was exempted, the question which requires determination is whether having regard to the rules, any liability has been incurred by the opposite party for not having paid the toll tax. From a plan given to me by the learned counsel for the applicant, which he says was made by the Municipal Board, it appears that there are two parallel roads, one from the railway station and the other from the goods-shed, both running southwards and joining the main road which runs east and west and ultimately leads into the City and Civil Lines. Thus two junctions are formed by the three roads. The toll barrier is shown on the main road between the two junctions and the traffic on either of the road coming from the station or the goods shed and going into the City or Civil Lines is controlled by the one toll bar.

[4] The road coming from the goods shed is dotted with red meant to show the route carts take from the railway premises to the mills and vice versa. It is admitted that the carts going to or coming from the mills do not come anywhere near the main road or the toll bar. Half way along the road from the goods shed another road joins it and goes in a north-easterly direction and after crossing the railway lines, reaches the mill, which has already been stated, is outside the Municipal boundaries.

[5] The learned counsel for the opposite party relying on rules 2 and 3 of the rules for the assessment and collection of terminal toll in Bahraich Municipality has contended that although a person or cart may enter into Municipal limits, no toll is chargeable unless it passes the barrier situated in that portion on the Municipal area which is intended to be sheltered by the barrier and which no loaded carts etc., may enter without paying the toll. Rule 2 runs as follows:

"No person shall bring within the limits of Bahraich Municipality any head load or laden vehicle, pack animal or bahngi on or in respect of which terminal toll is leviable until the toll due has been paid to such person and at such barrier as the Board may from time to time appoint."

[6] The learned counsel for the applicant, however, contends that upon a strict interpretation of R. 2 tolls become payable the moment a cart enters even the remotest part of Municipal limits and it would not make any difference whether a toll bar is passed or not and he invites me to construe the rule with absolute strictness. If the rule is construed in the manner I am invited to do by the learned counsel, startling absurdities would inevitably result, for prima facie the language of the rule is capable of the construction that no cart or person of the class mentioned in the rule can enter within Municipal limits before the toll is paid. It, therefore, follows that a person in charge of a cart or carrying a load must stop outside the Municipal boundary or deposit the load there and walk to the toll bar which may be a considerable distance away, to pay the toll and then return to his cart or load. If this construction is accepted, it would obviously result in harassment and inconvenience to the public at large and it is difficult to conceive that the Municipal Board intended the rule to operate in that manner. To me it is clear that by placing the barrier at some distance from the actual limits of the Municipality, it was intended that entry into such area as was not covered by the barrier was to be free from the payment of toll and it was only when a toll barrier was crossed, that the toll became payable. Had it been otherwise, the toll barrier would have been erected at the actual boundary of the Municipality and not where it is, which I understand is about half a mile from the goods shed and the railway station.

[7] Moreover, it is obvious that the toll tax or terminal tax is intended to be levied only if persons of the class mentioned in the rule entered Municipal limits for the purpose of transacting business there. People in transit who of necessity have to traverse some parts of the area within the Municipal limits were never intended to be taxed. I am fortified in this opinion by the attitude of the Government in the matter of the unsuccessful attempt made by the Bahraich Municipal Board to impose terminal tax upon the goods intended for the Sheo Rice Mills.

[8] I am satisfied that the opposite party has been rightly acquitted. There is no substance in this application and it is accordingly dismissed.

Asst. Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant, Jagnarain, and three other persons, Thakur Jagdamba Singh, Pandit Raj Narain and Phoolchand held licences in Form "C" under the U. P. Controlled Cotton Cloth and Yarn Dealers' Licensing Order for the retail sale of cloth in village Jagnipur, District Partabgarh and each of them was carrying a business of his own.

[2] By an order dated 28-1-1946, called the Partabgarh District Controlled Cotton Cloth Distribution Order, 1946, the District Magistrate, however, altered this system and divided the villages in the district into groups each of which was to be attached to a group of license holders in Form "C". The groups were to be formed by the license-holders on their own responsibility subject to the approval of the District Supply Officer and they were to elect a head to be known as the group holder and they were to supply cloth to all householders in the group of villages to be attached to them. They were required to keep the shop of the group open from 9 A. M. to 6 P. M. every day except some holidays. The order also prescribed that the mode of publication under R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules was to be that the order would be published in two local newspapers, would be affixed at some conspicuous places mentioned in the order and would be proclaimed by beat of drum.

[3] The four persons mentioned at the commencement of this judgment formed themselves into a group and elected Jagnarain their group holder. The group shop was also located in his house and it carried on business. Jagnarain maintained the accounts of the group in accordance with conditions 6 and 7 of the license.

[4] On 4-4-1946 some of the householders residing in the village attached to this group complained to the Deputy Commissioner that the group-holders—excepting Jagnarain—were not giving them cloth and were selling to other persons who were not entitled to buy. An inquiry was ordered but before this could take place Jagnarain through his son also filed an application on 9-4-1946 complaining that the other members of the group were black marketting cloth and did not listen to him and had threatened to beat him when he stopped the issue of false receipts. This was also sent for inquiry. The inquiry appears to have led the authorities concerned to direct the prosecution of all the persons involved including the applicant on two charges, namely, (1) that they had failed to maintain the accounts in accordance with the conditions of their license and (2) that they had, without reasonable cause, closed their shop from 8th April to 12th April.

[5] The Magistrate before whom the case came for trial convicted all the accused persons holding that their liability was joint and several. All the accused appealed to the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge of Rai Bareli wholly dismissed the applicant's appeal and partly allowed the appeal of Jagdamba and others and set aside their conviction on the first charge holding that Jagnarain alone was liable to maintain the accounts. Jagnarain has applied to this Court in revision.

[6] The first contention of Mr. Misra, counsel for the applicant is that the Partabgarh District Controlled Cotton Cloth Distribution Order, 1946, never came into force because it is now agreed that it was never published in the local newspapers. In support of this contention he relied upon A.I.R. 1944 Nag 40,[1] A. I. R. 1945 Bom. 368,[2] A.I.R. 1946 ALL. 223[3] and 24 Pat. 29.[4] These decisions no doubt support his contention but they are no longer good law because probably with a view to meet the situation created by them, R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules was amended on 21-7-1945 by the addition of the following sub-rule:

"If, in the course of judicial proceedings a question arises whether a person was duly informed of an order made in pursuance of these Rules, compliance with sub-r. (1) or, in a case to which sub-r. (1A) applies, the notification of the order shall be conclusive proof that he was so informed; but a failure to comply with sub-r. (1):

(i) shall not preclude proof by other means that he had information of the order; and

(ii) shall not affect the validity of the order."

[7] In the present case it is amply proved that the applicant had information of the order and acted under it in joining a group created by it. He was, therefore, liable to prosecution for breach of the order which was a valid and operative order. His conviction, as well as that of the others under the order for not opening the shops on the dates specified cannot, therefore, be set aside and must be maintained.

[8] As to conviction of the applicant for the failure to maintain accounts that too cannot be set aside. The license in Form "C" was not superseded by the formation of a group and no new license was issued nor were any new conditions laid down. The formation of the group was done by the group holders and their own responsibility and their liabilities continued to be the same. Every license holder in Form "C" was, therefore, liable to maintain the registers and accounts (sic) was punishable under the Defence of India Rules. It is admitted that Jagnarain held a license in Form "C". He was, therefore, bound to see that conditions of that license were observed. The fact that others became associated with him in the responsibility would not diminish his responsibility. Each member of the group was liable to maintain the registers and accounts provided for by conditions 6 and 7 and their failure to maintain those registers and accounts made them liable to the penalty. The learned Magistrate rightly convicted them all and the fact that the Sessions Judge, on a wrong appreciation of the legal position, has acquitted three persons is no ground for the acquittal of the fourth person also.

[9] The result is that this application fails and is dismissed.

Criminal Ref. No. 27 of 1947, Decided on 6-11-1947, made by Addl. Sessions Judge, Bahraich, D/- 11-4-1947.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 145 — Jurisdiction — Failure to pass order under S. 145 (1) at any stage —No sufficient material on record to pass such order—Proceedings under S. 145 are without jurisdiction — Order attaching crops passed — Proper order in such case is to withdraw attachment and deliver crops to persons on whose land they were produced.

Normally criminal Courts cannot deal with cases of possession of immovable property. Section 145, however, gives them power to deal even with that class of cases but the condition precedent is that the Court should be satisfied that there exists an apprehension of a breach of the peace. It is only when there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace that the matter comes within the jurisdiction of the criminal Courts; otherwise the matter is one of a civil nature. Before, therefore, a criminal Court can be said to have any jurisdiction with regard to a case relating to the possession of immovable property, it must indicate that it is satisfied that an apprehension of a breach of the peace exists. That is why an order under S. 145, Cl. (1) is to be passed before any further proceedings are taken. When the Court fails to pass such an order at any stage of the proceedings and there is not sufficient material on the record on the basis of which such an order can be passed, it cannot be held that the criminal Court had jurisdiction to take proceedings under S. 145. Where in such a case the Magistrate has attached the crops, the proper order to be passed is to withdraw the attachment and direct the return of the crops to persons on whose land they were produced : 36 Cr. K. P. Misra and S. P. Misra—for Opposite Party.

Order.—On 24-9-1946, Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan, who is a tenant of about 900 bighas of land in village Dikaulia, District Bahraich, on behalf of the Kapurthala estate, filed an application under S. 145, Criminal P. C., against nine persons. He alleged that he was a hereditary tenant of the plots given in the list attached to the application, the total area of which was 193 acres and odd and that he had been in possession for a long time, but that for some time past some mischievous persons were trying to create a disturbance in the viliage and that it was apprehended that they would attempt to cut the crops sown by the applicant in the plots mentioned above. This application was forwarded by the Deputy Commissioner to the Sub-Divisional Officer concerned, and the Sub-Divisional Officer, after recording the statement of the applicant, directed him to file extracts from the present Khasra of the village. After this had been done, on 1-10-1946, he ordered the police to attach the crops in order to avoid trouble and he also directed the station officer to report.

[2] The attachment was made in pursuance of this order but it appears that the police did not consider it necessary to submit any report with regard to the danger apprehended to the peace. Accordingly an order was passed on 18th October for a report on the question as to whether there was any apprehension of a breach of the peace, and 29th October was fixed for the submission of this report and the report was received, but the learned Magistrate was not present and consequently the case was adjourned to 7-11-1946.

[3] Up to this time no order at all had been issued by the Magistrate under S. 145 (1), Criminal P. C., and no notice had been sent to the opposite parties. On 2nd November, however, 59 persons filed an application purporting to be written statement under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and alleging that the allegations of Chaudhari Abdul Aziz Khan were false and fictitious and that the plots in dispute were all actually in the cultivation of Shikmi tenants. None of these 59 persons had been made parties to the proceedings. Out of the persons who were actually treated as opposite parties only one, Maiku, filed a written statement, in which he contested the possession of Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan, but he also stated that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace and that the application had been filed merely with a view to obtain an illegal order of attachment. Four of the other opposite parties also filed an application on 8th November, stating that they were not in possession of the land and had nothing to do with it. The remaining four persons, who were mentioned as opposite parties, did not turn up at all. The application filed by the 59 persons was not complete inasmuch as it did not specify the plots over which the said persons claimed to be in possession. They were accordingly allowed an opportunity of giving a list of these plots which they did. On 11th November, and thereafter a date was fixed for the hearing of the case and for the evidence of the parties. After the evidence of the parties had been recorded, the learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the statements of the witnesses of neither side were credible and he accordingly summoned the village patwari under S. 540, Cr. P. C. The patwari gave evidence and produced an extract of the khasra for 1354 Fasli which has been brought on the record as Ex. A-1. In this khasra were found the names of all the objectors as sub-tenants "bila Tasfia". The "partal" was carried out from 15-10-1946, to 6-11-1946 and these entries were made on 27-10-1946. The learned Magistrate accepted the statement of the patwari, and by his order dated 31-12-1946, he held that the persons mentioned in the list Ex. X, annexed to his judgment were in possession of the land specified against their names and they were entitled to remain in possession thereof until evicted in due course of law. He also held that the remaining plots were in possession of the applicant. He, therefore, directed the attachment to be withdrawn and the crops to be released in favour of the persons whom he had held to be in possession.

[4] Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan applied in revision to the Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich who was of the opinion that the proceedings before the Magistrate were wholly illegal and without jurisdiction and should be set aside. He has recommended that the entire crops attached should be released in favour of Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan and that it should be declared that he was in possession of the entire land.

[5] I have heard the parties at considerable length. Mr. Misra, counsel for the opposite parties contends that, at the most, there has been an irregularity in the proceedings before the learned Magistrate and, since this has not resulted in any failure of justice, the irregularity should be condoned under the provisions of S. 537, Cr. P. C. In support of this view he has relied upon A. I. R. 1914 Lah. 295,[1] A. I. R. 1932 ALL. 446,[2] A. I. R. 1932 ALL. 631,[3] A. I. R. 1926 Sind 85,[4] A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 46[5] and A. I. R. 1918 Mad. 1203.[6]

[6] In A. I. R. 1914 Lah. 295[1] the learned Judge was of the opinion that there had been substantial compliance with the provisions of S. 145 (1) and that, therefore, the proceedings were not without jurisdiction. In that case when the parties had actually appeared an order under S. 145 (1) was recorded. This was belated order but nevertheless there was an order and proceedings subsequent thereto could not be deemed to be without jurisdiction. It was on this ground that the learned Judge distinguished an earlier case, which he mentions, in which the view taken was that without determining the question whether there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace or not, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to summon the parties and to deal with the case.

[7] A. I. R. 1926 Sind 85[4] does not deal with the question as to what is the result of a Magistrate proceeding with a case under S. 145 without recording an order under cl. (1) of that section and is, therefore, not relevant to this case. In A. I. R. 1918 Mad. 1203[6] there was an order issued under S. 145 (1), but it did not give all the reasons for the order. It was held that this failure of the Magistrate did not deprive him of the jurisdiction to deal with the case. This case too is not applicable to the facts of the present case, because in that case the Magistrate did proceed in accordance with law, and, therefore, acquired jurisdiction to deal with such a case although he committed an irregularity in not complying with the provisions of the section in not giving the reasons for his conclusion. This was merely an irregularity which could be condoned under the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C.

[8] A. I. R. 1932 ALL. 446[2] is more helpful to Mr. Misra's contention. In that case there was no order holding that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace but there was an order for the issue of the notice to the opposite parties to file their written statements, and thereafter the proceedings took place and both the parties produced their evidence. In giving his decision in that case the learned Judge held that there was no question of any lack of jurisdiction in the Magistrate by reason of the fact that no proper order under S. 145 (1) had been passed. He was of the opinion that there could only be lack of jurisdiction if (a) no power was conferred to deal with offences or matters of the class in question and (b) no power was conferred to deal with the offenders or persons of the class in question. With all respect to the learned Judge, I cannot agree that lack of jurisdiction only arises in the two methods mentioned by him. There may be a third method, namely that the Court may be competent to deal with the case if particular conditions are satisfied but may not be competent to deal with it unless those conditions are fulfilled. Normally, criminal Courts cannot deal with cases of possession of immovable property. Section 145, Criminal P. C., however, gives them power to deal even with that class of cases but the condition precedent is that the Court should be satisfied that there exists an apprehension of a breach of the peace. It is only when there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace that the matter comes within the jurisdiction of the criminal Courts: otherwise the matter is one of a civil nature. Before, therefore, a criminal Court can be said to have any jurisdiction with regard to a case relating to the possession of immovable property, it must indicate that it is satisfied that an apprehension of a breach of the peace exists. That is why an order under S. 145, Clause (1) is to be passed before any further proceedings are taken. When the Court fails to pass such an order at any stage of the proceedings and there is not sufficient material on the record on the basis of which such an order could be passed, it cannot be held that the criminal Court had jurisdiction to take proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C. Thus in a case such as the present the Court would have no jurisdiction to deal with the case.

[9] I am supported in this view by the remarks of the learned Chief Judge of this Court in (1935) 12 O. W. N. 454[7] in which it is said,

"I think it must be conceded that a Magistrate cannot take action under S. 145, sub-s. (1) unless he is satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. If he is not so satisfied, then I think he would have no jurisdiction to take action."

Three learned Judges of this Court participated in the decision of that case, and, on this point, there was no disagreement between them, though as to what was sufficient to satisfy the learned Magistrate created a difference of opinion. This is also the view taken by learned Single Judges of this Court in 1947 O. W. N. 139[8] and 1944 O. W. N. 479[9].

[10] In the present case not only did the learned Magistrate not pass an order under S. 145 but there does not exist any material on the record upon which he could pass such an order. No doubt the applicant himself stated that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace. The learned Magistrate thought this a good reason for exercising his emergency powers and attaching the property but he did not think it sufficient to justify him in passing an order under S. 145 cl. (1) and he called for a police report. The police report, when it was received, was against the contention of the applicant that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace. Further when the opposite parties to the proceedings appeared they also did not assert that there was any apprehension of a breach of the peace. In these circumstances not to pass an order under S. 145 (1) was not merely a formal defect but went to the root of the jurisdiction. The learned Magistrate not only did not but could not pass an order holding that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace. In these circumstances it must be held that the entire proceedings taken by him were without jurisdiction and the proper course for him to adopt was to withdraw the attachment.

[11] In this case, since no order under cl. (1) of S. 145 had been passed, no question arose of the cancellation of any such order. The result should, therefore, have been that the Magistrate should have withdrawn the attachment and allowed the person from whose possession the property had been taken to re-enter and thus the "status quo" would have been restored. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the order passed by the learned Magistrate should be set aside.

[12] The question then arises as to what order should be passed. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has recommended that the order should be to restore possession and to release the attached crops in favour of Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan. This recommendation cannot be accepted because it would mean that the Court held that Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan was in possession and, if the proceedings were without jurisdiction, there could be no finding of a Court to this effect. The only proper order which could be passed is that the attachment is withdrawn and the police is directed to vacate the land so that that person may enter into possession from whose possession the police had taken it over. This is the order that was passed in 1944 O. W. N. 479.[9]

[13] There then arises the question as to what should be done with the crops. Mr. Misra contended that that should be allowed to remain in attachment till such time as one of the parties has established his right in a Court of law. He relies upon A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 327[10] and A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 284[11] to support his argument that such a course is a proper course to adopt in these circumstances. There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for such an order but in the last mentioned case it is made clear that the order was passed in exercise of the powers of the Court under s. 561A of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This is an extraordinary procedure and recourse should not be had to it except in exceptional circumstances. In the present case the objectors did not claim the whole of the crops and the trial Court also did not award to them the whole of those crops, but only the crops of less than half the area which was the subject-matter of the dispute. With regard to half of the crops at least Chaudhri Abdul Aziz Khan was held by that Court also to be the owner. In these circumstances there is no reason why he should be compelled to institute a suit to recover property at least half of which is admittedly his. In these circumstances I see no reason to differentiate between the crops and the lands on which those crops were produced.

[14] The order of the learned Magistrate is accordingly set aside and it is ordered that the attachment will be withdrawn, the police will vacate the land in dispute and restore possession of it to the person or persons from whose possession it took it over. The crops attached will also be released and returned to person or persons on whose land they were produced.

Order.— This is a revision application by Pukhai against his conviction under S. 19 (f) of the Arms Act for being in possession of a country-made pistol and cartridges without a licence. He was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. It was heard by a Single Judge of this Court, before whom it was contended that inasmuch as the sanction of the District Magistrate for the prosecution of the petitioner as required by S. 29 of the Arms Act was not obtained, the trial was illegal. Reliance in support of this contention was placed on a decision of Mr. Lindsay who, as Judicial Commissioner, in Cri. Revn. Appln. NO. 17 of 1912 D/- 14-5-1912[1] expressed the opinion that on the material placed before him Hardoi was a district where, in view of the provisions S. 29 of the Indian Arms Act, no prosecution for an offence under S. 19 (f) of the Act, could be started without the previous sanction of the District Magistrate. One of us before whom the matter came was inclined to doubt the correctness of the view taken by Mr. Lindsay, and as the question was one of general importance, the case was referred to a Bench.

[2] Section 29 of the Indian Arms Act provided that where an offence punishable under S. 19 (f) has been committed within three months from the date on which that Act came into force in any province, district or place to which S. 32, cl. 2 of Act XXXI of 1860 applied, or where such an offence has been committed in any part of British India, not being such a district, province, or place no proceedings shall be instituted against any person in respect of such offence without the previous sanction of the District Magistrate, or, in a Presidency town, of the Commissioner of Police. Clearly, therefore, if the place in which the offence was committed is a place to which S. 32 (2) of Act 31 of 1860 applied at the date when Arms Act 11 of 1878 came into force, and the offence was committed after the lapse of three months from the date of the coming into force of the said Act, no sanction is required for institution of proceedings for an offence under S. 19 (f). In the case before us, no sanction of the District Magistrate for the prosecution of the applicant was obtained, and the question for consideration, therefore, is whether such sanction was necessary. This was the only point raised on behalf of the petitioner.

[3] Section 32 of Act 31 of 1860 runs as follows:

"Clause 1. It shall be lawful for the Governor-General of India in Council or for the Executive Government of any Presidency or for any Lieutenant Governor, or with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council for the Chief Commissioner or Commissioner of any Province, District or place subject to their administration respectively, whenever it shall appear necessary for the public safety, to order that any Province, District, or place shall be disarmed."

"Clause 2. In every such Province, District or place as well as in any Province, District, or place in which an order for a general search for arms has been issued and is still in operation under Act XXVIII of 1857, it shall not be lawful for any person to have in his possession any arms of the description mentioned in S. 6 of this Act, or any percussion caps, sulphur, gunpowder or other ammunition without a licence."

[4] An examination of clause 2 of this section makes it clear that the previous sanction of the District Magistrate for a prosecution for an offence under S. 19 (f) of the Indian Arms Act, 11 of 1878 would not be necessary if an order for a general search for arms was made either under Act, 28 of 1857 and was still in force on the 1st October, 1860 (the date up to which Act 28 of 1857 continued to be operative) or an order for disarmament under clause (1) was made in Hardoi district. Mr. Lindsay was not satisfied that such an order either for a general search for arms, or for disarmament, was passed in respect of Hardoi. The learned counsel for the Crown invited our attention to a notification in the Calcutta Gazette, (NO. 5336, January to June, 1859, page 16) which reads as follows:

"Allahabad, the 21st December 1858. Notification. The Right Hon'ble the Governor-General has been pleased to extend the provisions of Ss. 1, 2 and 5, Act XXVIII of 1857, to the North-Western Provinces of the Bengal Presidency. "His Lordship having resolved on disarming such parts of those Provinces as lied to the North of the Rivers Jumna and Ganges, has further been pleased under S. 24, Act XXVIII of 1857, to authorise a general search and seizure of arms by the Magistrates and Collectors, within the tract above specified. The Magistrate and Collector may delegate the same authority to any officer of his Establishment of rank not lower than a Jemadar."

The learned counsel contended that as the District of Hardoi lies to the north of the Rivers Jumna and Ganges this order of the Governor-General should be deemed to apply to that district. Reliance was further placed upon a case which arose within the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court, A. I. R. 1926 ALL. 143[2] where this contention was upheld. In further confirmation of the view urged by the learned Government Advocate, reference was also made to Para. 92, Arms Act, Manual, Edn. 6, (G. K. Roy) page 253 where is quoted G. O. NO. 2920, dated 10-7-1914, and it is said

"that all parts of the United Provinces except that portion of the Mirzapur District lying to the south of the Sone have been disarmed."

The G. O. further adds:

"Consequently any one not coming under any exemptions, who has in his possession or under his control arms of any description, ammunition or military stores, except under a licence and in the manner and to the extent permitted thereby, is punishable under S. 19 (f), Act XI of 1878, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both....."

It may be pointed out at once that though the District of Hardoi lies to the north of the Rivers Jumna and the Ganges, the notification published in the Calcutta Gazette was intended to apply only to the North-Western Provinces of the Bengal Presidency. In 1858 Oudh was a separate Province and it did not form part of the territory designated "North-Western Provinces of the Bengal Presidency." What the Governor-General resolved was the disarmament of such parts of "those provinces," as lay to the north of the river Jumna and the Ganges. In our opinion on the language of this notification it was only certain parts of the North-Western Provinces of the Bengal Presidency that were ordered to be disarmed under this notification.

[5] It is true that, as mentioned in Para. 92, Arms Act, Manual, Oudh was also disarmed; but the disarmament of Oudh was not made either under Act 28 of 1857 or under Act 31 of 1860. So far as we can find, Act 28 of 1857 was never applied to Oudh which was a "Non-regulation Province." That was a temporary Act (See Index to the Acts passed by the Legislative Council of India in the year 1857,—volume containing the Acts for that year, p. 3) and by S. 33 thereof the whole or any part of it was to take effect in any district or place to which the same was extended by order of the Governor-General in Council or the Executive Government of the place. No order extending the Act to Oudh, or to any part of that province, was brought to our notice. It is true that Act 31 of 1860 was applicable to Oudh. A reference, however to Chap. VIII, Para. 261 of the General Report on the administration of the Province of Oudh (Oudh Papers, Vol. VIII, p. 30) shows that disarmament of Oudh was carried out during the process of "re-conquest" of the province after the Mutiny of 1857, when the Civil Government had ceased to function and the Army was engaged in bringing the province under subjugation. This report is dated 22-4-1859. This was the first report of its kind to the Government since the annexation of the province. Paragraph 261 runs as follows.

"The necessity of disarming the whole population destroying all forts and clearing away jungles, has occupied the earnest attention of the Chief Commissioner. Detachments of columns placed at his disposal, or regiments of civil police told off to this duty, were accompanied by civil officers, whose sole business was to disarm the people. Deputy Commissioners, assistants, and every available officer, by force or persuasion, extracted the arms. From the powerful Talookdar, whose guns defend his fort, to the low caste Bassee who handles the bow with deadly effect, all classes have been called on to give up their arms. Evasion, refusal, and general concealment had to be met with firmness, perseverance, and painstaking search....."

This, it is clear, could not have been done under the provisions of Act 31 of 1860 or of the Act of 1857. The destruction of forts, clearing the jungle, etc., and the disarmament of the people of the province, in the manner set out in the report, were part of the operations undertaken by the military authorities. It was not a procedure adopted under the Acts above mentioned. The fact that S. 32 (2) of Act 31 of 1860 was applicable to Oudh would not necessarily lead to the conclusion that any order, as contemplated by that section, was made in respect of the province of Oudh. On the other hand as we find from the report to which reference has been made, disarmament of Oudh was carried out before Act 31 of 1860 came into force. Thus the requirements which would make the previous sanction of the District Magistrate unnecessary for institution of proceedings against any person in respect of an offence under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, committed in Hardoi District as contemplated by S. 29 of the said Act, have not been fulfilled.

[6] We are confirmed in this opinion by the fact that after the decision of Mr. Lindsay in Cri. Revn. Appln. No. 17 of 1912,[1] the Government of the United Provinces issued a circular letter to all the Deputy Commissioners in Oudh calling their attention to the decision of the Judicial Commissioner and directing them that in future no prosecution under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, should be instituted in any district "until specific sanction had been accorded by the Deputy Commissioner to its institution," (See G. O. No. 749/VI-811 of 1912. dated 28-2-1913). It may be recalled that Mr. Lindsay had not definitely held that no prosecution for an offence under S. 19 (f) could be instituted against an accused in Hardoi District without the sanction of the District Magistrate, He observed:

"It is possible that further search may show that this section was in fact so specifically applied but I can only go on the materials which are before me and which have been produced by the learned Government pleader after he has had notice of the question of law to be determined. At present all I can say is that I am not satisfied that it has been proved that S. 32, cl. (2) of Act XXXI of 1860 did apply to the District of Hardoi at the date when present Arms Act was introduced and from this it follows that a trial for an offence under S. 19 (f) which was held without previous sanction having been given was void as being without jurisdiction."

If the Government had been in possession of materials showing that any order for a general disarmament as contemplated by Act 31 of 1860, S. 32, cl. (2), had been made in regard to Oudh in general, or to the District of Hardoi in particular, it would not have issued the general circular letter to which reference has been made. In any case no materials have been placed before us which would go to show that the previous sanction of the District Magistrate was unnecessary. We refrained from pronouncing the order in this case for a considerable time to enable the Government Advocate to place before us any material which further research on his part might bring to light. We waited for four weeks, but no such material has been placed before us. At the hearing the Government Advocate placed before us type-written copies of what purportod to be a proclamation for disarmament applicable to Oudh, but there was nothing to show that this was issued under Act 28 of 1857 or Act 31 of 1860.

[7] For the reasons given above it must be held that the trial of Pukhai without the previous sanction of the District Magistrate was illegal. The application is allowed and the conviction and the sentence passed upon Pukhai are set aside. He shall be set at liberty forthwith if not otherwise wanted.

First Appeal No. 72 of 1944, Decided on 26-2-1948 from order of Addl. Civil Judge, Unao, D/- 27-3-1944.

U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (X of 1937), S. 5— Suit is against agriculturists even if some only of defendants are agriculturists.

A suit is "against an agriculturist" within the meaning of S. 5 (1), even if one of the defendants is not an agriculturist. This is borne out by the general scheme of the Act, specially S. 2 (2), which omits from the definition of "agriculturists", the proviso to the definition as given in the Agriculturists Relief Act and Ss. 3 and 4. [Paras 3, 4 and 5]

Judgment.—On the 12th Oct. 1927 Mst. Ram Piary and her sons, Sheo Kumar, Nand Kumar and Jagdish Kumar executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Sheoratan Lal and Chandika Prasad to secure a loan of Rs. 5,000. The mortgage was by way of conditional sale and the term fixed for three years. Out of the mortgage money a sum of Rs. 1,200 was not paid. Mst. Ram Piari died on 15th April 1938 and the two mortgagees are also dead and each of them is represented by his widow, Mst. Jai Rani, respondent 1, being widow of Sheoratan Lal and Mt. Ambica Devi, widow of Pandit Chandika Prasad. The two widows as well as one Mt. Ram Piari, who was the widow of Sheo Dularey, brother of Sheoratan Lal and Chandika Prasad, instituted a suit for foreclosure on the basis of this mortgage on 4th October 1943 in the Court of the Civil Judge, Unao. They stated that limitation began to run on 12th October 1930 but that they were entitled to an extension of time under the provisions of Act X of 1937.

[2] Among the various pleas that the defendants took was a plea that the suit was barred by limitation and that Act X of 1937 did not apply to it. The learned Civil Judge decided various issues necessary to give relief to the plaintiff in their favour and he also held that the suit was not barred by limitation because the plaintiffs were entitled to the benefit of S. 5 of Act X of 1937. He accordingly passed a preliminary decree for foreclosure. Defendants have now come up in appeal.

[3] The grounds of appeal raise a large number of points but the learned advocate for the appellants has confined his argument to the applicability of Act X of 1937 to the present cass. Sub-section (1) of S. 5 of Act X of 1937 reads as follows :—

"5 (1). In computing the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian limitation Act, 1908, or any other law for the time being in force, for (a) the institution of a suit in a Civil Court against an agriculturists for money or for foreclosure or sale in enforcement of a mortgage, and (b) the execution of such decree as is referred to in S. 3, and not covered by S. 6, the period during which this Act shall remain in force, shall be excluded."

We have, therefore, to consider whether the present suit has been instituted against "an agriculturist." It is not denied that two of the defendants, namely, defendants 2 and 3 were agriculturists. It is also agreed that defendant 1 is not an agriculturist because he pays income-tax. It is contended on the basis of this fact that the suit cannot be deemed to be a suit against "an agriculturist." We cannot accept this contention because it is undoubted that two of the defendants in the case were agriculturist. Thus the suit was a suit against "an agriculturist" in the case of at least two of the defendants and, therefore, in determining limitation in such a suit the whole period during which the Act remained in force is to be excluded.

[4] This interpretation is borne out by a consideration of the various provisions of the enactment. The preamble shows that the legislation was of a temporary nature in order to give time for further legislation to grant relief from indebtedness to agriculturists. The legislature did not anticipate the exact nature of the legislation that was going to be passed and, therefore, very general words have been used in the enactment. Then when we come to the definition of agriculturist given in sub-section (2) of S. 2 of the Act, we find that it is very similar to the definition of that term used in the Agriculturists Relief Act but a very important omission occurs in this definition. In the Agriculturists Relief Act the definition contains a proviso that if a non-agriculturist joins with an agriculturist in any transaction of loan, save for the purpose of adding his name as security the agriculturist shall not be considered as such for the purpose of that transaction. In the definition of agriculturist in Act X of 1937 there is no such proviso. This fact is of great importance as showing that the legislature, while it was adopting the definitton of agriculturist given in the Agriculturists Relief Act, thought it proper to omit that portion of the definition which would deprive an agriculturist of the benefit of Act X of 1937 if he joined a non-agriculturist.

[5] Sections 3 and 4 of Act X of 1937 also make it clear that a judgment-debtor is entitled to get the benefit of these sections even if he himself is not an agriculturist, if one or more of the other judgment-debtors are agriculturists. It is reasonable to suppose that the benefit, which section 5 conferred upon the creditor, was meant to be equally extensive and to cover those cases in which any of the proposed defendants was an agriculturist. No doubt there is a difference in the language used in the two sets of sections but that difference was necessitated by the circumstances of the two sets of cases. If that language had not been used in Ss. 3 and 4, then the objection by a non-agriculturist judgment-debtor to further execution or to his continued detention in prison might well have been rejected on the ground that he himself was not an agriculturist. The legislature, therefore, thought fit to make it clear that if any one or more of the judgment-debtors was an agriculturist, even non-agriculturist would be entitled to benefit under these sections. The same meaning has been given to the words of S. 5 by using the word, 'an' before 'agriculturist'. This clearly implies that even if one of the defendants is an agriculturist, the extended period of time will be allowed.

[6] Thus the suit was instituted by the plaintiff within time by reason of S. 5 of Act X of 1937 and the decree passed by the learned Civil Judge must be upheld.

[7] Respondent 3 has presented an application disclaiming all interest in the property and making it clear that the mortgage in suit was in favour of the husbands of respondents 1 and 2 and that respondents 1 and 2 alone are entitled to a decree. This application is supported by an affidavit and has been presented through an advocate of this Court who supports it. In these circumstances, while dismissing the appeal of the appellants, we modify the decree of the learned Civil Judge and pass a preliminary decree for foreclosure only in favour of plaintiffs-respondents 1 and 2. The appellants will pay the cost of this appeal to respondents 1 and 2.

Second Appeal No. 327 of 1942, Decided on 7-1-1947, from order of Civil Judge, Sultanpur, D/- 21-5-1942.

Oudh Laws Act (1876), S. 9— Superior proprietor and under-proprietor— Distinction— Under-proprietor cannot carve out under-proprieitary right— Held, that deed in question was not sale of under-proprietary rights but was perpetual lease and was not liable to pre-emption.

There is a distinction between the case of a superior proprietor and that of an under-proprietor, in so far as while a superior proprietor can carve out an under-proprietary right, such a position is not available to an under-proprietor. An under-proprietor can only carve out a subordinate interest. [Para 8]

By a deed described as patta Istemarari Malahli an under-proprietor transferred two plots of land, conferring on the transferee heritable and transferable rights in the plot for a certain nazarana and declaring that the transferee shall be in possession of the plots generation by generation with full rights by appropriation and possession of rights of transfer of all kinds. The transferee was to pay Re. 1 per annum along with haq malikana lagan of the plots to the transferor and his heirs year after year. The transferee was given the right to get her name mutated as under-proprietor in the Revenue papers. The transferor reserved no right of re-entry in his favour or in favour of his heirs. Nothing was said in the deed as to the liability for payment of the under-proprietary rent payable by the transferor to the superior proprietor :

Held, that the deed was not a sale of under-proprietary rights but was a perpetual lease and, therefore, the transaction was not liable to pre-emption : Case law referred. [Paras 5 and 8]

Ali Hasan — for Appellant.

K. N. Tandon—for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.— This is a vendee's appeal in a suit for pre-emption. The transaction which was the subject-matter of dispute was evidenced by a deed dated 24th February 1940 (Ex. 1) executed by Rishi Narain Singh in favour of Mt. Ram Rati. This deed formed the bone of contention between the parties. The plaintiff filed a suit for pre-emption on the ground that he was an under-proprietor and entitled to pre-empt as against Mt. Ram Rati, who was an utter stranger. He described the deed (Ex. 1) as a sale.

[2] The main defence was that the deed was only a perpetual lease and not a sale of under-proprietary rights and was, therefore, not liable to pre-emption. The other defence was a denial of the plaintiff's right to pre-empt but this controversy no longer survives.

(3) The trial Court framed several issues but the crucial issue with which we are now concerned is the first issue whether the deed in suit is pre-emptible. In oral pleadings before the Court the plaintiff's pleader thus stated on the date of the issues:

"Even if the deed in suit is not held to be a sale deed, the sale of under-proprietary right has been effected by it and under-proprietary right has been carved out. As such it is pre-emptible."

In view of this statement the trial Court did not think it necessary to decide whether the deed in suit is a sale or not. According to the view taken by that Court the transferor, who was admittedly an under-proprietor, conferred under-proprietary rights upon the transferee who was entered in the village papers as an under-proprietor. His finding may be reproduced in his own words:

"So it is clear that defendant 2 who is a pukhtadar has transferred under-proprietary rights or carved out an under-proprietary and as such gives a right of pre-emption, vide 1934 O. W. N. 1494."

The pre-emptor's suit was thereupon decreed.

[4] The vendee appealed but with no success. In that Court although the first issue was challenged in the grounds of appeal, yet I do not find any clear reference in the judgment of the lower appellate Court upon that point. On the other hand, the sole question to which he addressed himself was whether the pre-emptor belongs to any of the classes enumerated under S. 9, Avadh Laws Act, or not and he held that he was an under-proprietor and the vendee a stranger and confirmed the decision with a slight variation in the decree, which is not material.

[5] In second appeal by the vendee before me it has been contended that the deed (Ex. 1), upon a true construction, does not constitute a sale of under-proprietary rights and the transferor, who was himself an under-proprietor, had no right to carve out another under-proprietary right in favour of the transferee. I have examined the deed carefully. The deed is described as patta Istemrari matahti. Rishi Narain Singh is admittedly an under-proprietor and the superior proprietor is the Ajudhia estate. The property transferred under the deed consists of two plots, No. 1937 measuring one biswa and No. 1938 measuring two Bighas and four biswas haqiat pukhtadari with seven mango trees situate in village Katka Khanpur. The transferor confers heritable and transferable rights in the plots in dispute for a nazrana of Rs. 155 declaring that the transferee shall be in possession of the plots in suit generation by generation with full rights by appropriation and possession of rights of transfer of all kinds. It is further laid down that the transferee shall pay Re. 1 per annum along with haq malikana lagan of the plots to the transferor and his heirs year after year. The transferee was given the right to get her name mutated as under-proprietor in the Revenue papers. Lastly the transferor reserved no right of re-entry in his favour or in favour of his heirs. These are the essential features of the deed. It is not denied that the Ajudhia estate is the superior proprietor of the village in which the plots are situate and Rishi Narain Singh is an under-proprietor of a part of the village including these plots. As an under-proprietor he pays rent to the superior proprietor. Nothing is said in the deed as to the liability for payment of this under-proprietary rent to the superior proprietor. No relationship between the transferee and the superior proprietor is created by this transaction. The deed imposes the liability to pay the annual rent of Re. 1 not only on the transferee but upon her heirs. It is clear, therefore, that the transferor has not divested himself of all rights in the plots in suit. Possibly the imposition of the rent was a device to defeat pre-emption and hence it was taken in the form of a lease. Such a device is permissible. I am of opinion, therefore, that the terms of the deed read as a whole do not support the inference that the transferor meant to execute a sale of his under-proprietary right. On the other hand, they show that his intention was to execute a permanent lease only and not to divest himself of his rights in the property. On the part of the transferee the intention to take a lease may well have been to avoid a suit for pre-emption. Accordingly I hold that no sale of under-proprietary rights having taken place, the deed was not subject to pre-emption.

[6] In 1942 O. W. N. 504[2] it was held that where a heritable transferable lease is executed by an under-proprietor for a specified premium reserving an annual rent and malikana, the reservation is inconsistent with the transaction being a sale, as an under-proprietor cannot sell his under-proprietary right and still continue to be an under-proprietor. The case of superior proprietor is different, as he can carve out an under-proprietary holding by executing a heritable transferable lease. The fact that no right of re-entry is reserved will confer on the transferee an interest in the land so as to entitle him to be a member of the village community and claim pre-emption under S. 9, Oudh Laws Act, but cannot convert the transaction into a sale subject to the liability to pre-emption. The Full Bench decision in 1934 O. W. N. 1494,[1] which was referred to by the trial Court is, among other cases, also noticed in this judgment and is explained by the fact that there the transfer was by a superior proprietor. At p. 508 the learned Judge (Bennett J.) observed :

"A distinction must therefore in my opinion be drawn between deeds of this nature executed by superior proprietors and similar deeds executed by under-proprietors. The position of the parties is in the one case consistent with a sale ; in the other it is not. If the under-proprietor has not transferred all his interest in the land I fail to see that he has transferred any interest except by way of lease. The Courts below have not shown what the transferor has sold. It is clear that he cannot have sold any proprietary interest. I hold therefore that the deed under consideration was a lease and not a sale deed."

This decision was given on 20-8-1942, and was not available to the lower appellate Court, whose decision was given on 21-8-1942. It was followed by a Bench in 1944 O. W. N. 155,[3] where it was held that where a lease executed by an under-proprietor purports to transfer rights of a heritable and transferable nature, but reserves to the transferor an annual rent though nominal and does not transfer the under-proprietor's liability to pay rent to the superior proprietor for the property transferred, the document is a lease and not a sale and the grantee is a lessee and not an under-proprietor. That decision was given on appeal under S. 12 (2), Oudh Courts Act, from a decision of Madeley J. in 1941 O. W. N. 1122.[4]

[7] The most recent decision of this Court is to be found in 1947 O. W. N. 500[5] which followed 1942 O. W. N. 504[2] and 1944 O. W. N. 155.[3]

[8] Learned counsel for the respondent urges that the words of transfer in Ex. 1 show that the transferor was transferring out and out his under-proprietary rights and this is confirmed by the fact that the transferee was entered in the revenue papers as an under-proprietor. As remarked in 1947 O. W. N. 500[5] mutation of names cannot confer a title which does not exist. Further the deed cannot be construed to evidence a complete transfer of under-proprietary rights, although it purports to do so. The terms and conditions inserted in the deed not only do not warrant any such inference but contradict it. The reference to a decision of a single Judge of this Court in 1937 O. W. N. 1007[6] is hardly helpful to the respondent's case. There also the vendor who had transferred the plots was a superior proprietor. The authorities that have been referred to above emphasise the distinction between the case of a superior proprietor and that of an under-proprietor, in so far as while a superior proprietor can carve out an under-proprietary right, such a position is not available to an under-proprietor. An under-proprietor can only carve out a subordinate interest. I hold, therefore, that the deed is not a sale of under-proprietary rights but is a perpetual lease. If this view be correct, the transaction is not liable to pre-emption.

[9] Accordingly I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiff-respondent's suit with costs in all the Courts.

Judgment.—The following question has been referred to a Full Bench by a Division Bench:

"Where a joint decree for under-proprietary rent is obtained by the superior proprietor against a number of persons does a payment towards the decree made by one of them save limitation against the other judgment-debtors also ?"

The answer to the question mooted above depends upon the construction to be put upon Ss. 20 and 21, Limitation Act which so far as relevant for our purposes run as follows:

"20. (1) Where interest on a debt or legacy is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, or where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made. . . . . ,.

(2) Where mortgaged land is in the possession of the mortgagee, the receipt of the rent of produce of such land shall be deemed to be a payment for the purpose of sub-section (1). Explanation—Debt includes money payable under a decree or order of Court."

"21. (1) The expression 'agent duly authorised in this behalf,' in Ss. 19 and 20, shall, in the case of a person under disability, include his lawful guardian, committee or manager, or an agent duly authorised by such guardian, committee or manager to sign the acknowledgment or make the payment.

(2) Nothing in the said sections renders one of several joint contractors, partners, executors or mortgagees chargeable by reason only or a written acknowledgment signed or of a payment made by or by the agent of, any other or others of them.

(3) for the purposes of the said sections —

(a) an acknowledgment signed, or a payment made, in respect of any liability, by, or by the duly authorised agent of any widow or other limited owner of property who is governed by the Hindu law, shall be a valid acknowledgment or payment, as the case may be, as against a reversioner succeeding to such liability; and,

(b) where a liability has been incurred by, or on behalf of a Hindu undivided family as such, an acknowledgment or payment made by, or by the duly authorised agent of the manager of the family for the time being shall be deemed to have been made on behalf of the whole family."

It was considered desirable to refer the matter to a Full Bench as there was conflict of opinion among different High Courts and sometimes in the same High Court over the correct construction to be put upon the words "the person liable to pay the debt or legacy" occurring in S. 20; nor is there unanimity of opinion on the question whether the categories mentioned in S. 21 (2) are exceptions to Ss. 19 and 20 or are only explanatory. As pointed out by the Division Bench which made the reference it was argued on behalf of the appellants that the words "the person liable to pay the debt" do not mean all the persons liable and that a payment made by any one of the persons thus liable was sufficient to save limitation against others also except in cases covered by S. 21 (2), that is joint contractors, partners, executors or mortgagees. The contention on the other side was that "the person liable to pay the debt" was not the same thing as "a person liable to pay the debt," that is where the liability of a number of persons was joint payment made by one of the joint debtors would not save limitation against any one except himself.

[2] The case-law on the point was reviewed at some length in the order of reference by the Division Bench and it is unnecessary for us to refer to those cases in detail. The view taken by the Allahabad High Court in 27 ALL. 575[1] was that a payment by one of several persons jointly liable under a decree otherwise than as agent of his co-judgment-debtors cannot operate to save limitation as against any one of the judgment-debtors other than himself. In the same Court a different view was taken in 41 ALL. 111[2] and A. I. R. 1927 ALL. 209.[3] These cases were however overruled by a Full Bench in I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 272[4] at page 285. It may be mentioned that the Full Bench decision was given in a case which arose under S. 19 and not under S. 20, Limitation Act.

[3] The same view was taken in some of the cases of the Calcutta High Court: A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 648[5]; though there are cases of that Court in which a contrary view has been taken. Reliance in some of those cases was placed upon the two decisions of the Allahabad High Court which were overruled by the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 272.[4]

[4] A different view was taken in Patna in A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 1[6] where the following observations were made by Rowland J:

"Though S. 20 may not apply to one debtor by reason of a payment made by another debtor in cases where the debts or liabilities are distinct and though S. 21 (2) may apply where a mortgage has been entered into by two or more persons or where two persons jointly execute a simple money bond, limitation is saved where the debt is a single debt and the liability is one and indivisible notwithstanding that a part of the property liable for the debt may be in hands other than those of the person making the payment. Such a case falls within S. 20 and is not taken out of its operation by S. 21 (2) of the Act."

He dissented from the view taken in 14 I. C. 128,[7] and referred to a large number of cases of the Calcutta High Court in support of his view. Reference was also made by him to the two cases of the Allahabad High Court—41 ALL, 111[2] and A. I. R. 1927 ALL. 209[3]— cases which were subsequently held by the Full Bench case in I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 272[4] as not laying down good law. In the Madras High Court also, it appears that the view taken is the same as that taken by Rowland J. : see A. I. R. 1920 Mad. 418[8] and A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 881.[9] He refused to follow the decision of Blair and Banerji JJ. in 27 ALL. 575[1] and relied primarily on the observations of Lord Hobhouse in (1886) 11 A. C. 639[10]:

"Payment is certain to be made only by those who have some duty or interest to pay. As regards the recipient, so long as he is paid according to the intention of the contracting parties he is in full enjoyment of his bargain and is not put upon any further assertion of his rights."

[5] It appears to us with the greatest respect that in interpreting the section due regard has not been given to the history of the provisions of the Limitation Act dealing with the keeping alive of limitation by acknowledgment and payment. As pointed out by U. N. Mittra in his 'Tagore Law Lectures' 1882, Vol. I, page 362, the exception in respect of acknowledgments of liability, by the party against whom a claim is made, has to some extent or other been always recognised by the law of British India. The first exception was to be found under S. 14, Regulation 3 [III] of 1793 (Bengal Code). Then came Act 14 [XIV] of 1859. Section 4 of this Act runs thus:

"If, in respect of any legacy or debt, the person who, but for the law of limitation would be liable to pay the same shall have admitted that such debt or legacy or any part thereof, is due by an acknowledgment in writing signed by him a new period of limitation according to the nature of the original liability shall be computed from the date of such admission:

Provided that, if more than one person be liable none of them shall become chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed by another of them."

It is significant to note that the form in which this section was cast resembles very closely the form of S. 20 (1) of the present Act. The proviso to this section made it clear that where more persons than one were jointly liable an acknowledgment by one of them would not save limitation against others. There were two other provisions in Act 14 [XIV] of 1859 which recognised an acknowledgment in writing, namely, S. 1 (15) and S. 19. By clause 15 of S. 1, if the title of the depositor, pawnor or mortgagor, or his right of redemption was acknowledged in writing signed by the depositary, pawnee or mortgagee, or some person claiming under him, the period of limitation was renewed. Section 19 referred to a decree or order of Court established by Royal Charter.

[6] The law was again altered in some respects by Act 9 [IX] of 1871. Section 20 of this Act was as follows:

"20. (a) No promise or acknowledgment in respect of a debt or legacy shall take the case out of the operation of this Act, unless such promise or acknowledgment is contained in some writing signed, before the expiration of the prescribed period by the party to be charged therewith or by his agent generally or specially authorised in this behalf.

(b) When such writing exists, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the promise or acknowledgment was signed.

(c) When the writing containing the promise or acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed. But when it is alleged to have been destroyed or lost, oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1. For purposes of this section, a compromise or acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact amount of the debt or legacy or avers that the time for payment or delivery has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay or deliver or is coupled with a claim to a set off' or is addressed to any person other than the creditor or legatee; but it must amount to an express undertatking to pay or deliver the debt or legacy or to an unqualified admission of the liability as subsisting.

Explanation 2. Nothing in this section renders one of several partners or executors chargeable by reason only of a written promise or acknowledgment signed by another of them."

The form in which S. 4 of the Act of 1859 was cast was changed and the proviso to this section appeared in the new Act in the form of Explanation (2) in a modified form. It was in 1871 that under the Indian Law payment as distinct from acknowledgment was recognised for the first time as a ground for renewing the period of limitation. Section 21 of Act 9 [IX] of 1871 ran as follows:

"When interest on a debt or legacy is, before the expiration of the prescribed period paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy or by his agent generally or specially authorised in this behalf or when part of the principal of a debt is before the expiration of the prescribed period paid by the debtor or by his agent generally or specially authorised in this behalf a new period of limitation according to the nature of the original liability shall be computed from the time when the payment was made:

"Provided that, in the case of part-payment of principal, the debt has arisen from a contract in writing and the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same on the instrument or in his own books, or in the books of the creditor."

This was followed by Act 15 [XV] of 1877. Section 19 of this ran thus:

"If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed:

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1:—For the purpose of this section, an acknowledgment may be sufficient though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2: — In this section 'signed' means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorised in this behalf."

It enlarged the scope of the section relating to acknowledgments which now was applicable to any property or right instead of being limited to cases referred to in S. 1 (15), S. 4 and S. 19 of the Act of 1859, or S. 20 and Art. 148 of the Act of 1871. In the Act of 1877 what was originally a proviso to S. 4, and then appeared as Explanation (2) to S. 20 in the Act of 1871 was enacted as S. 21 in the Act of 1877. It ran as follows:

"Nothing in Ss. 19 and 20 renders one of several joint contractors, partners, executors, or mortgagees chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed or of a payment made by or by the agent of any other or others of them."

The present S. 21 contains three sub-sections. Sub-section (2) is the same as old S. 21 of 1877, sub-section (1) was added in 1908, and sub-section (3) by the Limitation Amendment Act 1 [I] of 1927.

[7] It will thus be seen that originally the proviso to S. 4 of the Act of 1859 had a very wide scope. In that section reference was made to an acknowledgment in writing signed by the person "liable to pay" the debt or legacy. The form of that section resembled closely the form of sub-section (1) of our present S. 20. With the alteration of the form of S. 20 in Act 9 [IX] of 1871, it became unnecessary to have the proviso in the same general form. In the main part of the section, it was made clear that no promise or acknowledgment which is not signed "by the party to be charged therewith or by his agent generally or specially authorised in this behalf" could renew limitation. Explanation (2) therefore was limited to partners or executors where ordinarily one partner would in matters of the partnership business, represent other partners and the powers of all executors (where there are more executors than one) may be exercised by any one of them. The Legislature made it clear that even in such cases an acknowledgment given by one would not affect others. Under the Indian law till the year 1871 though acknowledgment could be relied on for the purposes of renewing limitation, payment of principal or interest had no such effect. It was by Act 9 [IX] of 1871 that payment of principal or interest as such was recognised as a ground like acknowledgment for renewing limitation. This was only an extension of the same principle which underlay the provisions relating to acknowledgments. No proviso or explanation, such as was the case in the Acts of 1859 and of 1871 was added to S. 21 of Act 9 [IX] of 1871, when payment of interest or part of principal was for the first time recognised in the Indian law as a ground for renewal of limitation. Can this be a ground for holding that the Legislature, though it did not in the case of an acknowledgment allow the act of one person to bind others who were jointly liable with him, followed a different line with regard to payments in the matter of renewal of limitation? The expression used in S. 21 of Act 9 [IX] of 1871 was "when interest .. is before the expiration of the prescribed period paid . . . by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy." This is not the same thing as "when interest . . . . is paid as such by any person liable to pay the debt or legacy." It will be remembered that it is the same form of expression which was used in S. 4 of Act 14 [XIV] of 1859, in relation to an acknowledgment. It is difficult to conceive that though originally the law would not treat a payment for the purposes of renewal of limitation even on the same footing as an acknowledgment it would, when once it recognised a payment as a ground for renewing limitation, make a payment made by one co-debtor effective to save limitation as against others, though it could not be so in the case of an acknowledgment. There is no good ground in our opinion for holding that "the person liable to pay the debt or legacy" has the same meaning as "any person liable to pay the debt or legacy."

[8] We are confirmed in this opinion by an examination of sub-section 3 (b) of section 21. It reads thus:

"Where a liability has been incurred by or on behalf of, a Hindu undivided family as such, an acknowledgment or payment made by, or by the duly authorised agent of, the manager of the family for the time being shall be deemed to have been made on behalf of the whole family."

This makes it clear that if a payment is made by a member other than the manager of the family it would not be deemed to have been made on behalf of the whole family. Thus if a bond is executed by four members of a joint family A, B, C and D, of which A is the manager, payment of interest or part of principal by B, C, D, who were all liable to pay the debt, would not extend limitation against all. If the view taken by the Calcutta High Court and in the Patna case, referred to earlier, against that taken by Blair and Banerji JJ. in 27 ALL. 575[1] were correct, a payment made by B, C or D would renew limitation against all the four debtors. Moreover it will be seen that if the construction put upon sub-s. (1) of S. 20 by the Calcutta and Patna cases were right it would be wholly unnecessary to add sub-s. (3) (b) to S. 21 for irrespective whether the payment was made by the manager of the family or by any other member, every one of whom is liable to pay the debt, it would be sufficient to give a fresh start of limitation for bringing a suit for recovery of the debt against all the members.

[9] There does not appear to be any good ground for holding that S. 21 is an exception to S. 20.

[10] It is clear that for the purposes of S. 21, Ss. 19 and 20 are treated as having common scope. Both are treated on the same footing and it will be difficult to hold that this section would operate as an explanation so far as S. 19 is concerned and an exception in the case of S. 20; obviously so far as S. 19 is concerned, S. 21 is only explanatory because on the language of that section it is only an acknowledgment given by the person against whom the property or right is claimed that can have the effect of renewing limitation. The law has, abundanti cautela made it clear that even in the case of several joint contractors, partners, executors or mortgagees, an acknowledgment given by one of them would not be effective to save limitation against others unless of course the person making the acknowledgmeut was acting as the agent for others. There does not appear to be any sound reason to hold that if S. 21 was explanatory of S. 19, it was intended to have the effect of an exception so far as S. 20 was concerned. Is there any reason of the numerous categories to which persons subject to joint liability may belong only these four joint contractors, partners, executors or mortgagees, should be selected for special treatment?

[11] To put the construction contended for by appellants decree-holders in a case like that which necessitated this reference would create numerous anomalies and give rise to a crop of difficult questions. If there are several joint contractors and one of them dies are his heirs joint contractors with the remaining contractors? If a contractor leaves several heirs, are they all joint contractors for the purpose of S. 21? If one of several mortgagors transferred a part of his mortgaged property to some one is the purchaser from such mortgagor a joint contractor with the other mortgagors?

[12] Reference in certain cases has been made to the Privy Council decision in (1886) 11 A. C. 639[10] especially to the following observations of their Lordships:

"It must be remembered that payment and acknowledgment are two very different things. As regards the person making them, acknowledgment may .... be made by a person who, though a party to a mortgage contract has ceased to have any substantial interest in it and has nothing to lose by acknowledgment, whereas payment is certain to be made only by those who have some duty or interest to pay. As regards the recipient, so long as he is paid according to the intention of the contracting parties he is in full enjoyment of his bargain and is not put upon any further assertion of his rights; but not so if he only receives acknowledgment. If therefore we find that the Legislature has used different language about the two cases, we must not readily conclude that it has done so by accident or without meaning it."

The observations were made in connection with certain sections of the Statute of New Brunswick dealing with limitation of Real Actions, and it has been taken for granted that the observations of their Lordships in that case should be applied to the provisions of Ss. 19 and 20, Indian Limitation Act. We may with the greatest respect observe that in a matter like the one before us it is unsafe to try to seek light from observations made on the construction to be put upon a Statute of New Brunswick, especially as the language of Ss. 29 and 30 of that Statute is not the same as that of our Act. As pointed out by Nasim Ali J. in A. I. R. 1938 Cal. 129:[11]

"Under the English law there is a distinction between secured debts and unsecured debts. By S. 8 of R. P. L. A., 1874, part payment of principal or interest checks the running of the statute in case of secured debts. There is no statutory provision regulating the effect of payment upon unsecured debts and payment only saves the debt when it is such that a promise to pay the debt can be implied. The Limitation Act, however, makes no such distinction. In India it is not necessary to import the doctrine of implied promise to save by payment a simple debt from limitation."

[13] We have been at pains to trace the history of S. 21 of our Limitation Act in order to show the line on which the law has developed in this country and its process of growth. We have not the same information as regards the Statute of New Brunswick and having regard to the difference in the language of the Statutes in the two countries, we should not merely on account of certain common expressions in the two Statutes assume that what was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council as regards certain sections of a statute in another country would be equally applicable to the interpretation of Ss. 19 and 20, Indian Limitation Act.

[14] We are for the reasons given above of opinion that S. 21 is explanatory of Ss. 19 as well as 20 and does not constitute an exception in the case of either of these sections. We therefore answer the question referred to us by the Division Bench in the negative.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal in a suit brought by the liquidator of Equity Insurance Co. Ltd., Lucknow (in liquidation) against the Collector of Moradabad, Manager, Court of Wards, Sahaspur Bilari Estate, Moradabad.

[2] The facts material for the decision of this appeal are as follows:— A limited liability company, called Equity Insurance Co. Ltd. Lucknow, was registered with the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, U. P. on 12-5-1933, with a capital of 10 lacs divided into 40,000 shares of Rs. 25 each. The eight promoters of the Company who subscribed the Memorandum of Association were; (1) Jagat Kumar, Raja of Sahaspur, district Moradabad, (2) Goverdhan Prasad Bhargawa, (3) D. C. H. Dinshaw, (4) Krishna Narain, (5) T. C. Jaini, (6) Choudhary Mohammad Ismail, (7) Sikhar Chand Jaini, and (8) H. N. Kitchlu. The number of shares taken by Raja Jagat Kumar, as noted opposite his name in the Memorandum of Association, was 1500. Besides Raja Jagat Kumar, all the other promoters belonged to Lucknow, where the company had its head office. The Raja was a young man whose estate was being managed by the Court of Wards. It was released from the superintendence of the Court of Wards in January, 1933. Raja Jagat Kumar signed the company's Articles of Association also, and the number of shares taken by him as noted there was 1500, as in the Memorandum of Association. No money was paid by Raja Jagat Kumar in respect of these shares till his death which occurred on 8-3-1934, within a year of coming into existence of the company; nor does it appear that any shares were formally allotted to him.

[3] It appears that on the assumption of the superintendence of the estate of Raja Jagat Kumar by the Court of Wards, the usual notice under S. 17 of the Act was published in the Gazette. In response to this notice the company intimated to the Collector of Moradabad that the Raja held 1500 shares of Rs. 25 each as promoter of the company, and was also one of its directors. As no amount was paid by the Raja in respect of the application and allotment money, Rs. 15,000 was due from his estate (at Rs. 5 application money and Rs. 5 allotment money per share). In reply to this, the Collector intimated to the company that if the Raja had to pay any amount on account of the shares alleged to have been held by him, the Court of Wards "would like to withdraw from this position" as it no longer wanted to incur any further expenditure of this kind. By the same letter (Ex. 16) he asked the General Secretary of the Company to send him a detailed explanation of the fees claimed against the Raja. By a letter dated 8-11-1934, the managing agents of the company informed the Collector of Moradabad that in deference to his wishes, the company "would forego the claim".

[4] On 26-2-1936, a call in respect of Rs. 12-8-0 per share was made by the directors of the company. Jagat Kumar being dead, and as superintendence of his estate was assumed by the Court of Wards, (sometime in April 1934,) a notice of the call was served upon the Collector of Moradabad who was the manager of the Court of Wards in charge of Sahaspur Bilari Estate. The Court of Wards did not pay any money towards this call. The directors of the company made a second call of Rs. 12-8-0 per share on 27-8-1938. Notice of this call was served upon the Collector of Moradabad who denied the liability of the estate of Raja Jagat Kumar to pay anything.

[5] The company went into voluntary liquidation by a resolution of the shareholders passed on 7-12-1940. The liquidator made an application to bring a suit against the estate of Raja Jagat Kumar in respect of the money due for the second call, which was made in 1938, in forma pauperis. The application was dismissed. Thereupon the liquidator, Mr. Shyam Manohar Rastogi instituted on 27-8-1941, the suit which has given rise to the present appeal for recovery of Rs. 25,500 including Rs. 18,750 on account of the call money (due in respect of the second call made in 1938) and Rs. 6,750 on account of interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum.

[6] On behalf of the defendant, it was denied that Raja Jagat Kumar signed the Memorandum of Association or agreed to purchase 1500 shares. It was pointed out that no allotment of shares was made to the Raja, and that the notice of the call in respect of which the suit was brought was bad in law. It was further pleaded that even if the Raja be held to have purchased any shares in the plaintiff company, they were surrendered by the Collector after the Raja's death, and the surrender was accepted by the company. That a call in respect of 12/8 per share could not be made and that the proceedings relating to the company going into liquidation were not legal as the necessary formalities required by law were not complied with and accordingly the present liquidator had no right to institute the suit. The liability to pay interest was denied. It was also pleaded that the suit was barred under S. 20, Court of Wards Act. Two other pleas namely that the suit was barred by the law of limitation and that a fraud was practised upon Raja Jagat Kumar in inducing him to put his signature to the Memorandum of Association of the company, were also raised. It is, however, unnecessary to consider these pleas as they were not pressed in appeal.

[7] The learned Civil Judge of Malihabad, by whom the case was heard, framed the following issues:

1. (a) Did the late Raja Jagat Kumar sign the Articles of Association and Memorandum, as alleged by the plaintiffs? If so, its effect?

(b) Did the late Raja Jagat Kumar enter into an agreement to purchase 1500 shares at Rs. 25 each?

(c) Did the plaintiff make the calls as alleged? Were the calls valid? Could the plaintiff make a call for Rs. 12-8-0 per share on 27-8-1938, as alleged in paragraph 5 of the plaint?

2. Did the plaintiff agree to forego the claim in respect of the aforesaid shares, and did defendant surrender them, as alleged in paragraph 15 of the written statement? If so, its effect?

3. (a) Is the suit barred by time under S. 20, Court of Wards Act?

(b) Is the suit barred by time under the general law?

4. Whether the agreement about the purchase of 1500 shares is vitiated by fraud as alleged by the defendant?

5. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to get any interest? If so, at what rate?

6. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

7. Was no allotment necessary in case of the subscribers of the Memorandum of the Association, as alleged by the plaintiff? Was any allotment made?

8. Did the plaintiff company go into liquidation and is the plaintiff entitled to sue?

[8] The learned Judge held that Raja Jagat Kumar signed the Memorandum and the Articles of Association of the company and agreed to take 1500 shares of Rs. 25 each, and that a call for payment of Rs. 12-8-0 per share was made on 27-8-1938, which was a good and valid call. As regards the plea of surrender of shares, it was held that the Secretary of the company did forego the amount of the calls that had been made up to 8-11-1934, though he was not authorised to forego the allotment money and the application money. The pleas based upon S. 20, U. P. Courts of Wards Act, the law of limitation and fraud were negatived. It was further held that no formal allotment of shares to Raja Jagat Kumar, who was one of the promoters of the company, was necessary; that the proceedings relating to the company going into liquidation were not vitiated by any defects and that in the circumstances the plaintiff company was entitled to the interest claimed. The suit was accordingly decreed. Dissatisfied with this decision, the defendant has preferred this appeal.

[9] All the pleas raised in the lower Court except those covered by issues 3 (a) and (b) and issue 4, were raised before us in appeal.

[10] It was contended that the plaintiff-respondent had failed to prove that Raja Jagat Kumar signed the Memorandum and the Articles of Association, or that he agreed to take 1500 shares. [After discussing the evidence on the point their Lordships held that Raja Jagat Kumar signed the Memorandum and the Articles of Association and agreed to take 1500 shares.]

[11] Lengthy arguments were addressed to us on the provisions of S. 24, Companies Act, and considerable time was devoted to a discussion of Peel's case (1867) 2 Ch. 674.[1] In view of the finding of fact at which we have arrived, it is unnecessary to examine in detail either S. 24, Companies Act, or the dicta laid down in (1867) 2 Ch. 674.[1] We may, however, point out that by S. 6 (3) in the case of a company limited by shares, each subscriber is required to write opposite his name the number of shares he takes. We find that in the Memorandum of Association of the company to which this appeal relates (Ex. 2/P. W. 1) the concluding portion of para. 6 is as follows :

"We the several persons whose names are subscribed, are desirous of being formed into a company in accordance with this Memorandum of Association and we respectively agree to take the number of shares in the capital of the company set opposite to our respective names."

Just below this paragraph are given the names of the persons who subscribed the Memorandum of Association and opposite each name is mentioned the number of shares taken by the subscriber. The first name is that of Raja Jagat Kumar, Raja of Sahaspur, with the figure 1500 noted against it in the column headed "number of shares taken by each subscriber." It is difficult to believe that Raja Jagat Kumar signed the Memorandum of Association in ignorance of what was clearly noted just above where he signed his name. This is another reason which confirms the view taken by us.

[12] Section 24 (1) reads as follows :

"A certificate of incorporation given by the Registrar in respect of any association shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent and incidental thereto have been complied with and that the association is a company authorised to be registered and duly registered under this Act."

This rule of evidence is applicable to associations constituted under the Indian Companies Act. Section 6 lays down what the memorandum of association of a company shall state. Admittedly a certificate of registration was given by the Registrar in respect of Equity Insurance Co., Ltd. The certificate is, therefore, conclusive evidence of the fact that each subscriber wrote opposite his name the number of shares he took. It is not disputed that Raja Jagat Kumar subscribed the memorandum of association. We find the figure indicating the number of shares taken by him noted opposite his name. In view of the provisions of S. 6, read with S. 24 the appellant cannot be permitted to prove the contrary (S. 4, Evidence Act, 1 [1] of 1872; and 39 I. A. 237.[2])

[13] It was suggested at one stage of arguments that even if Raja Jagat Kumar signed the memorandum of association for 1500 shares, there was no liability incurred to pay any calls made in respect of those shares because "there was no allotment of any shares to the Raja." The argument is without substance. A subscriber of the memorandum of association of a company is deemed under S. 30 of the Act to have agreed to become a member of the company and on the registration of the company the Act requires that his name shall be entered in the register of members. Section 30 of our Act corresponds to S. 25, English Companies Act of 1929 and to S. 24, English Companies Act of 1908. It was held by Lindley M. R. in (1900) 2 Ch. 56[3] that subscribers to the memorandum of association of a company limited by shares are liable, but only liable, by virtue of their subscription to pay up the amount of their shares as and when called up. A subscriber of a memorandum of association becomes by S. 23 (the Master of Rolls was dealing with the Act of 1862) a member in respect of the number of shares subscribed by him without any further application by him or allotment of shares to him. Every such subscriber becomes a member ipso facto on the incorporation of the company, and liable as the holder of whatever number of shares he has subscribed for. Section 30 of our Act is the same as S. 25 of the English Act of 1929. The section deals with two classes (1) persons who have subscribed the company's memorandum of association, and (2) those who have agreed to be members and whose names are entered in the register. A person may become a member or a shareholder in any of the following ways: (1) By subscribing the memorandum of association before its registration; (2) by agreeing with the company to take a share or shares and being placed on the register of members; (3) by taking a transfer of a share or shares, and being placed on the register of members; (4) by registration on succession to a deceased or bankrupt member, and (5) by allowing his name to be on the register of members or otherwise holding himself out or allowing himself to be held out as a member. The original subscribers are by the act of Legislature deemed to have taken shares set opposite their names, the object being that the public might rely with confidence on the subscribers of the Memorandum becoming members of the company. In the case of subscribers of the memorandum, no allotment of shares is necessary: see (1877) 5 Ch. D. 525.[4]. Nor is the entry of their names on the registers of members necessary, (1885) 29 Ch. D. 444[5] and A.I.R. 1938 Sind 187.[6]

[14] It was next argued that after the death of Raja Jagat Kumar, the Collector of Moradabad, as manager of Court of Wards, Sahaspur estate, surrendered the shares held by the Raja and that the surrender was accepted by the Secretary of the plaintiff company; accordingly Raja Jagat Kumar's liability in respect of the shares was extinguished. On 23rd April 1934, the following letter (Ex. 13) was written by the Secretary of the company to the Collector of Moradabad. This was in reply to the notice published in the Gazette calling upon all creditors of the Raja under S. 17, Court of Wards Act, to submit their claims:

"Sir,

Re: Late Raja Jagat Kumar of Sahaspur.

With reference to your notice about the claims against the late Raja Jagat Kumar of Sahaspur, Bilari estate, district Moradabad, we beg to inform you that the late Raja was holding 1500 shares of Rs. 25 each as a promoter of this company and was also a Director in the same. No amount was paid by the late Raja towards these shares and the application and allotment money at Rs. 5 each on each account or Rs. 10 per share of the share of Rs. 25 each has been made. At present a sum of Rs. 15,000 is due from the late Raja towards the application and allotment money and the remaining calls will be communicated to you as they are made. Hope you will make a note of this when inquiring into the extent of the late Raja's indebtedness."

To this the following reply was sent by the Collector (Ex 16):

"Dear Sir,

With reference to your registered letter dated 23rd April 1934, addressed to the Collector of Moradabad, regarding your claim of Rs. 15,000 against the late Raja Jagat Kumar of Sahaspur, I do not quite follow your claim. Does it mean that the Raja had to pay you this amount for holding shares? If that is so I would like to withdraw from this position as we no longer want to incur any further expenditure of this kind. Will you please send me a detailed explanation of your claim?"

On 8th November 1934, Dinshaw Trust Company, who were the Managing Agents of Equity Insurance Company, sent a reply Ex. A17 to the Collector of Moradabad as follows:

"Sir,

In reference to your letter No. 165 dated the 26th ultimo which reached us on the 6th current we have the honour to inform you that our claim against the late Raja Jagat Kumar is for the cost of 1500 shares of Rs. 25 each (Rs 10 paid up) which he had applied for as one of the signatories of this company.

Under separate cover we are sending you a copy of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the original documents with his signatures are filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, U.P., Lucknow.

As in your letter No. 278/X dated 3rd May 1934, you wished that estate should not be burdened with this debt, in deference to your wishes we will forego the claim, although legally we are entitled to enforce same, and the giving up of this amount entails a heavy strain on the company."

[15] It was contended on the basis of this correspondence that there was a surrender of shares by the Collector on behalf of the Raja and the surrender was accepted by the company through its managing agents. In reply to an argument advanced on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the letter of 8th November was sent by the General Secretary, who had no authority to accept any surrender of shares, it was pointed out that the acceptance of surrender was acted upon by the company as will appear from the copy of return of allotment of shares prepared under S. 104 of the Act, (Ex. A1), which does not contain the Raja's name. This document is dated 2nd October 1934. Though the letter accepting the surrender was despatched on 8th November, it appears that the company had decided upon acceptance of the surrender of shares subscribed by Raja Jagat Kumar before 2nd October 1934. The appellant's learned counsel further relied on the summary of capital and list of share-holders, Ex. A6, made up to 31st December 1934. The number of shares mentioned therein (2642) clearly shows that the shares subscribed by Raja Jagat Kumar were not included in this statement; nor do we find the Raja's name mentioned in the list of share holders. Article 34 of the Articles of Association gives the directors the authority to accept a surrender of any shares "on such terms as they think fit provided that no part of the assets of the company shall be employed in the purchase of the company's shares." Under Art. 119, the powers and duties which were expressly or impliedly vested in the directors by the Articles of Association, except the power of borrowing money, were to be taken as delegated to the managing agents. In view of the conclusion at which we have arrived on the legality of acceptance of the surrender of shares we will without any detailed examination of the material bearing on the point, assume that by their letter dated 8th November, the managing agents agreed to forego their claim against the Raja.

This must naturally relate to the claim which was then made. This is clear from para. 1 of the letter. The claim, it will be recalled, made by Ex. 13 was for Rs. 15,000. Specific reference is made to this claim by mentioning the number of shares subscribed by the Raja, the price of each share, and thereafter adding ("Rs. 10 paid up"). Though some support is lent to the appellant's contention by Ex. A1 and Ex. A6 having examined the entire correspondence on this subject, we are unable to hold that there was a surrender of the shares held by Raja Jagat Kumar, or that the company either through its directors, or managing agents, accepted this surrender.

[16] It appears to us, however, that even if the Collector intended to surrender the shares which is by no means clear and the secretary of the company intended to accept the same, the transaction would be ultra vires. There can be no doubt that the secretary's act in the present case would not only mean release by the company to the shareholder of the money due in respect of the calls that had already been made, but also release of uncalled capital on the shares held by him. This is not permitted by law. Under our law, it is not open to a shareholder to surrender the shares held by him, or to the company to accept the surrender, unless the act of the company can be brought within the rules relating to forfeiture of shares. That a surrender of share amounts to a reduction of capital, which is unlawful, unless sanctioned by the Court, was laid down by Cozens-Hardy L. J. in (1902) 2 Ch. 14[7] where it was held that a surrender of shares in a limited company, the company releasing the shareholder from further liability in respect of the shares, is equivalent to a purchase of the shares by the company and is therefore illegal and null and void, on the principle of the case in (1887) 12 A. C. 409.[8] Under S. 55 of our Act, the share capital of a company limited by shares can be reduced only if so authorised by its articles, and subject to confirmation by the Court. To reduce the share capital of the company in violation of the provisions of S. 55, unless it is done in conformity with some other provision of the Act is illegal and cannot be recognised. Admittedly in the present case the reduction of the share capital of the company was brought about not in any of the modes provided by the Act, and so must be held to be void. The result, therefore, is that the appellant cannot take advantage of any acceptance of surrender of shares, even if it could be established.

[17] Another point raised by the learned counsel for the appellant was that the call of 27th August 1938 was invalid. Article 23 of the Articles of Association reads thus:

"The directors may from time to time subject to any terms on which any share may have been issued make such calls as they think fit upon the shareholders in respect of all moneys unpaid on the shares held by them respectively and each member shall pay the amount of every call so made on him to the persons and at the times and places appointed by the directors. A call may be made payable by instalments."

It was urged that the directors failed to appoint the time, place and person to whom the call money was to be paid. There is a short reply to this argument. The directors delegated their power to make calls to the managing agents. Article 119 has already been referred to. Everything that could be done by the directors, except borrowing money on behalf of the company, could be done by the managing agents. On 27th August 1938 (Ex. 55) the Board of Directors passed the following resolution:

"On the managing agents pointing out in the meeting that funds were not available for depositing the security as ordered by the Chief Court of Avadh, and also for filing suits against the defaulting shareholders for recovery of arrears of previous call made on 26th February 1936, which they had not paid till now, it was resolved that a further call of the entire balance of the unpaid capital on the shares issued by the company, be and is hereby made in pursuance of article 23 of the Articles of Association of the company, and the managing agents are hereby authorised to take necessary steps in the matter."

The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant was that the resignation of Messrs. Bankers' Syndicate, who were the managing agents, was accepted and thereafter any person representing the Bankers' Syndicate could not act for the company. On 27th October 1937, the following resolution was passed by the Board of Directors under the chairmanship of Mr. Parshotam Das;

"Resolved that the resignation of Messrs. Bankers' Syndicate from the managing agency of the company be accepted but they should be requested to continue to function till such time as a new management is not introduced and they should cease to function as such Managing Agents from the date on which they hand over the charge to the new management."

We agree with the learned Judge in the Court below that the managing agents had the authority "to continue to carry on the business of the company" till the newly appointed General Manager took over charge. There is no evidence to show that any new manager had been appointed or that he took over charge on the date on which the notice for the call, forming the basis of the suit which has given rise to this appeal, was made. It is not necessary that the time and place of payment should be specified in the resolution authorising the making of the call. This should be done subsequently: see I. L. R. (1942) 1 Cal. 132[9].

[18] Another contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellant was that inasmuch as the provisions of S. 207 of the Act were not complied with, the entire proceeding relating to the winding up of the Company was bad in law. It was urged that the declaration referred to in S. 207 (1) (EX. A 20) was not accompanied by an affidavit. We find however that EX. A 19 is an affidavit sworn by Jagannath, one of the directors of the company. It bears the same date as the declaration though it was sworn before Kh. Quamaruddin Ahmad, Special Magistrate, Lucknow, on 7th November 1940. We do not think that this affects the validity of the proceeding. It was also urged that the affidavit was sworn by only one director and not by all who signed the declaration. We are of opinion that S. 207 does not require that there should be an affidavit by each of the directors making the declaration. The expression used is "verified by an affidavit." We are clear that the requirements of the section were met by the affidavit sworn by Jagannath.

[19] The last point raised related to interest. Article 27 of the Articles of Association reads thus:

"If the sum payable in respect of any call or instalment be not paid before or on the day appointed for payment thereof the holder for the time being of the share in respect of which such call or instalment shall be due shall be liable to pay interest for the same at such rate as the Directors may determine not exceeding 12 per cent. per annum from the day appointed for payment thereof to the time of actual payment."

There is no evidence, however, that the directors fixed any rate in the present instance. By the plaint interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum "as provided in the Article of Association" was claimed from the date of notice, 27-8-1938, and the whole of it was decreed by the lower Court. Interest can be claimed by a creditor, (1) under a contract, (2) under a statute, or (3) on the grounds of usage : see 16 Luck. 701.[10] It was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 65 I. A. 66[11] that interest for the period prior to the date of the suit may be awarded if there is an agreement for the payment of interest at a fixed rate, or it is payable by the usage of trade having the force of law, or under the provisions of any substantive law entitling the plaintiff to recover interest. Reliance in the present case was placed on Art. 27 of the Articles of Association, but no rate having been fixed by the Directors, it is not possible to decree the claim for interest on that basis. May be that the directors did not want to charge any interest on this call. Their failure to fix any rate of interest is capable of such a construction. Nor can the claim for interest succeed on any of the two other grounds mentioned above.

[20] We hold, therefore, that the decision of the lower Court as regards the payment of the call money must be upheld. The decree in so far as it awards interest up to the date of the suit is set aside. But for the modification noted above the appeal is dismissed. Parties shall get and pay costs in both Courts in proportion to their success and failure. The stay order dated 11-9-1942, is vacated.

First Appeal No. 115 of 1942, Decided on 8-12-1947, from decree of Civil Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, D/-21-10-1942.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92—Public or private trust—Tests—Real test is not whether "Utsarg" was proved but whether facts and circumstances prove that that user by public was as of right.

The performance of the ceremony of "Prasad Utsarg" does not provide the infallible indication of the nature of the trust. "Utsarg" is nothing more than parting with the proprietary right which is just as much necessary in private endowments as in public endowments. The real test as to whether a trust was a private or a public trust is not whether the "Utsarg" is proved but whether the facts and circumstances establish that the user by the public was as of right: Case law referred. [Paras 18, 23]

(b) Civil P.C. (1908), S. 92—Scope—Suit for administration of trust, removal of trustees and appointment of new ones—One of plaintiffs claiming to be sole surviving trustee — Defendants alleged to be not properly appointed trustees — Suit held fell within S. 92.

It cannot be said that a suit brought by several plaintiffs for the due administration of the trust, removal of trustees, appointment of new trustees and for accounts, alleging that plaintiff 1 was the sole surviving trustee and defendants were not properly appointed trustees, does not come within the scope of S. 92 merely because it was open to plaintiff 1 to follow a different course, namely, to bring a suit for the vindication of his personal rights. The position of the defendants in such a case is not that of trespassers but that of trustees de son tort: 1 A. I. R. 1914 Oudh 408 25 A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 339 and 27 A. I. (c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92—Breach of trust alleged in plaint is sufficient to give jurisdiction under S. 92.

It is the allegations contained in the plaint that determine jurisdiction. If, therefore, a breach of trust is alleged in the plaint that is sufficient to confer jurisdiction under S. 92: 27 A. I. R. 1940 Pat. 425 and 10 A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 67, Rel. on. [Para 41]

It is as much a breach of trust for a person not entitled to act as trustee to meddle with trust property as it is for a properly appointed trustee not to manage the property. [Para 44]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92—Suit to get fresh trustees appointed on ground that no validly appointed trustees were in existence falls under S. 92.

A suit to get fresh trustees appointed on the ground that there are no validly appointed trustees in existence clearly comes within the second category of suit contemplated by S. 92, Civil P. C., namely, "where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust:" 1 A. I. R. 1914 Oudh 408, Foll. [Para 41]

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92—Scope—Suit for vindication of private rights is beyond scope of S. 92.

If the suit is for the vindication of the private rights of the plaintiffs or any of them and not for the protection of the trust it is a suit which should have been brought in the regular manner and it would be beyond the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C.: 14 A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 338, Foll. [Para 46]

Where in a suit under S. 92 both the parties accepted the position that there was only one trust and the case proceeded on those lines, a new plea that there were several trusts and the suit related to only one of them which was not raised in the trial Court or in the grounds of appeal and which was inconsistent with the original pleadings of the defendants cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal. (g) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 35—Trust case—Suit for appointing new trustees after removal of defendants—Trial Court ordering costs of plaintiffs to be paid by defendants personally—Order held justified.

A suit under S. 92 was brought for the removal of the defendants who were alleged to be trustees not properly appointed and for appointing new ones and for accounts. The defendants opposed the grant of the sanction by the Advocate General. The suit was contested on the ground that the trust was a private trust although under a compromise which was not accepted by the Court the parties had agreed that the trust was a public trust. The defendants took a plea that they were lawfully appointed trustees which was clearly untenable in view of the clear terms of the trust deed. The trial Court made the plaintiff's costs payable by the defendants personally.

Held, that the order of the Court was justified in the circumstances. [Para 63]

Judgment :— The following short pedigree will help to elucidate the facts of the case :

[2] In mohalla Top Darwaza in the city of Lucknow there existed a temple (Shivala) built by the ancestors of Jagannath Prasad. In 1895 he built a Thakurdwara near that temple and installed in it an idol of Sri Radha Krishnaji Maharaj on 7th February 1895. On 17th September 1905, there was a partition of their ancestral property between Jagannath Prasad and Lachhmi Narain, and on 21st September 1905, both the brothers executed a deed of trust dedicating property to Sheoji and Thakurji—each set of properties being separately specified in the deed (Ex. 1). The properties dedicated to Thakurji consisted of moveable and immovable property and were valued at Rs. 1,250 including the Thakurdwara itself, which was valued at Rs. 500. The properties dedicated to Sheoji were valued at Rs. 125 and were a "dalan" behind the Shivala and a shop. By the deed five persons, the two authors of the Trust, Munshi Mata Prasad, Pandit Kesho Nath and Pandit Gauri Shankar, were appointed trustees and a scheme was laid down for the appointment of fresh trustees in case any of the trustees "is not fit to work or refuses to work."

[3] On 19th September 1907, Jagannath Prasad alone executed another deed of trust (Ex. A-2), conveying a house in Kashmiri Mohalla in the city of Lucknow to Sri Radha Krishnaji Mahraj and appointing the same persons as those appointed by the deed of 1905, with the exception of Lachmi Narain, as managers. All the conditions of the deed of 1905 were made applicable. In 1908 he, as manager of the Thakurdwara, acquired a house in Mohalla Top Darwaza (vide Ex. A-3 sale-deed).

[4] On 16th April 1917, Kamta Prasad, a cousin of Jagannath Prasad, executed a deed

(Ex. A-4) dedicating some land in village Rudhoi, district Lucknow, some trees in village Bhumar, district Lucknow and a half share in a house in Moballa Top Darwaza in the city of Lucknow. By this deed he appointed Jagannath Prasad, Pandit Gauri Shankar, Pandit Kesho Nath and Radha Krishna Shukul (defendant 1) trustees. Thus it will be seen that Lachmi Narain was omitted from the list of trustees and Radha Krishna was added. It is agreed that Mata Prasad had died in 1914.

[5] On 25th March 1940, Jagannath Prasad died leaving no issue. His widow, Janki Dei, became his successor and on 26th November 1940, she executed a will, Ex. 3. In this will the lady recited the religious bent of mind and the charitable inclinations of her husband. She then stated that she was in financial difficulties with regard to the necessary ceremonies for the benefit of her husband's soul and for her own maintenance so much so that the trustees had to grant her Rs. 8 per month for her subsistence in consideration of which she had agreed to execute a will dedicating all the property in her possession. She, therefore, proceeded to execute the will to "express my personal opinion and reduce to writing directions of my husband in this deed which is to take effect after my death."

It is further stated that the testator's husband had always treated his nephew, Radha Krishna, as his son and that she also did the same, while there had been hostility between Jagannath Prasad and his brother, Lachmi Narain. She accordingly dedicated the entire property of which she might die possessed stipulating that, so long as she was alive, she would remain in enjoyment of it. Nine persons are named in this deed as trustees of whom 7 were defendants 1 to 4 and 6 to 8.

[6] Mt. Janki Dei died on 25th March 1941, and disputes began at once between the trustees and Pandit Lachmi Narain, so that on 27th May 1941, the trustees gave notice to the latter to vacate a house belonging to the trust which he was occupying because

"since the death of Jagannath Chaturvedi some overt acts done on your behalf indicate your intention that you have become against the trust" (Ex. A-26).

To this the sons of Lachmi Narain replied by making a claim to considerable moveable property which, they alleged their uncle, Jagannath, had left (Ex. A-28). This claim was repudiated by the trustees who insisted upon Lachmi Narain vacating the house (Ex. A-29).

[7] Thereafter the present plaintiffs applied for permission to file a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., and permission having been granted by the Advocate-General on 3rd December 1941, the suit, out of which this appeal arises, was instituted on 2nd January 1941. The plaintiffs alleged : (1) That the temple had been dedicated for the benefit of the Hindu Public generally, and property had been dedicated for their upkeep by several persons. (2) That under the conditions of the deed of trust, Jagannath Prasad was appointed manager by the trustees and he continued to work as such till his death. (3) That Kesho Nath, Gauri Shankar and Mata Prasad had died during the lifetime of Jagannath: thus on the latter's death plaintiff 1, Lachmi Narain was the sole surviving trustee. (4) That defendant 1, Radha Krishna had great influence and he used it to create mischief and quarrels in the family which he utilised to induce Mt. Janki Dei to create a fictitious trust. (5) That all the defendants combined to allow defendant 1, to derive unlawful advantage from the trust and, after the death of Mt. Janki Dei "the defendants, now alleging themselves to be trustees, do not allow plaintiff 1 to manage the trust property." (6) That it is necessary to appoint trustees in the place of all the trustees except plaintiff 1, and to take accounts from the defendants who are not lawful trustees.

[8] Consequently the suit was filed with the sanction of the Advocate-General and the following reliefs were claimed : (1) A declaration be granted that the defendants are not lawful trustees of the Trust of Thakurji and Mahadeoji situated at Top Darwaza and they be removed from the trusteesbip. (2) That four new trustees be appointed according to the conditions of the trust deed and a proper scheme be prepared for the management of the trust. (3) That accounts of the income and expenditure of the trust property be taken from the defendants.

[9] The defendants filed a joint written statement in which they pleaded: (1) That Lachmi Narain had nothing to do with the construction of the Thakurdwara and temple, nor did he dedicate any property but all the property dedicated belonged to Jagannath who only got Lachmi Narain's signature to the deed by way of precaution. (2) It was admitted that Jagannath Maharaj himself as well as other persons had dedicated various properties at different times to the said temples. (3) It was denied that Lachmi Narain was a trustee. He had been opposed to the trust and had caused loss to it. He never took any interest in the trust and did not perform any work relating to the trust so he was removed long ago. (4) That there is no conspiracy to enable defendant 1, to enjoy the profits and the defendants do not rely upon the will of Janki Dei for their status as trustees but they were duly appointed by Jagannath Maharaj under the terms of the deed of trust. (5) That Lachmi Narain claimed property dedicated by Kamta Prasad as his own property. (6) That after the death of Jagannath Prasad and his widow, plaintiffs 1 and 2 asserted title to property belonging to the trust and tried to induce tenants not to pay rents. They thus acted against the interest of the trust. (7) That the trust involved in suit is a private trust and S. 92, Civil P. C. is not applicable. (8) That there is no charge of mismanagement against any of the trustees who are respectable and responsible men. (9) That the suit is mala fide to serve the acts of plaintiffs 1 and 2.

[10] It was pleaded later on that, according to the allegations in the plaint, the defendants were nothing more than trespassers and consequently no suit under S. 92, Civil P. C. could be maintained against them.

[11] Upon these pleadings, the Civil Judge of Mohanlalganj at Lucknow, framed the following issues:

1. Did Jagannath make a public trust as alleged?
2. Are the plaintiffs the representatives of the Hindu public of Lucknow and can they maintain the present suit?
3. Did defendant 1 not allow plaintiff 1 to carry out the duties as a trustee? If so, its effect?
4. Is the interest of the plaintiffs 1 and 2 adverse to the trust? If so, its effect?
5. Have the plaintiffs left out any of the trust properties? If so, what are the trust properties?
6. Have the plaintiffs got any cause of action for the suit?
7. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?
8. Are the defendants duly elected trustees?
9. If not so, can the present suit under S. 92 be maintained?

[12] The learned Civil Judge found:

1. That the trust is a public trust.
2. That plaintiff 1, being a founder of the trust and defendant 2 being his son, they had a sufficient interest in the trust property to justify them in commencing proceeding under S. 92, Civil P. C.
3. That defendant 1 did not allow plaintiff 1 to carry out his duties as a trustee.
4. That the defendants are not duly appointed trustees.
5. That, in spite of this, they are not rank trespassers but trustees de son tort and consequently they may be sued under S. 92, Civil P. C.
6. That the interests of plaintiffs 1 and 2 are not adverse to the trust, and any claims made by them to property of the trust was made under a bona fide belief of right.
7. That all the property shown in Ex. A-32 on pp. 5 to 9 except the houses shown as items 15 and 16 on page 9 are trust property.
8. That the trust is not being administered according to the wishes of the founder.

[13] The Court accordingly directed the removal of the defendants and appointed five new trustees—Lachmi Narain is not one of them. It also directed that accounts be taken and that defendant 1 should hand over the trust property to the new trustees. It refused to frame any new scheme and held that the scheme laid down in EX. 1, the first trust deed, was suitable. The defendants have appealed to this Court and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections.

[14] The appellants' learned advocate has divided his contentions under the following heads:

I. That the suit did not come within the purview of S. 92, Civil P. C. on the following grounds: (a) it did not relate to a public trust but to a private trust; (b) it was not a suit against trustees since the defendants were alleged by the plaintiffs to be trespassers and plaintiff 1 claimed to be the sole trustee; (c) the interest of plaintiffs 1 and 2 is adverse to the trust; (d) no breach of trust has been proved and no necessity for any directions by the Court has been shown: (e) the suit is not bona fide since it is intended to enforce the private rights of Luchmi Narain and not to safeguard the trust.

II .That the defendants are duly appointed trustees and they are not liable to be removed without proof of breach of trust which has not been proved in this case.

III. That costs of the suit have been wrongly allowed against the defendants.

IV. That some properties belonging to the trust have been omitted.

V. That there were two trusts and two sets of trustees and the suit relates only to the first trust. Hence no decree can be passed in respect of the other trusts.

[15] The sole questions raised in the cross-objections relate to the extent of the trust properties; the plaintiffs contending that only the properties, entered in lists A and B attached to the plaint are trust properties, and the failure of the Civil Judge to appoint plaintiff 1 as trustee.

[16] With regard to his first point, the appellants, learned advocate bases his contention upon the absence of evidence to show that the "utsarg" was performed. He contends that the difference between a public and a private endowment is that, in the former, "utsarg" is performed while in the latter it is not. In support of this contention he relies upon the decisions of a Bench of this Court in 11 O. W. N. 1435[1] in which, he contends that, the learned Judges have upheld this contention. No doubt the head-note supports his argument but a reference to the judgment itself at page 1450 shows that there was no decision by the Court to this effect but that it was only mentioned that a certain witness, R. S. Narain Swami, had deposed that the real criterion of a temple being a public one is proof of the performance of the ceremony known as the "Prasad Utsarg." The learned Judges, in that case did hold that the temple was a private one not because no "utsarg" was formed—indeed no evidence as to this could be given since the temple had been in existence for a century and a half at least—but because they could not believe that a Muslim ruler, like the Nawob Asafuddaula, would have made a grant to a temple for the worship of an idol and thereafter there was no evidence that the grantee had performed the "Prasad Utsarg" and

"there is no evidence that even after the grant of five bighas of waste land by Nawab Asafuddaula to Dariao Gir, the latter or any descendant of his ever consecrated this land or the buildings standing thereon to the idol of Bhaironji."

They then held:

"In the absence of any such evidence we fail to see how the rights of private ownership granted to Dariao Gir in nawabi times and inherited by his descendants and subsequently re-invested in them by the British Government at the time of the preparation of the khasra abadi of the city of Lucknow can be snatched away by us from the plaintiffs and be made to vest arbitrarily in the idol of Bhaironji."

In another part of the same judgment, at page 1452, the learned Judges say:

"The learned counsel for the defendants-appellants has argued that user can convert a private temple into a public trust, but that user must be unfettered and unrestricted by any act on the part of the owners of the temple. In other words, the owner or owners of the temple must allow the general public the free use of the temple at all hours of the day and night without let or hindrance and further the offerings made to the idol in the temple should be utilised for the upkeep of the temple. In the present case there is evidence, which is accepted by us as true and which goes to show that the temple of Bhaironji remained closed for some time in the year, and nobody challenged the rights of the plaintiffs to do so. Further it is proved to our satisfaction in this case that the offerings made to the idol were used by the plaintiffs for their own personal benefit and were shared equally by the three branches of Dariao Gir's family."

[17] There was an appeal from this judgment to His Majesty in Council and the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee is reported in 1939 O. W. N. 1078.[2] In this judgment the absence of proof of the ceremony of Prasad Utsarg is not even mentioned by their Lordships. Their Lordships considered the proved facts of that case and held that they did establish the claim that the temple was a private trust. The following passage, to be found at page 1085 of the judgment, is instructive:

"Facts and circumstances, in order to be accepted as sufficient proof of dedication of a temple as a public temple, must be considered in their historical setting in such a case as the present; and dedication to the public is not to be readily inferred when it is known that the temple property was acquired by grant to an individual or family. Such an inference if made from the fact of user by the public is hazardous, since it would not in general be consonant with Hindu sentiments or practice that worshippers should be turned away; and as worship generally implies offerings of some kind it is not to be expected that the managers of a private temple should in all circumstances desire to discourage popularity. Thus in 61 I. A. 405[3] the Board expressed itself as being slow to act on the mere fact of the public having been freely admitted to a temple. The value of public user as evidence of dedication depends on the circumstances which give strength to the inference that the user was as of right."

[18] Thus this decision does not bear out the appellants' contention and real test laid down by their Lordships, as well as the learned Judges of this Court, was not whether the "utsarg" was proved but whether the facts and circumstances established that the user by the public was as of right. This is also the test that has been laid down in a large number of decisions of various Courts which are collected together in Ghosh's Law of Endowments, 2nd edition, page 140. Neither Ghosh nor Mulla mention the performance of the ceremony of "Prasad Utsarg" as providing the infallible indication of the nature of the trust.

[19] In A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 44[4] also, their Lordships did not even mention the ceremony of "Prasad Utsarg" but held that "It could be a legitimate inference to draw that the founder of the temple had ..... dedicated the temple to the public if it was found that he had held out the temple to the public as a pubiic temple."

[20] Mulla in his Hindu Law, paragraph 424 (1) says:

"424. (1) Religious endowments are either public or private. In a public endowment the dedication is for the use or benefit of the public. When property is set apart for the worship of a family god in which the public are not interested, the endowment is a private one. Where the main purpose of the endowment was the puja of a deity established by the settlor in a house, and the surplus income was directed to be utilised for feeding the poor and helping the students, it was held the trust was a private trust and that all the trustees must join in its execution. The distinction between public and private endowments is important, for it has been held by the Judicial Committee that, where a temple is a public temple, the dedication may be such that the family itself could not put an end of it, but in the case of property dedicated to a family idol, the consensus of the whole family might give the property another direction. This is regarded as one test to determine whether the endowment is private or public. It has accordingly been held that where the heirs of the founder are unable to carry on the worship of the family idol out of the income of the endowment, they may transfer the idol and its property to another family for the purpose of carrying on the worship. Such a transfer, if made without consideration and for the benefit of the idol, is valid and binding on the heirs of the transferors. In other respects, however, there is no distinction between the two kinds of endowments. Thus property dedicated to the services of a family idol cannot be alienated except for unavoidable necessity, nor can it be taken in execution of a personal decree against the shebait."

[21] Again in paragraph 407 (2) the learned author says:

"407 (2) A Hindu, who wishes to establish a religious or charitable institution, may according to his law, express his purpose and endow it. A trust is not required for that purpose. All that is necessary is that the religious or charitable purposes should be clearly specified and that the property intended for the endowment should be set apart for or dedicated to those purposes, Even in the case of a dedication to an idol, which cannot itself physically hold lands, it is not necessary, though it is usual, to vest the lands in trustees. Nor is it necessary that there should be any express words of gift to the idol. No religious ceremony such as sankalp or samarpan is necessary and a clear and unequivocal manifestation of intention to create a trust and vesting of the same in the donor or another as a trustee is enough to constitute dedication."

[22] Similarly, we find no mention of this test—namely, the performance of the "Prashad Utsarg"—either in Golapchandra Sarkar Sastri's works on Hindu Law or in Gour's Hindu Code.

[23] Saraswati in his Hindu Law of Endowments does mention the "utsarg" in para. 86 at page 127 but he only mentions it as the formula by which the owner divests himself of proprietary right and vests it in the deity. Ghosh in his Hindu Law of Endowment, p. 217, says the same; neither of them mentions it as a point of distinction between a private and a public endowment and, according to this view, it would appear that "utsarg" is nothing more than parting with the proprietary right which is just as much necessary in private endowments as in public endowments.

[24] It is surprising that, if the performance of the "Pershad Utsarg" was such an essential element in a public endowment, as distinguished from a private endowment, neither their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, nor the learned Judges of various High Courts noticed it in dealing with the numerous cases that came before them in which the question involved was whether a particular endowment was public or private endowment. Further it is equally surprising that the eminent Hindu jurists who wrote the text books on the subject should not have noticed this distinction. We must, therefore, consider not the question whether the "utsarg" is proved to have been performed, but whether the other tests laid down for distinguishing public from private endowments are shown to exist.

[25] There is a considerable body of evidence on this point and the plaintiffs and defendants' witnesses both agree that "the Shivala is always open. Every member of the public is free to go and worship at the Shivala": see D. W. 1, Pandit Sidh Nath Misra. The same witness further admits "no private individual or private family draws benefit under the trust in suit." The most important evidence, however, of the nature of the trust is furnished by the deed of dedication, Ex. 1, by which Jagannath Prasad and Lachmi Narain dedicated property for the upkeep of the Thakurdwara and Shivala. This deed clearly recognises the right of the public in this matter. Firstly, among the first trustees appointed there were only two members of the family and the three others were strangers. The line of trustees was to continue is the line of these five trustees. Secondly, the deed provides that, if the successors of the executants fail to appoint fresh trustees within two months of any vacancy,

"the people of the mohalla or the Hindus who had the right to worship (jo mustahaq puja karne ke hain) or the authorities for the time being should appoint members . . . ."

This obviously recognises the right of the public to worship in the temple. The public were admitted not as a matter of permission or favour but as a matter of right according to the wishes of the founder. Thus one of the principal tests laid down for determining whether a temple is a public one, namely, whether the public is admitted as of right, is found to exist in this case: see 9 O. W. N. 966,[5] 3 O. W. N. 645[6] at p. 664 and 61 I. A. 405.[3]

[26] Further it is found that other members of the public have made endowments to the temple: vide Ex. A-10 and the statement of D. W. 3 Chutkoo Singh. The fact that there was dedication is admitted by the defendants who themselves claim that there is a trust in existence though they say that it is a private trust. Further Ex. A-11, which is proved to have been written by Jagannath Prasad and is a copy of the inscription which he got put up in the temple, shows that all the necessary ceremonies were performed and some houses and shops were dedicated ("Krishna Arpan") to the temple. All this evidence read together satisfactorily establishes the public character of the trust.

[27] It is true that plaintiff 1, Lachmi Narain, who was alive at the time of the dedication, has not come forward to make any statement as to the nature of the endowment. In the circumstances of the present case, his evidence was, however, not necessary. In 1895 when the temple was founded, no property was dedicated and, according to EX. A-11, the foundation of the temple was the act of Jagannath Prasad alone. Thus the evidence of Lachmi Narain could have thrown no light upon what actually happened at that time. When the time for dedicating property came, it was done by means of a deed, EX. 1, and the evidence provided by that Lachmi Narain might make.

[28] The appellants' learned advocate next contended that even if it is established that the wakf is a public one, the case still does not come within the purview of S. 92, Civil P. C., because, according to the case disclosed in the plaint, the suit is by persons, one of whom is alleged to be a trustee, against persons all of whom are alleged to be trespassers. It is in reality a suit for the vindication of the personal rights of plaintiff 1 and not for the protection of the trust and consequently no suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., lies. This contention does not find support in the facts of the present case.

[29] It is no doubt true that the plaintiffs allege that plaintiff 1 is the sole surviving trustee and the defendants are not properly appointed trustees, but the plaintiffs do not claim possession for plaintiff 1 on this ground. No doubt plaintiff 1 could have brought a regular suit alleging himself to be the sole trustee and claiming possession of the trust property from alleged trespassers but plaintiffs 2 and 3 could not have joined such a suit nor could they have prayed for such a relief. When, therefore, they join and transform the suit into one not for the vindication of the personal rights of plaintiff 1 but one for the due administration of the trust, it cannot be said that this suit does not come within the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C. merely because it was open to one out of several plaintiffs to pursue a different course. The reliefs claimed are removal of trustees, appointment of new trustees and accounting, all of which are reliefs which may be granted under S. 92, Civil P. C. Further, in view of the uncertainty of the position, which will appear in a subsequent portion of our judgment plaintiff 1 might well have considered it undesirable to vindicate his personal right to trusteeship and might have preferred to safeguard the interests of the trust by providing for its due administration by properly appointed trustees. There is nothing in S. 92, Civil P. C., which will prevent him from doing so.

[30] With regard to the contention that a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., is not maintainable against trespassers, we would point out that, in the present case, the defendants are not really alleged to be trespassers but a position is assigned to them which would make them trustees de son tort. The plaintiffs definitely allege that the defendants call themselves trustees although they are not trustees in law, and it is also prayed that the defendants not being the lawful trustees should "be removed from the trusteeship."

[31] In 18 O. C. 38[7] a Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Avadh discussed the matter and held that S. 92, Civil P. C., covered a suit for the removal of a person who, though not a trustee de jure, had taken upon himself the management of the trust property and thus become trustee de son tort. The same view was also taken in A. I. R. 1936 Rang. 339[8] and A. I. R. 1940 Pat. 425.[9]

[32] The learned counsel relied upon a large number of decisions which, he contends, have laid down the proposition that S. 92, Civil P. C., does not cover a suit against a trespasser. The position of a trespasser is different to that of a trustee de son tort: the former claims adversely to the trust and so he cannot be deemed to be a trustee within the meaning of the section, while the latter does not claim adversely though there may be a defect in his title to act as trustee. Moreover, the facts of these cases were different.

[33] In A. I. R. 1921 ALL. 116[10] it was said:

"There is no allegation whatever that of the defendants those who are the heirs of Ramzan Shah were either appointed as, or ever took upon themselves the duties of trustees, and therefore they could not be charged with committing a breach of the trust. They are trespassers pure and simple, having regard to the way in which they have dealt with the property and we think the proper course for the plaintiffs to proceed against them should have been by an ordinary suit in the civil Court for ejectment."

[34] This authority by no means lays down any general rule that S. 92, Civil P. C., does not apply to the case of persons who are alleged to have taken "upon themselves the duties of trustees." In that case a takiadar began alienating portions of the cemetry of which he was takiadar as his private property and the suit was by a person claiming that his ancestors were buried in the cemetry. Thus that was not a suit against a trustee de son tort.

[35] In A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 16[11] the suit was merely for declaration that the property in the possession of the defendants was wakf property and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that such a suit did not fall within the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C., because none of the reliefs specified in that section was claimed. In the present case all the reliefs claimed are mentioned in S. 92, Civil P. C. The case is, therefore, not relevant.

[36] In 50 ALL. 165=A.I.R. 1928 ALL. 33[12] the contest was between two persons each of whom claimed to be a trustee. The suit was brought merely to enforce the personal right of the plaintiff and was not a representative suit instituted to safeguard the interests of the trust.

[37] The case in A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 449[13] instead of supporting the appellants' contention supports the opposite view. In that case it was held that if, in a suit brought against a person who has come into possession of trust property through or in right of a settlor or of a trustee, the defendant denies the title of the trust or the existence of the trust, the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 92, Civil P. C., is not ousted. At p. 451 of the report the learned Judges say:

"It is well settled that the mere fact of a trustee de jure or de facto denying the existence of the trust or the title of the trust to the property in his possession does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 92, Civil P. C."

Thus in the present case the jurisdiction of the Court acting under S. 92, Civil P. C., was not ousted.

[38] It was next urged that although plaintiffs 1 and 2 have an interest in the trust that interest was adverse and consequently they had no locus standi to sue. There is nothing in the language of S. 92, Civil P. C., to support this contention and there does not appear to be any good reason for engrafting such a rule on to the section. In dealing with a case under S. 92, Civil P. C., the principal object is the protection of the trust. In the present case, it is agreed that plaintiff 1 is one of the founders of the trust and plaintiff 2 as his son is interested in the trust. Plaintiff 3 is a Brahmin resident of the locality and, having a right of worship in the temple, is interested by reason of the provisions of the deed of endowment, EX. 1, in the appointment of proper trustees. With regard to him, there is nothing to indicate that he has any interest adverse to the trust. The only allegation against him — an allegation of which there is no proof—is that he is a friend of plaintiff 1. As to plaintiff 2 the only allegation against him is that he is the son of plaintiff 1 and consequently he would take his father's side. This, however, does not deprive him of his interest, as the son of one of the founders, to see that proper trustees exist. Thus as to the right of two at least out of the three plaintiffs to sue as representatives of the public there can be no doubt.

[39] Even with regard to plaintiff 1 we see no reason to deprive him of the right to sue. He is one of the founders and consequently it is a matter of great concern to him that the trust should be properly administered by properly appointed trustees. Even if the contention of the appellants is accepted that he claims some of the trust property as his own, this may be a very good ground for refusing to sanction his continuance as a trustee or for his removal from that office, but it would be no ground for refusing to allow him to move the Court with a view to getting properly appointed trustees to administer the trust.

[40] We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the three plaintiffs, having obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General, were competent to sue as representatives of the public.

[41] The appellants' learned advocate next urged that a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., can only be brought if a breach of trust is alleged or a direction of a Court is necessary. He contends that in the present case no breach of trust is alleged — much less proved — and no occasion arose for any directions. It is quite true that even the plaintiffs' witnesses state the property of the trust is well managed and that the trustees are responsible persons but the plaint does allege breach of trust in that it alleges that defendant 1 is utilising the profits for his purposes and that the remaining defendants have conspired to allow him to do this. It is no doubt true that no evidence has been given of this but, in accordance with the principle that it is allegations contained in the plaint that determine jurisdiction, the Patna High Court has held in A. I. R. 1940 Pat. 425[9] that if a breach of trust is alleged in the plaint that is sufficient to confer jurisdiction under S. 92, Civil P. C. — see also 46 Bom. 101.[14] In that view of the matter the plaint in this case sufficiently complies with the provisions of the law to give the Court jurisdiction under S. 92, Civil P. C. It is, however, not necessary for us to go further into the matter because, a suit which seems to get fresh trustees appointed on the ground that there are no validly appointed trustees in existence clearly comes within the second category of suit contemplated by S. 92, Civil P. C., namely, "where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust": vide 18 O. C. 38[7] in which the matter is fully discussed with reference to authorities and A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 339.[8]

[42] In A. I. R. 1934 Bom. 26[15] the learned Judges say at page 27:

"The lower appellate Court took the view that S. 92, Civil P. C., could be held to apply only where the suit alleged a breach of any express or constructive trust and asked for a direction of the Court for the administration of such a trust. It was of opinion that in this case no direction of the Court could be said to have been asked for. Section 92, Civil P. C., does not say that the direction of the Court can be asked for only where there has been a breach of any express or constructive trust. It contemplates cases where the direction of the Court may be necessary even though there has been no such breach of trust."

[43] Thus this objection also fails. We must, however, notice another argument advanced by the appellants' learned advocate in this connexion.

He contended that even though the Court may have jurisdiction to deal with the case under S. 92, Civil P. C., the defendants have committed no breach of trust and cannot be removed. He referred to the statements of the plaintiffs' witnesses who themselves clearly stated that there was no mismanagement and that the defendants were all responsible and respectable persons. The answer to this is furnished firstly by the passage in A. I. R. 1934 Bom. 26[15] which we have just quoted and which makes it clear that if once a Court has jurisdiction, it is not necessary that a breach of trust should be proved before the reliefs contemplated by S. 92, Civil P. C., or any of them is granted.

[44] Secondly, it must be remembered that not only is it necessary that a trust should be properly administered but it is equally necessary that it should be administered by a person entitled to administer. If a person having no title as trustee takes possession of the trust property, he does so in contravention of the provisions of the deed of trust and commits a breach of it. It is as much a breach of trust for a person not entitled to act as trustee to meddle with trust property as it is for a properly appointed trustee not to manage the property. Were this not so, any one who had somehow obtained possession of the trust property and was managing it efficiently could always continue in possession inspite of the specific provisions of the deed of trust.

[45] The appellants' learned advocate relied upon a passage in 46 Bom. 101[14] in which one learned Judge says :

"I do not think that this suit comes directly within the provisions of S. 92, and I do not think that merely because the suit concerns the validity of the appointment of defendants 1 to 4 as trustees of the temple and because it might on that account be considered that the suit was somewhat akin to suits which come within the provisions of S. 92, Civil P. C., that, therefore, we are entitled to hold that the suit in the language of English lawyers is a suit that comes within the equity of the statute ....."

These remarks must, however, be read in the light of the facts of the case. That case was one purely for a declaration that the defendants were not properly appointed trustees, and this was held by the learned Judges neither to be an allegation of breach of trust nor a request for directions as to the administration of the trust. Moreover, the relief did not come within the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C. That decision, therefore, has no application to the facts of the present case. This objection too must be overruled.

[46] The last contention of the appellants' learned advocate under this head is that the suit is in reality a suit for the benefit of plaintiff 1 and not for the protection of the trust estate and consequently is beyond the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C. We agree that if the suit is for the vindication of the private rights of the plaintiffs or any of them and not for the protection of the trust it is suit which should have been brought in the regular manner and it would be beyond the scope of S. 92, Civil P. C., as has been very properly stated in A.I.R 1927 Mad. 333[16] at p. 339:

"Now, the real test whether S. 92, Civil P.C. applies or not is, I take it, whether the suit is fundamentally on behalf of the public for the vindication of a public right, or on behalf of a private individual for the vindication of his private rights."

An examination of the facts of the case, however, discloses that it is a suit of the former category.

[47] No doubt plaintiff 1 could have claimed possession for himself as the sole surviving trustee but he has not done so. It is true that it has been asserted that plaintiff 1 is a trustee but no prayer is made that he should be placed in possession of the property on that ground : indeed the prayer is that the trustees appointed by the Court should be placed in possession.

[48] Further, although it would have been more advantageous for plaintiffs 1 and 2 assert that the trust is a private trust of their family because then they might, in certain eventualities have a right to divert it to other purposes, they seek to vindicate the right of the public in the trust.

[49] It is true that the suit seems to have been brought very shortly after the defendants served plaintiff 1 with notice to quit a house. It is also true that the plaintiffs have not shown that house in the list of trust properties. But by getting new trustees appointed by the Court and getting possession delivered to those trustees, even though one of them was plaintiff 1 himself, plaintiffs 1 and 2 could not escape liability to be compelled to vacate the house if the house was found to be trust property. If this was their object, it could have been attained much more easily by plaintiff 1 himself appointing as the sole surviving founder, his own nominees as trustees and then suing for possession of the trust property. He has not done so but has placed the matter in the hands of the Court which is bound, when the matter has properly come before it, to see that the trust is administered by properly appointed trustees. Thus this ground too fails.

[50] The appellants' learned advocate next urged that, in any case, the defendants were all properly appointed trustees and, no breach of trust having been proved against them, they could not be removed. The positions of defendants 2 to 9 need not detain us long. It is admitted that they are not in any way connected with the five original trustees. In view of the provisions of Ex. 1, they could only be appointed trustees if the descendants of the five original trustees refused to act or were unfit to act as trustees. No evidence has been led to prove this nor is it shown that those trustees left no descendants. In the absence of such evidence, the condition precedent to the appointment of strangers as trustees is not fulfilled. Moreover, Ex. 1 provided for the appointment of five trustees altogether. In no case, therefore, could nine trustees be appointed under its terms. The appointment of defendants 2 to 9 even if it is deemed in fact to have been made, is bad and does not constitute them properly appointed trustees.

[51] With regard to defendant 1, the case made in the written statement was that he had been appointed in the place of the plaintiff who was removed by the trustees. This was the case which the defendant sought to establish by his evidence but he has wholly failed to do so. According to this case, it was first of all necessary to prove that the plaintiff 1 had ceased to be a trustee.

[52] Exhibit 1, the deed of trust does not contain any provision for the removal of the five trustees appointed by it. Paragraph 2, however, does provide for appointment of another person in the place of any member who "is not fit to work or refuses to work." There is absolutely no evidence in the case that plaintiff 1 was not fit to work or refused to work.

[53] In the present case, although two of the defendants stated in the witness box that accounts and a minute book used to be maintained no accounts have been produced and no minute book is traceable. Defendants 1 and 2 have stated they could not be found. It is somewhat remarkable that not a single paper of this nature should be found if it, in fact, existed, because according to his case, defendant 1 was a trustee taking an active part in the management for 23 years before the death of Jagannath and the other defendants had become trustees about 4 years before that event. Further the evidence is that Jagannath Prasad had himself become paralytic towards the end of his life and would not keep the papers himself. The absence of the papers then only leads to the inference which the trial Court has drawn, that no such papers were, in fact, kept. Further this is in accordance with probabilities also since the property was small and Jagannath Prasad was looked upon practically as its owner. It was, therefore, not likely that he would keep accounts or minutes, even if any meeting of trustees was ever held. Be that as it may, no documentary evidence is available of the alleged removal of plaintiff 1 or the appointment of any of the defendants and we have to fall back upon the oral evidence which is not of such a nature as can be relied upon.

[54] In this connection, as we have already pointed out, the case made in the written statement was that defendant 1 was appointed in the place of plaintiff 1 after the latter had been removed for acting against the trust in claiming property given to it by Kamta Prasad by means of Ex. A-4 as his. Exhibit A-4 is dated 16th April 1917 and disputes can only have arisen thereafter but the only evidence as to actually when they arose is furnished by Ex. A-15 which is a judgment delivered by the Munsif of Lucknow on 17th February 1919. This indicates that the suit was filed some time at the end of 1916 or the beginning of 1919 and we cannot place this dispute earlier than that period. Yet the defendant swears that he was appointed in 1917 and that Lachmi Narain was a trustee only till 1916. This witness had stated in an earlier case—vide Ex. 4—that Lachmi Narain was removed after he himself had been appointed. The whole of this statement was read over to the witness who said that he "cannot tell if this statement of mine is correct or not."

[55] The appellants' learned advocate referred us to some documentary evidence—Exs. A-5, A-15 and A-3—which showed that the relations between Jagannath and Lachmi Narain were bad. This may well have been so and perhaps that is the reason why Jagannath tried to foist other trustees on the trust which he had no right to do. Exhibits A-2, A-4, and A-6 to A-10 are also indications to the same effect and indicate that it was the endeavour of Jagannath Prasad that Lachmi Narain should not have a hand in the management of the trust. They cannot, however, prove that Lachmi Narain had rendered himself unfit or was in fact removed. It is to be noticed that it is agreed that up to the time of the execution of Ex. A-4 at least Lachmi Narain was a trustee and defendant 2 was not and yet in Ex. A-4 it is clearly stated—quite false—that defendant 1 was one of the trustees of the endowment created by Ex. 1.

[56] It may also be noticed that defendant 2 admits that Lachmi Narain did not create any difficulties till after the death of Mt. Janki, the widow of Jagannath and it is significant that in Ex. A-26 the notice given by the defendants after the death of Mt. Janki to vacate the house, it is stated

"since the death of Jagannath Chaturvedi some overt acts done on your behalf indicate your intention that you have become against the said trust ....."

Thus at that time the case was that the hostility to the trust—as distinct from hostility to Jagannath only began after Jagannath's death. The evidence adduced by the defendants, therefore, does not satisfactorily establish the refusal of Lachmi Narain to work as a trustee or his inability to do so, nor is it established that he was removed from the trusteeship.

[57] Even, however, if it is assumed that he was so removed, the only evidence of the appointment of Radha Krishna is his own statement as D. W. 3. He is such a highly interested witness and his statement is not correct in so many particulars that it cannot be accepted on this point. With regard to a previous statement of his own on oath, Ex. 4, he clearly stated that he could not say whether it was true or false. His evidence by itself is wholly insufficient to establish his appointment. Moreover, even if it is accepted it is not established that the conditions precedent to his appointment were fulfilled. By the terms of Ex. 1, he could only be appointed in the place of Lachmi Narain, if the sons of the latter were unwilling, or unfit, to act as trustees. It is agreed that Lachmi Narain has sons—plaintiff 2 is one of them—and there is no evidence of any sort either, as to their unwillingness to act or their unfitness for the office of trustees. Thus the appointment of defendant 1 is also not established.

[58] The appellants' learned advocate next contended that the plaintiffs had not shown all the properties of the trust in the list attached to the plaint. They particularly alleged that three houses which they specified in paragraph 25 of their written statement were also trust property but the learned Civil Judge has not accepted this plea. We have come to the conclusion that the decision of the learned Civil Judge on this point is incorrect.

[59] Houses Nos. 1 and 2 mentioned in paragraph 25 are houses occupied by kahars on rent. There is no evidence to show when or by whom they were purchased but the defendants have produced some sarkhats executed by their tenants on various dates. These are Exs. A-20, A-33 and A-34. Each of these documents is executed in favour of Jagannath Prasad as "member karkum" of the trust committee of Sri Radha Krishna Temple. Thus this clearly indicates that Jagannath Prasad, who is alleged to have been the owner of these houses, treated himself only as manager of the trust in respect of them. From the evidence which has been given of his character, it would appear very probable that, even if he purchased the property himself, he would give it to the trust. He had no offspring and he was very religiously inclined. He had founded the temple and had made considerable donations for its upkeep. In these circumstances, it is highly probable that this property, even if t had belonged to him at one time, would be conveyed by him to the trust. There is no evidence in rebuttal of this evidence. These two houses should, therefore, have been held to be trust property.

[60] The third house, which is in the occupation of plaintiffs 1 and 2 is also trust property. The sale deed Ex A-3. is in the name of the trust, Jagannath Prasad having purchased it in his capacity of manager of the Thakurdwara 'Be hasiyat manager thakurdwara". In these circumstances, it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the property was not that of the trust and they have led no evidence on this point. Even Lachmi Narain who lives in this house has not come into the witness box to depose as to how he came to occupy his house. It must, therefore, be held that this house is trust property.

[61] There is another piece of documentary evidence which has a great bearing on this point and that is Ex. A-11. This is the copy of an inscription put up in the Thakurdwara by Jagannath Prasad. It is proved to be in the writing of Jagannath Prasad himself and it states that Jagannath had dedicated 16 houses and shops. If list A alone is considered to be the dedicated property there are only 12 houses and shops whilst if these three houses (which are in reality four since the third consists of two houses) are added, the total comes to 16 houses and shops. Thus there can be no doubt that the alleged owner, Jagannath, treated these three houses also as trust property and they should have been held by the Civil Judge to be trust property.

[62] The next question relates to costs. The Civil Judge has made the plaintiffs' costs payable by the defendants. The appellants argue that they fought for the protection of the trust and not for their private rights and so the costs should come out of the trust estate. The proceedings in this case do not bear this out.

[63] To begin with, the defendants opposed the grant of sanction by the Advocate-General and sent a lawyer to represent them before the Advocate-General. Then after the suit had commenced and the written statement had been filed the parties compromised the case and agreed that the trust was a public one. As to the property of the trust it was agreed that that matter should be left over for decision by the newly appointed trustees who were named. Unfortunately, this compromise could not have effect because, after it had been accepted the learned Civil Judge observed that the suit, being one under S. 92, Civil P.C., could not be compromised and he called upon the parties to proceed. In spite of this, however, there was no further reason for the contest and the defendants might well have left matters to the discretion of the Court. Instead of doing so, they contested the case on the ground that it was a private trust. Further they took the plea that all of them were lawfully appointed trustees—a plea which was clearly untenable in view of the terms of Ex. 1. This had nothing to do with the protection of the trust or of its due administration. In these circumstances, the learned Civil Judge was quite justified in allowing costs against the defendants personally.

[64] The last point raised is that there were several trusts, evidenced by Exs. A-1, A-2, A-4 and A-10 etc., and the sanction of the Advocate-General was received with regard to one only—the trust evidenced by Ex. 1. It was, therefore, contended that the relief granted must be confined to Ex. 1 alone. This is entirely a new plea : it was not taken in the trial Court and it is not mentioned in the grounds of appeal in this Court. In the trial Court the position accepted by both the parties was that there was only one trust—that created by Ex. 1—and various persons added property to it. The case proceeded on these lines and was disposed of in accordance with those pleadings. We cannot allow the defendants to depart from their pleadings and to take up a position which is not only not taken up in those pleadings but is clearly at variance with them. In this Court this plea is taken probably because in none of those other trust deeds is Lachmi Narain mentioned as a trustee while in most of them Radha Krishna is. No doubt it was the difficulty created by this position that induced Lachmi Narain to join a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C. rather than sue for possession in his own rights; in the latter event, it might eaily have been argued that he was not a trustee of the properties covered by Exs. A-2, A-3 and A-6 to A-10. As matters stand, however we must treat this suit as relating to one endowment to which properties have been accreted from time to time and we cannot entertain this new plea now raised.

[65] The plaintiffs have filed cross-objections by which they assert the right of plaintiff 1 to be one of the trustees and they challenge the finding of the learned Civil Judge as to the property.

[66] We have held, in agreement with the learned Civil Judge that plaintiff 1 never ceased to be a trustee. When, however, the matter comes before the Court in a case under S. 92, Civil P. C., it is the interests of the trust that are the primary considerations. If the Court holds that it is in the interests of the trust that an existing trustee should be removed, the Court is justified in removing him. In the present case there is a conflict of interest between the personal rights of plaintiff 1 and the rights of the trust : the fomer claims to be the sole heir of his brother, Jagannath Prasad, while the latter claims to have become entitled to his property by reason of a will. Further the extent and nature of the trust properties is also in dispute. It would, therefore, be prejudicial to the interest of the trust to allow plaintiff 1 to be one of the trustees and the trial Court was quite right in removing him. It will appear that plaintiff 1 had agreed to his own removal when the parties compromised the case and that is why the learned Civil Judge has not given any reasons for not making him one of the trustees. Nevertheless, the action of the Court was fully justified by the circumstances of the case.

[67] During the course of the arguments it was pointed out to us that one of the trustees appointed, Mr. Shargha, Advocate, had resigned and we were asked to substitute Lachmi Narain for him. We have already given reasons for holding that Lachmi Narain is not a proper trustee for this trust. Moreover, by subsequent proceedings, the Court has appointed another trustee in his place. We are not called upon to decide the merits of this appointment but we will only say that if this is a valid appointment, there is no vacancy in the trust.

[68] As to the second objection it must prevail. The plaintiffs put forward lists of trust properties and defendants put forward supplementary lists. The Court below had no justification for proceeding on the basis of a separate list, the correctness of which was not admitted by the plaintiff. Further that other list does not describe the property at all accurately and its adoption is likely to lead to confusion.

[69] The result is that the appeal and the cross-objections are both partly allowed and only the property entered in lists A and B attached to the plaint together with the property entered in paragraph 25 of the written statement will also be considered to be trust property. In this view the plaintiffs are not entitled to their full costs because they deliberately kept some trust property out of the list of trust properties with a view to benefit one of them. Nevertheless they have succeeded in the main part of their case, namely, in their claim that the trust was one of a public nature and they have had trustees appointed. They will, therefore, receive only half their costs of the trial Court as well as of this Court from the defendants-appellants personally.

Ram Lakhan Misir—Defendant—Applicant v. Bishesar Misir—Plaintiff—Opposite Party.

Application No. 70 of 1943, Decided on 27-11-1947, from order of Dist. Judge, Faizabad, D/- 24-3-1943.

(a) U.P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), Ss. 10 and 12—Mortgage and deed of further charge—Principal amount secured by mortgage not exceeding Rs. 500 but principal sum secured by mortgage and further charge exceeding Rs. 500—Mortgagor applying for redemption of mortgage only—Collector has jurisdiction to entertain it.

If a mortgagor applies for redemption of only one mortgage, it is the principal sum under that mortgage that determines jurisdiction. The mortgagor cannot be compelled by the fact that a deed of further charge is proved to exist to sue for redemption for that deed also at the same time, notwithstanding a contract prohibiting separate redemption in the deed of further charge and the money due under that deed must be ignored in determining jurisdiction. If, on the other hand, the mortgagor sues for redemption of more mortgages than one, jurisdiction will be determined by sum total of the principal of all the mortgages. Thus, where a mortgagor applies under S. 12 for redemption of a mortgage the principal money secured by which does not exceed Rs. 500, the Collector has jurisdiction to entertain the application notwithstanding that it is found at the close of trial that the mortgaged property was subject to a deed of further charge and the principal sum secured by the deed of mortgage and the deed of further charge exceeds Rs. 500: 30 A. I. R. 1943 Oudh 300, Dissent.; 32 A. I. R. 1945 All 204, Expl. [Para 17]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Interpretation of enactment is to be made of all its parts together.

The interpretation of an enactment is to be made of all its parts together and not of one part by itself. Such a survey is always indispensable even when the words are plain, for the true meaning of any passage in a statute is that which best harmonises with the subject and with every other part, so that inconsistencies might be avoided and operative effect might be given to every provision of the statute, if a reasonable construction so permits. Where there is no other alternative but to admit that the fact is inconsistent and unintelligible it is permissible to construe the Act in a manner which might be regarded as dangerously near to the process of legislative enactment. If, however, an intelligible construction can be put upon a provision contained in a statute, there is no justification for a construction which would necessitate the insertion of words which are not to be found therein. K. N. Tandon—for Applicant.

Sri Ram—for Opposite Party No. 1.

Order.—Sugrim Misir and two nephews of his, Jagrup Misir and Jagmohan Misir, owned 21 bighas 10 biswas of zemindari land in village Hiranpur, pargana and tahsil Akbarpur, district Faizabad. On 26th July 1898, they mortgaged this land with possession to Mahadeo Sukul for a consideration of Rs. 415. The term of the mortgage was stated to be 50 years. On the 12th January 1904, the mortgagee sold his interest to Ram Lakhan Misir. On 5th June 1915, Ram Surat, grandson of Sugrim, executed a deed, which he called a deed of further charge, in consideration of Rs. 325 in favour of Ram Lakhan Misir. This deed stipulated that the money due under it would be paid before the mortgagor could redeem the mortgage executed by Sugrim in favour of Mahadeo Shukul and that the mortgagor and his heirs could not redeem the earlier mortgage without first paying off the money due under the deed of further charge.

[2] Jagrup Misir died issueless, Jagmohan died leaving one son, Panchu, and Ram Surat died leaving five sons of whom Ram Nain was said to be untraced and Ram Newal and Ram Dawal were minors, and the other two, Ram Pratap and Raj Kishore, were majors. On 3-8-1937, Panchu and Ram Partap purporting to act for himself and his minor brothers, Ram Newal and Ram Dawal, and as "karta" of the family, and Raj Kishore sold the equity of redemption in the entire mortgaged property to Bisheshar Misir, opposite party.

[3] On 11-10-1941, Bisheshar Misir presented an application under S. 12, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akbarpur, district Faizabad, for redemption of the mortgage of 26-7-1898. He also claimed the benefit of the provisions of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act in order to enable him to sue before the expiry of the term fixed in the deed and to get the interest reduced. It was further pleaded that the whole of the debt had been liquidated out of the usufruct and that the applicant was entitled to get back the property without payment. The deed of further charge was not mentioned at all and the valuation given was Rs. 415, being the principal sum secured by the deed of 26-7-1898.

[4] The opposite party raised various pleas but the only plea which calls for notice at this stage is the plea that the mortgage could not be redeemed without the payment of the entire sum due in respect of the deed of further charge which was set up. No plea of want of jurisdiction was specifically taken but it was considered by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer under the fourth issue which is as follows :

"Whether the subsequent deed dated 5-6-1915, is a further charge on the properties in suit? If so, to what effect?"

[5] The learned Sub-Divisional Officer held that the deed in question was a deed of further charge and that, in view of the terms of S. 61, Transfer of Property Act, there had been a consolidation and the principal amount had thus become Rs. 740. He consequently held that his jurisdiction was ousted and he directed the return of the application for presentation to the proper Court.

[6] The applicant appealed and the learned District Judge of Faizabad allowed the appeal, holding that jurisdiction was determined on the basis of the mortgage to which the application related and that the deed of further charge could not be taken into consideration. The case was, therefore, remanded to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer to be disposed of according to law. The opposite party, therefore, filed an application under S. 115, Civil P. C., in this Court. That application came before one of us, and, in view of the importance of the question involved, it was referred to a Bench of two Judges. It was then heard by the other two of us and it was found desirable to frame a question and refer it to a Full Bench for decision. The following question has accordingly been referred to the Full Bench for decision :

"If a mortgagor applies under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, for redemption of a mortgage, the principal money secured by which does not exceed Rs. 500, but it is found at the close of the trial that the mortgaged property was subject to a deed of further charge, and the principal sum secured by the two deeds exceeds Rs. 500, whether the Collector in whose Court an application for redemption is made has no jurisdiction to entertain it and must return the same for presentation to the proper Court."

[7] The answer to this question depends upon the interpretation to be placed upon Ss. 10 and 12, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act. The learned Advocate for the applicant desired to place before us, as he did before the Bench, the provisions of the Court-fees and Suits Valuation Acts and decisions of various High Courts to show us the difficulties and differences of opinion which exist as regards the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction of suits by mortgagors to redeem. The decisions have been sufficiently noticed in the judgment of the Bench and it is not necessary for us to refer to them further, because a consideration of them is unnecessary for the determination of the question which was eventually framed by the Bench and referred to us.

[8] By the express terms of S. 10, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act, it is only in cases in which "the principal money secured does not exceed Rs. 500," that the Collector has jurisdiction. If, therefore, in the present case the mortgagor was bound to sue for redemption of both the mortgages, the principal sum secured by both the mortgages would be more than Rs. 500 and the Sub-Divisional Officer would have no jurisdiction to entertain the application. If, on the other hand, the mortgagor was entitled to sue for redemption of one of the mortgages only, as he has done, then the valuation is below Rs. 500 and the Sub-Divisional Officer would have jurisdiction.

[9] Under the provisions of S. 61, Transfer of Property Act,

"A mortgagor who has executed two or more mortgages in favour of the same mortgagee shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, when the principal money of any two or more of the mortgages has become due, be entitled to redeem any one such mortgage separately, or any two or more such mortgages together."

By virtue of this section, therefore, "in the absence of any contract to the contrary", the applicant could have sued for redemption of the first mortgage alone notwithstanding the fact that the money due under the deed of further charge had also fallen due. The applicant, however, contends that in the present case there is a contract to the contrary embodied in the deed of further charge, Ex.A-3, which specifically provides that the first mortgage cannot be redeemed without paying off the money due under the deed of further charge. He contends that by reason of this contract the money due under the two deeds has been consolidated and the total principal sum is now Rs. 740.

[10] Had the law which governs this case been the law as laid down in S. 61, T. P. Act, only, this line of argument could have been pursued but, in the present case, the law which governs the case is that laid down in S. 12, U.P. Agriculturists' Relief Act. The only basis for the contention that the mortgagor cannot sue for redemption of the principal mortgage alone is that there is a contract embodied in the deed of further charge prohibiting this. While S. 61, T. P. Act, respects contracts of this kind, S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act directs that they shall be ignored. It is specifically provided by that section that notwithstanding "any contract to the contrary" a mortgagor may institute a suit for redemption of a mortgage at any time after the principal money has become due. Thus, notwithstanding the contract entered into between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the deed of 1898 shall not be redeemed unless the deed of further charge has been redeemed, it was open to the mortgagor to sue for the redemption of the first deed, since by reason of S. 7, U. P. Debt Redemption Act, it was no loger necessary for him to wait for the expiry of 50 years. The contract prohibiting him from doing so must be ignored. The language of the section is perfectly clear and it is wide enough to cover the case of all contracts. In accordance with the well recognised rules relating to the interpretation of statutes that the words used must have full effect given to them since the legislature must be taken to have meant that the language used by it has clearly expressed.

[11] It is, however, another elementary rule that the interpretation of an enactment is to be made of all its parts together and not of one part by itself. Such a survey is always indispensable even when the words are plain, for the true meaning of any passage in a statute is that which best harmonises with the subject and with every other part, so that inconsistencies might be avoided and operative effect might be given to every provision of the statute, if a reasonable construction so permits. Where there is no other alternative but to admit that the fact is inconsistent and unintelligible it is permissible to construe the Act in a manner which might be regarded as dangerously near to the process of legislative enactment. If, however, an intelligible construction can be put upon a provision contained in a statute, there is no justification for a construction which would necessitate the insertion of words which are not to be found therein.

[12] In the present case, the learned Advocate for the applicant contends that the construction which the words seem to bear would create inconsistencies. He contends that S. 16, Agriculturists' Relief Act directs an account to be taken and this is only possible in respect of all the transactions between the parties which have been consolidated. There is, however, no difficulty in taking accounts of each transaction separately and a separate account would certainly have to be taken if there were several transactions between the same parties and there was no consolidation clause. Again it was contended that the language of the section makes it clear that where it was intended to derogate from the general law that law is specifically mentioned for it says that the right to apply is conferred "notwithstanding anything contained in S. 83, T. P. Act". The learned Advocate contends that if it was intended to depart from the principle of S. 61, of that Act, similar reference would have been made to it. The analogy is not correct. General words are used because it is not only S. 61, T. P. Act that is affected but also the provisions of the Contract Act and there may also be other enactments which are affected. The legislature, therefore, thought fit to introduce general words so that it might not be contended that it was only some particular class of contracts that was to be affected.

[13] Lastly the learned Advocate relied upon a decision of a learned single Judge (now the Chief Judge) of this Court in 1943 O. W. N. 169[1] and another of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in 1945 O. W. N. 130[2] (High Court Section), in both of which it has been laid down that the money due under a deed of further charge must be paid along with the money due under the principal mortgage in proceedings under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act. The second of the two cases mentioned was strictly speaking not a case under S. 12 at all. The learned Judge took care to make the distinction clear but he felt, in accordance with the practice of the Allahabad High Court— a practice which is at variance with that of this Court— that "if the matter is stripped of all technicalities, the simple position is that the occupancy tenant allowed another man to occupy his holding and cultivate it on the agreement that he would not eject him until he had paid him a certain sum of money which he had borrowed and that the Court will not help him to eject the person he has put into possession if he fails to carry out his obligation to pay back the money."

[14] The learned Judge proceeded on the basis that he who comes to seek relief at the hands of a Court may be put to terms. He did not consider the effect of the words notwithstanding "any contract to the contrary" contained in S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act and his decision cannot be relied upon as an authority on the effect to be given to those words.

[15] The decision in 1943 O. W. N. 169[1] is, however, fully applicable and the learned Judge deciding the case did interpret the words "any contract to the contrary". He says at page 170 :

"The words 'any contract to the contrary' used in S. 12 in my opinion refer to the right of redemption existing in favour of a mortgagor which cannot be hampered or thwarted by any contract to the contrary imposing any clog upon such right. It has no reference whatever to the amount which the mortgagor may be liable to pay in respect of the property mortgaged under subsequent deeds."

[16] The learned Judge does not give any reasons for confining the scope of the general words used by the Legislature to the particular cases mentioned by him and with all respect to him we cannot agree with the view which he has taken. According to his view, contracts referred are those which impose a clog upon the right of redemption. Such contracts can in any case not be enforced under the general law of the land. If it was intended to confine the words "any contract to the contrary" to contracts creating clogs, then they were wholly unnecessary. We are not prepared to hold that the Legislature introduced these words unnecessarily when the words are capable of being given full effect. Section 61, T. P. Act, indicates the policy of the law that a mortgagor should have a choice to redeem each mortgage separately or all the mortgages at the same time. That section, however, recognised the sanctity of contracts and stipulated that the parties would have the right to modify that position by contract. Section 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act provides that even a contract shall not stand in the way of the redemption of any one mortgage.

[17] For the reasons given above we answer the question put to us as follows: If a mortgagor applies for redemption of only one mortgage, it is the principal sum under that mortgage that determines jurisdiction. The mortgagor cannot be compelled by the fact that a deed of further charge is proved to exist to sue for redemption for that deed also at the same time, and the money due under that deed must be ignored in determining jurisdiction. If, on the other hand, the mortgagee sues for redemption of more mortgages than one, jurisdiction will be determined by sum total of the principal of all the mortgages.

Mt. Munna Kunwar — Plaintiff — Appellant v. Sripal Singh — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 510 of 1945, Decided on 12-7-1947, from order of Addl. Civil Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 29-8-1945.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv-A) (U. P.) — Suit for declaration of title on two allegations — Fraud alleged in previous suit and execution proceedings resulting in sale in favour of defendant — Second allegation that in subsequent partition, property in question was allotted to plaintiff—Suit held fell under S. 7 (iv-A) although cancellation of sale deed was not prayed for.

The plaintiff brought a suit for declaration of ownership of 7 annas under proprietary share in a village based upon two sets of allegations. The first set of facts put forward a case of fraud which was said to have been practised during the pendency of the earlier suit and of the execution proceedings which culminated in the sale in favour of defendant. In the second set of facts it was claimed that at a subsequent partition the aforesaid 7 annas under-proprietary share had been allotted to the plaintiff and a fresh title arose in consequence of it. The court-fee paid upon the plaint was on a purely declaratory relief:

Held, that each of the two grounds alleged in the plaint was distinct and was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief of declaration of his ownership. Although there was no prayer for cancellation of the sale certificate, the granting of the relief which was embodied in the plaint would necessarily have that effect and sub-section (iv-A) of S. 7, would therefore apply. The fact that a basis of title which was alleged to have arisen subsequent to the sale certificate was also pleaded did not have the effect of altering the nature of the suit or to take it out of the purview of sub-section (iv-A). [Paras 2, 3]

Order.—The question which arises for determination on this office report is whether the suit, out of which this appeal arises involves cancellation of or adjudging void or voidable a sale certificate obtained by the defendant on 5-11-1942 in execution of a decree. The suit was for declaration that the plaintiff was the owner of 7 annas under-proprietary share in mahal Bargaon, village Terya in the district of Fyzabad. The declaration of ownership was based upon two sets of allegations. The first set of facts given in paras 1 to 11 put forward a case of fraud which was said to have been practised during the pendency of the earlier suit and of the execution on proceedings which culminated in the sale in favour of defendant Sripal Singh. The second set of facts were stated in para. 12. Therein it was claimed that at a subsequent partition the aforesaid 7 annas under-proprietary share had been allotted to the plaintiff and a fresh title arose in consequence of it. The court-fee paid upon the plaint was Rs. 18-12-0. This amount was due on a purely declaratory relief. The plaintiff lost and went up in appeal on a similar court-fee stamp. She failed again and has come up by way of second appeal paying again a court-fee of Rs. 18-12-0. According to the office report the plaintiff is liable to pay court-fee under S. 7, sub-section (iv-A) and there is deficiency of Rs. 131-4 in respect of all the three Courts. The office has been contested on behalf of the appellant.

[2] Section 7, sub-s (iv-A) prescribes that—

"In suits for or involving cancellation of or adjudging void or voidable a decree for money or other property having a market value, or an instrument securing money or other property having such value.

(1) where the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title was a party to the decree or instrument, according to the value of the subject-matter and

(2) where he or his predecessor-in-title was not a party to the decree or instrument, according to one-fifth of the value of the subject-matter, and such value shall be deemed to be . . . . . "

It is not disputed that the sale certificate would constitute "an instrument securing money or other property having a market value." It is urged, however, for the appellant that the relief of declaration cannot be said to involve the cancellation or adjudging void or voidable the sale certificate dated 5-11-1942 because the prayer contained in the plaint did not expressly require any adjudication with respect to the auction sale. This contention in my opinion is without force. The word "involve" according to the Oxford English Dictionary means "to include; to contain, imply, especially to contain implicity." It is hardly possible to argue that merely because the relief for cancellation of a document is not expressly claimed it cannot "involve" cancellation. It is clear to my mind that if the plaintiff succeeded in proving the fraud which she alleged the proceedings from the commencement of the suit up to the execution and satisfaction of the decree including the sale could not be allowed to stand and the declaration claimed would follow. The fact that another ground of attack namely the subsequent partition which was said to have been finalised in 1943 created a fresh title in the plaintiff, could not operate to override the effect of the first set of facts contained in paras. 1 to 11. Each of the two grounds was distinct and was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief of declaration of his ownership. It is clear to my mind that by filing the suit the plaintiff desired to get over the sale certificate. The paragraph containing the prayer was no doubt artistically framed so as to avoid any mention of cancellation of the sale certificate, but the granting of the relief which was embodied in the plaint would necessarily have the effect of swallowing up the sale certificate. This in my opinion is exactly the circumstance in which sub-s. (iv-A) of S. 7, Court-fees Act would apply.

[3] I may mention that at one stage of the argument it was conceded that if the plaint contained only the first set of allegations embodied in paras. 1 to 11 there could be no escape from the provision of sub-s. (iv-A). The effect, however, of additional facts alleged in para. 12, it was claimed was to alter the nature of the suit from the one involving cancellation of a document to one praying for a mere declaration. I am unable to see any force in this. In my opinion, each of the two alternative grounds upon which the declaration of ownership was sought was in itself sufficient if proved to entitle the plaintiff to a decree and the fact that a basis of title which was alleged to have arisen subsequent to the sale certificate was also pleaded did not have the effect of altering the nature of the suit or to take it out of the purview of sub-s. (iv-A).

[4] The office report is not contested on any other ground. I accept it. The plaintiff shall make good the deficiency amounting to Rs. 131-4- within a month's time.

Parag Singh — Plaintiff — Applicant v. Jhabbo Singh — Defendant — Opposite-Party.

Civil Revn. No. 75 of 1943, Decided on 6-2-1948, from order of Civil Judge, Kheri, D/- 29-1-1943.

U. P. Debt Redemption Act (13 [XIII] of 1940), S. 7—Section allows redemption of mortgage even when mortgage money has not become due — Mortgage money not becoming due — Application under S. 12, U.P. Agriculturists' Act is maintainable —U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), S. 12.

A right of redemption arises only when the mortgage money has become due but S. 7 of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act was expressly enacted to remove this limitation and it makes no difference whether the remedy is by means of a regular suit or an application under S. 12 of the U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act. Hence an application under S. 12 of the latter Act for redemption of a mortgage is maintainable even if the mortgage money has not become due. [Para 3]

Hyder Husain — for Applicant.
Mahabir Prasad Srivastava — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The applicant is the mortgagor of property held by the opposite party. He applied under the provisions of S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act for redemption. It was pleaded that S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act was not applicable because the mortgage money had not fallen due and secondly because in his written statement the defendant made a declaration under S. 4, U. P. Debt Redemption Act, stating that he would not realise it from the person or agricultural land of the judgment-debtor. The trial Court framed one issue which it tried as a preliminary issue as to whether the application was maintainable. It held that the application was not maintainable. The applicant went in appeal and the learned Civil Judge of Kheri has upheld the decision of the Munsif, on the ground that S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, did not apply. The applicant has now come up in revision to this Court.

[2] Mr. Hyder Husain, the learned counsel for the applicant, contends that the decision of the Courts below is incorrect because the effect S. 7, U. P. Debt Redemption Act, is to enable a suit to be brought for the redemption of a mortgage in spite of the fact that the money has not become due. Section 2, sub-s. (17), Debt Redemption Act also defines a suit as including any proceeding. Under S. 25, Agriculturists' Relief Act, no suit can be filed to obtain a relief which can be obtained under Chapter III, Agriculturists' Relief Act. Thus, in a case such as the present proceedings can be taken under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, for redemption of the mortgage since those proceedings take the place of suits.

[3] According to the reasoning of the lower appellate Court because S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, provides that such an application lies only when the money has become due, therefore, would that section is not applicable, a similar difficulty would arise in the case of a suit because S. 60, T. P. Act, also provides that the right of redemption arises only when the money has become due. It was expressly in order to remove this limitation that S. 7, U. P. Debt Redemption Act, was enacted and it makes no difference whether the remedy is by means of a regular suit or by means of an application under S. 12. The decision of the lower Courts that the application is not maintainable must, therefore, be set aside.

[4] It must be noted that in this case the defendant has made a declaration under S. 4. The question as to whether this declaration is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of law or not and whether it should be accepted has yet to be decided. Nothing that has been said with regard to the maintainability of the application will affect a decision of this question and the consequences which may flow therefrom.

[5] The result is that this application is allowed and the case is remitted to the Court of the Munsif, Kheri, with the direction that he would restore it to its old number and proceed to dispose of it according to law. The applicant will get his costs of this application.

Judgment.— (S. C. A. Nos. 145 and 146 of 1947.) These two appeals may conveniently be disposed of by one common judgment. They arise on the following facts.

[2] Two Suits Nos. 21 of 1945 and 7 of 1945, were instituted in the Court of the Civil Judge, Gonda, by Mohammad Sher Khan for accounts and recovery of money due against persons whom he described as his partners. The defendants in one of the suits were Syed Ashfaq Husain, Lalta Prasad and Hameed Husain. The other suit was brought against Syed Ashfaq Husain alone. Mohammad Sher Khan died during the pendency of the suit and the names of two minors, Moharram Ali and Bashir Ali were substituted on the record as his legal representatives. These suits were subsequently transferred to the Court of the additional Civil Judge and were numbered as 53 and 52 of 1946. Suit No. 52, which was brought against Syed Ashfaq Husain alone, was fixed for evidence on 14th of May 1946. The case was adjourned as the plaintiffs' witnesses were not in attendance. The adjournment was made at the plaintiffs' request and they were directed to pay Ashfaq Hussain a certain sum by way of costs. On the next date the plaintiffs' counsel stated his case. All the plaintiffs' witnesses were not in attendance on that date also, but as it was considered that the record in evidence piecemeal would not be proper, the case was again adjourned to 11-6-1946. It may be mentioned that issues had been framed in the case on 2-10-1945. On 11th July, two witnesses for the plaintiffs were examined and then the Court rose for the day. The remaining witnesses were to be examined the next day. On 12-7-1946, neither the plaintiffs' next friend nor any of their witnesses were in attendance. The counsel for the plaintiffs stated that he had no instructions for that date from his clients. In these circumstances the Court purporting to act under O. 17, Civil P. C. recorded the evidence of one of the defendants' witnesses. The plaintiffs' counsel, as I find from a note on the record, was present throughout the proceedings, which he watched on behalf of his client, but did not cross-examine the only witness called for the defendants. On 16-7-1946 the Court recorded findings on all the issues and dismissed the suit with costs.

[3] In the other case 16-5-1946. was fixed for evidence. The plaintiffs applied for an adjournment which was allowed on condition of payment of costs and 13-7-1936, was fixed for evidence. On that date no one appeared for the plaintiffs, nor were the costs awarded on the previous hearing paid. In this case also the Court recorded an order that it would proceed to decide the case on the merits, under O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C., "notwithstanding the absence of the plaintiff". On 13 7-1946, it pronounced its judgment. It decided all the five issues which were framed against the plaintiffs for want of evidence and dismissed the suit with costs.

[4] Two appeals were preferred in the two cases by the plaintiffs. The District Judge of Gonda, before whom these appeals came up for hearing allowed both of them as he was of opinion that the lower Court should have proceeded under O. 9, and under O. 17, Civil P. C. In either case respondents were made to pay the appellants' costs. Subsequently an application was made in either appeal by the defendants, who were arrayed as respondents, that the decrees be amended by excluding from the taxed costs the amount of court-fee paid by the appellants in each case. These applications purporting to be made under Ss. 151 and 152, Civil P. C. were allowed and the learned District Judge recorded the opinion that inasmuch as he had remanded the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., the amount of court-fee paid was to be refunded to the appellants under S. 13, Court-fees Act, and consequently should not be included in the taxed costs. The decrees in the two appeals were amended accordingly. It may be mentioned that taking advantage of this order the plaintiffs applied for refund of court-fee and this was allowed. The defendants who were respondents in the two appeals did not challenge the remand order in so far as it directed retrial of the two suits. They have, however, filed the two present appeals against those orders in so far as they direct the payment of costs to the appellants.

[5] It is contended on the other side that no appeal lies in such a case. Having heard the learned counsel for the parties, I am of opinion that the objection should prevail. It was frankly conceded by the learned counsel for the appellants that in view of the decision of this Court in A. I. R. 1945 Avadh 133[1] that where all the questions arising in the suit have been decided by the trial Court, and there is a remand on appeal against such a decree, the remand cannot be one under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. In such a case it must be taken to be a remand under the inherent powers of the Court. In this view of the matter, if the remand in the two appeals disposed of by the learned District Judge was under the inherent powers of the Court, no appeal would lie and as held in A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 714,[2] when no appeal is provided for from an order on the merits no appeal will lie against that portion of the order which relates to the award of costs only.

[6] It was contended by the appellants' learned counsel that in these cases the Court had reviewed its previous order and held that the remand by it was ordered under O. 41, R. 23. This order was not appealed against and could not now be challenged by the respondents. I can see no merit in this contention. An expression of opinion by the learned District Judge subsequent to the passing of the remand order on an application made by one of the parties, whether the remand was under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., or under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., or under the inherent powers of the Court, cannot be permitted to influence the determination of the true nature of the order. When the District Judge passed the orders of remand in the two appeals to which reference has been made, he did not state that he was acting under O. 41, R. 23, and for obvious reasons he could not remand the cases which were before him in exercise of the powers conferred by that provision of law. Order 41, R. 23 applies only when a case has been determined by the trial Court on a preliminary point. It can have no application to cases where all the issues framed have been determined and findings recorded thereon. If there is a remand in such a case it must be taken to have been made under S. 151 in exercise of the inherent powers of the Court, and no appeal would ordinarily lie in such a case against the order of remand.

[7] The applications that were made for amendment of the decrees of the District Judge cannot be treated as applications for review. They purported to be made under Ss. 151 and 152, Civil P. C. The court-fee payable on an application for review was not paid. In the opening portion of his order the applications are described as applications for revision. I am clear that these were not applications for review, and of course the learned District Judge could not revise his own order because the powers of revision are vested under S. 115, Civil P. C., only in this Court. It may be pointed out that no grounds on which a review application could be made existed in either of these cases.

[8] Another argument urged by the learned counsel for the appellants was that the respondents were estopped from denying that the orders of remand by the District Judge in the two appeals were in exercise of power conferred upon him by O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. In support of his contention he relied on a decision of a Bench of this Court in A. I. R. 1931 Avadh. 123.[3] It was laid down by Srivastava and Wazir Hasan JJ. in that case that where a civil suit is the result of a judgment passed by the Board of Revenue which upholds the plea that the Court of Revenue has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, the party putting forward the plea in the revenue Court cannot deny its truth when the plea has compelled the opposite party to put his plaint in a civil Court for adjudication. He further referred to the observations contained in Sarkar on Evidence, Edn. 6, p. 1025 para. 2 to the effect that it was not open to a party to assume inconsistent positions. I am clear that neither the case of this Court to which reference has been made, nor anything said by Sarkar in his Law of Evidence has any application to the facts of the present case. Section 115, Evidence Act, reads as follows :

"When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally, caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceedings between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

There was no declaration, act or omission by the respondents in the present case which caused the appellants to believe a thing and act thereon. The whole substratum which forms the foundation for this argument is the following observation by the learned District Judge in his order of 11-12-1946:

"After hearing the parties I consider it proper to make it clear that I meant to remand the case under O. 42, R, 23, Civil P. C. The counsel for the parties have also interpreted my judgment in that light."

There is no act, declaration or omission by the respondents in what is stated by the learned District Judge. The opinion of counsel or of a party as regards the provision of law under which an order already passed should be deemed to have been made is neither an act nor a declaration nor such an omission as is referred to in S. 115, Evidence Act. For the reasons given above I am satisfied that these appeals do not lie. They are dismissed with costs.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 19 — Two decrees for costs in same suit, one in favour of plaintiff and another in favour of defendant — Application for execution of decree for smaller amount is not maintainable — Question of limitation does not arise.

Rule 19 of O. 21 clearly lays down that the decree can be executed only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree. It follows from this rule that the person having a decree for the smaller sum cannot execute his decree at all. Hence where two decrees for costs are passed in the suit, one in favour of the plaintiff and the other in favour of the defendant, an application for execution of decree for smaller amount is not maintainable. No question of limitation ever arises in respect of a claim to set off under R. 19 of O. 21. [Para 3]

Judgment. — On 22nd August 1935, a suit filed by Jagannath and Balbhaddar, Halwais for partition was dismissed. Jagannath Prasad Kayasth, father of Bhagwat Sahae, respondent of the present appeal, was one of the defendants in the partition suit. The Court directed the defendants in the suit to pay Rs. 208/6/- as costs to the plaintiffs of the suit and at the same time directed that the plaintiff's of the suit shall pay to the father of the appellant Rs. 226 as costs. Both the first and second appeals against the decree were dismissed. The second appeal was dismissed on 23-11-1936. On 12-1-1939 Jagannath and Balbhaddar, the plaintiffs of the partition suit, transferred their decree for costs to Jugal Kishore, the appellant in the present appeal. Jugal Kishore put his decree for Rs. 208/6/- plus Rs. 5/- as costs in execution against Bhagwati Sahae, the respondent. The respondent objected that the decree could not be executed without setting off his decree for costs for Rs. 226/. The executing Court allowed this and passed the following order:

"Note full satisfaction to the extent of Rs. 213/- by way of set off and the case be consigned to records."

Jugal Kishore being dissatisfied with this order went up in appeal and urged that the set-off could not be claimed as Bhagwat Sahae's decree was time-barred. It may be mentioned that the appeal to the Chief Court by the transfer of Jugal Kishore had been dismissed on 23-11-36 and that Jugal Kishore's application for execution was filed on 7-9-42. The learned lower appellate Court held that under the provisions of R. 19 of O. 21, Civil P. C. Jugal Kishore's application for execution was not maintainable, but at the same time the set off could not be claimed by Bhagwat Sahae as his decree had become time barred, and the appellate Court ordered accordingly.

[2] It has now been urged that the appellant's decree is executable. I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and see no reason to interfere.

[3] There can be no doubt that the transfer of Jugal Kishore got a decree for costs for a certain amount and the father of the respondent Bhagwat Sahae obtained in the same suit a decree for a higher amount. At the time of execution, therefore, R. 19, O. 21, Civil P. C., comes into play. This rule clearly lays down that the decree can be executed only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree. It follows from the provision of this rule that the person having a decree for the smaller sum cannot execute his decree at all. In these circumstances no question of limitation ever arises in respect of a claim of set off under R. 19, O. 21, Civil P. C. To this extent the view of the lower appellate Court is incorrect, but the lower appellate Court is certainly right in holding that the execution application of Jugal Kishore is not maintainable. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 337 of 1941, Decided on 17-11-1947, against order of Civil Judge, Sultanpur, D/- 31-5-1941.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 123 — "Duly registered"—A executing gift deed in favour of B — Deed presented for registration — Sub-Registrar going through necessary formalities and provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59, Registration Act, complied with — Document kept by Sub-Registrar for endorsing certificate under S. 60 — Sub-Registrar attacked by C and deed removed — Subsequent gift deed by A in favour of C duly registered — Former deed in B's favour held must be deemed to be duly registered within meaning of S. 123, T. P. Act — Registration Act (1908), Ss. 60, 37.

One A executed a gift deed in respect of proprietary right in certain villages in favour of B, on 27th October and as he could not go to the registration officer the Sub-Registrar was invited to the village and the deed was presented to him on his arrival for registration. The deed was properly executed and attested and the necessary formalities of registration were gone through and the provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59, Registration Act, were complied with. Thereafter the Sub-Registrar issued the usual receipt under S. 52, Registration Act, to the executant and kept the document for being copied in register No. 1 and for endorsing the final certificate of registration as required by S. 60 (1). It could not, however, be returned because directly afterwards one C came and attacked the Sub-Registrar and succeeded in taking away the document from him. The endorsement required by Ss. 60 and 61 could not, therefore, be completed. On 4th November, A executed another gift deed in respect of the same property in favour of C and this was registered in the ordinary way and C went into possession. On the death of A, B brought a suit for possession against C. The question was whether the deed executed on 27th October operated to effect the transfer of the properties covered by it :

Held that the compliance with the provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59, Registration Act, constituted registration of the document and not the presence of the certificate under S. 60 of that Act. The subsequent formalities were mere ministerial acts and since, in this case, the Sub-Registrar had done all he could for carrying out the registration of the instrument up to the stage of writing the certificate, the want of subsequent formalities could be condoned, for in the events which happened the performance of those formalities was rendered physically impossible. The omission to perform the requisite acts must be regarded as omissions in something done by the Sub-Registrar in good faith while performing his duties under the Act within the meaning of S. 87, Registration Act, and the document must, therefore, be deemed to be duly registered within the meaning of S. 123, T. P. Act, notwithstanding the defects. [Paras 4, 5]

(b) Registration Act (1908), S. 60 — Certificate under S. 60 does not by itself effect registration — It is prima facie evidence but matters can be proved by other evidence — Compliance with provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59, constitutes registration of document.

The certificate referred to in S. 60 though it may be indicative and afford proof of due registration, does not by itself effect registration. Sub-s. (2) only makes the endorsement of the certificate of registration prima facie evidence for the purposes of proving that the formalities were gone through. The provision does not preclude person from proving the same matters by other evidence, and the failure to comply with the requirements of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59 would in spite of the certificate result in the document being rejected as unregistered. It is thus the compliance with the provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59 which constitutes registration of a document and not the presence of the certificate. The subsequent formalities are mere ministerial acts and defects occasioned therein by the acts or omission of the registrar or irregularities in carrying out the duties enjoined by Ss. 60 and 61 would merely constitute defects of procedure for which neither the donor nor the donee is responsible.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are somewhat unusual. The appeal arises out of a suit for possession of properties which belonged to one Jai Narain Singh. He died on 8-11-1938. A few days before his death, Jai Narain Singh executed two successive gift deeds in respect of the properties in suit. The first deed was executed on 27-10-1938 in favour of the plaintiffs Sobhnath Singh and Ram Narain Singh who are brothers, Jai Narain transferred thereby his superior proprietary rights in villages Keshopur, Ratapur, Chura and Gokla in Tahasil Amethi, District Sultanpur. Jai Narain Singh's wife had died some time before and he had no issue. He suffered from asthma and did not go to the registration office. On 26-10-1938 the Sub-Registrar of Amethi Mr. Ram Chandra Singh was asked by means of an application Ex. 15, to go to village Ghurha on the next day for purpose of registering the deed. He reached the place at 4 P. M. on 27th October, and Jai Narain Singh presented the document for registration. It was written out by one Lalman P. W. 1 on a stamp paper of the value of Rs. 27-8-0 and was attested by two witnesses. The necessary formalities of registration were gone through and the provisions of Ss 34, 35, 58 and 59, Registration Act, were complied with. Thereafter the Sub-Registrar issued the usual receipt under S. 52 of the Act to the executant and kept the document for being copied in register no. 1 and for endorsing the final certificate of registration as required by S. 60 (1). The receipt Ex. 1 has been produced by the plaintiffs and it shows that the deed was to be returned on the 28th October. It could not, however, be returned because directly afterwards a number of persons including the brothers and sons of some of the defendants in whose favour the second deed of gift was executed on 4th November 1938 came and attacked the Sub-Registrar and succeeded in taking away the document from him. These persons were eventually convicted of offences under Ss. 147, 323 and 325 read with S. 149, Penal Code. The above facts have been established to the satisfaction of the Courts below. In view of the fact that the deed found its way into the hands of the assailants the document is not on record, and the endorsements as required by Ss. 60 and 61 could not be completed. The defendants claimed to be in possession of the properties in suit by virtue of the subsequent gift deed. That deed was registered in the ordinary way and its execution was admitted by Jai Narain Singh before the same Registration Officer at Amethi. The executant was taken there on a palki in spite of his illness.

[2] The parties to the suit were at issue on a number of points but the main question upon which the decision turned was whether the deed which was executed on 27th October operated to affect the transfer of the properties covered by it to the plaintiffs. If it did, the subsequent deed of 4th November 1938, even if it was otherwise valid must remain valueless. The trial Court upheld the plaintiff's gift and decreed their suit. The lower appellate Court holding that the transfer in favour of the plaintiffs failed because the first deed was not properly registered dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have come up to this Court in appeal.

[3] The case was laid before Hon'ble the Chief Judge for hearing, and he referred it to a Bench under S. 14 (2), Oudh Courts Act by his order, dated 19th September 1947 in view of the importance of the legal contentions which were raised on behalf of the parties before him.

[4] Section 123, T. P. Act, prescribes that a gift of immovable property must be effected by a registered instrument, and the sole point that falls for determination is whether the document executed by Jai Narain Singh on 27th October 1938, can be regarded for the purposes of that section as "a registered instrument." According to S. 3 of the same Act the word "registered" means registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents. The learned Civil Judge who decided the defendants' appeal appears to have thought that a document cannot be deemed to have been properly registered uutil the registration is completed within the meaning of S. 61(2), Registration Act. The contention raised on behalf of the appellants was that since equity treated as done what ought to have been done if the law was allowed to have its course, the plaintiffs' title deed should be regarded as duly registered for the purposes of S. 123, T. P. Act. It was urged further that a Court of law would not allow the provisions of the Registration Act and T. P. Act, to be used for effectuating a fraud and defeating the purpose of the first conveyance. We have carefully considered the arguments and we are in general agreement with the principle advocated on appellants' behalf that a valid instrument which effectually conveys property cannot be allowed to lose its effect merely by reason of its fraudulent destruction and as such destruction is more or less the only impediment to the plaintiffs' title it ought not as far as possible be allowed to become unsurmountable. We prefer, however, to decide the case on the statutory provisions contained in the Registration Act, for they in our opinion are clear and render it unnecessary to take the aid of equitable doctrines invoked on appellants' behalf. We have already stated that after its execution and attestation once, the deed was presented to sub-registrar the provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59 so far as they were applicable were complied with. Section 60 (1) lays down that:

"After such of the provisions of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59 as apply to any document presented for registration have been complied with the registering officer shall endorse thereon a certificate containing the word "registered" together with the number and page of the book in which the document has been copied."

Sub-s. (2) of S. 60 then provides that:

"Such certificate shall be signed, sealed and dated by the registering officer and shall then be admissible for the purpose of proving that the document has been duly registered in the manner provided by this Act and that the facts mentioned in the endorsement referred to in S. 59 have occurred as therein mentioned."

The certificate referred to above could not be endorsed, since the registering officer as we have already stated was compelled to surrender the deed to some unauthorised persons. In our opinion, however, the certificate though it may be indicative and afford proof of due registration does not by itself effect registration. Sub-section (2) only makes the endorsement of the certificate of registration prima facie evidence for the purposes of proving that the formalities were gone through. The provision does not preclude a person from proving the same matters by other evidence, and we conceive that the failure to comply with the requirements of Ss. 34, 35, 58 and 59 would in spite of the certificate result in the document being rejected as unregistered. It is thus the compliance with the provisions of S. 34. 35, 58 and 59 which constitutes registration of a document and not the presence of the certificate. The subsequent formalities are mere ministerial acts and defects occasioned therein by the acts or omissions of the registrar or irregularties in carrying out the duties enjoined by Ss. 60 and 61 would merely constitute defects of procedure for which neither the donor nor the donee is responsible. The deed of 27-10-1938 suffered from such defects only and fortunately they are not fatal to its validity or enforcibility. Section 87 appears to us to provide the cure. The relevant portion of the section is as follows:

"Nothing done in good faith pursuant to this Act ..... by any registering officer shall be deemed invalid merely by reason of any defect in ..... procedure."

"Defect" according to (1897) 66 L. J. Q. B. 349[1] and Webster's as well as Oxford Dictionaries means want or absence of something essential to completeness.

[5] In the case before us, the Sub-Registrar had done all he could for carrying out the registration of the instrument up to the stage of writing the certificate. The want of subsequent formalities can, it would seem, be condoned, for in the events which happened the performance of those formalities was rendered physically impossible. The omission to perform the requisite acts must be regarded as omission in something done by the Sub-Registrar in good faith while performing his duties under the Act and the document must therefore, be deemed to be duly registered within the meaning of S. 123, T. P. Act, notwithstanding the defects. In this view it is obviously unnecessary to reconsider the further question (which was canvassed before us on respondents' behalf) regarding the bar imposed by S. 49 of the Act.

[6] We accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the decision of the lower appellate Court. We restore the decree of the Court of first instance and allow to the plaintiffs the costs of this Court and of the Court of first appeal.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 8 — Absence of plaintiff on date of hearing — Defendant admitting part of claim—Whole suit cannot be dismissed.

Where in a suit on a pronote, the defendant admits a part of the claim and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court has no power under O. 9, R. 8 to dismiss the whole claim, but must pass a decree for the amount of the claim admitted by the defendant. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 16 R. 20 — Scope — Plaintiff sought to be examined on commission as defence witness — Refusal to give evidence — Penalty under rule cannot be imposed.

The penalty provided by O. 16, R. 20 applies when the party required by the Court to give evidence is present before the Court and refuses to give evidence. A penalty under that rule is imposed on the party as such and not as a witness. Hence where a plaintiff who was sought to be examined on commission at the instance of the defendant refused to give evidence on oath, it was held that the penalty provided for in O. 16, R. 20 could not be imposed on the plaintiff as the plaintiff was in fact only a witness before the commissioner and was not required by the Court to give evidence. Order. — On 15th March 1943, the plaintiff filed a suit for recovery of Rs. 142 and interest thereon on the basis of a pronote dated 17th March 1940. The defendant in her written statement admitted execution of the pronote but said that it was in lieu of a previous pronote for Rs. 50, and that out of it Rs. 38-2-6 had already been realized by the plaintiff. In the course of proceedings, she further stated that the plaintiff, who was a pardanashin lady might be examined on commission and if she stated that Rs. 142 had been paid to her (defendant) in cash and she had not also realized Rs. 38-2-6 the suit might be decreed against her. The Court appointed a commissioner to record the statement of the plaintiff at her house on 26th April 1943 and directed that the case should come up for hearing on 27th April 1943. The commissioner went to the house of the plaintiff to record her statement, but the plaintiff refused to give a statement on oath. The report was submitted to the Court on 27th April 1943 and the order sheet of that date shows that the counsel for the defendant was present and the plaintiff was absent and proceedings were to continue ex parte against the plaintiff. The Court recorded the following proceedings:

"From the report of the commissioner it appears that the plaintiff refused to give her statement on oath. Suit dismissed with costs to the defendant. Order 16 R. 20/O. 9 R. 8, Civil P. C."

It would appear that later on the plaintiff applied for setting aside the order passed on 27th April 1943. The Court on 25th May 1943 ordered restoration on payment of Rs. 30 as costs by the plaintiff before 6th July 1943. On 6th July 1943 the plaintiff did not pay the costs and prayed that the application for restoration should be dismissed. The application was accordingly dismissed. On 26th July 1943 the present application in revision was filed against the decree of 27th April 1943, on the ground that the refusal of the plaintiff to take the oath did not justify the Court in throwing out the claim of the plaintiff.

[2] I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and am satisfied that the order passed by the Court below requires modification. It was urged on behalf of the opposite party that the order of dismissal of the suit was passed both under O. 16, R. 20 and O. 9 R. 8, Civil P. C., and that in the circumstances no interference was called for. Rule 8 provides that where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed unless the defendant admits the claim or part thereof in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission and where only a part of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder. In this case clearly the defendant had admitted the claim of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 50 minus Rs. 38-2-6, that is. Rs. 11-13-6. The Court could not dismiss this claim. As regards the balance the matter cannot be reopened now as the applicant chose to apply for restoration and that application has been dismissed. The learned counsel for the opposite-party says that this part of the claim relating to Rs. 11-13-6 was also dismissed under R. 20, O. 16, Civil P. C. The trial Court has certainly made a reference to this rule, but it appears to me that it has not been rightly applied. The plaintiff refused to give evidence before the commissioner. She was not present in Court and her refusal did not take place before the Court. The learned connsel for the opposite-party said that under R. 17, O. 26, Civil P. C., the commissioner is to be deemed to be a Civil Court and therefore presence before the commissioner shall be deemed to be presence in Court. The commissioner is a Court only in respect of summoning, attendance and examination of witnesses and of their remuneration and in respect of the penalties to be imposed upon witnesses appearing before a commissioner. The plaintiff was in fact only a witness before the commissioner. The penalty provided by R. 20 applies when the party required by the Court to give evidence is present before the Court and refuses to give evidence. A penalty under R. 20, O. 16 is imposed on the party as such and not as a witness. Besides it was not the Court that required the plaintiff to give evidence but it was the defendant who apparently wanted the plaintiff to be examined as her witness. Rule 20, O. 16, Civil P. C., was not therefore correctly applied by the trial Court.

[3] The learned counsel for the opposite party urged that it was open to the applicant to appeal against the order under R. 20, O. 16, Civil P. C. It was open to the plaintiff either to appeal against that order or to appeal against the decree and she has chosen to appeal against the decree and there is nothing to prevent her from doing so. It follows that the dismissal of the plaintiff's claim in respect of the amount due to her on the admission of the defendant herself was contrary to law. Accordingly it is ordered that the plaintiff applicant shall get a decree for Rs. 11-13-6 from the defendant opposite party. She will get interest at 3 per cent on this amount from 27th April 1943. As the applicant has succeeded only in part the parties will bear their own costs in all the Courts. The decree of the lower Court is modified accordingly.

K.S. Order accordingly.

Second Appeals Nos. 144 and 272 of 1942, Decided on 17-3-1948, from order of Addl. Civil Judge, Gonda, D/-13-4-1942.

(a) Tort — Defamation — Publication to third party is essential.

No action for slander can be maintained unless there has been publication of the slanderous words to some one other than the person slandered: (1894) 2. Q. B. 54, Rel. on. [Para 13]

(b) Tort — Defamation — Law of—Applicability of English law in India — Extent of, indicated.

There is no statutory law of defamation in India except what is contained in Chap. 21, Penal Code. As to civil liability for defamation, however, it has long been settled in this country that an action for damages would lie in proper cases. The basis on which Courts entertain suits for damages for libel or slander in India is the same as in England, viz., that every man has a right to have his name maintained unimpaired. A large number of artificial and technical rules have grown around this branch of the law in England. Courts in India are not bound by them. The dicta of English Judges or general rules based on such dicta may, however, be helpful if they can be applied to Indian cases as principles of justice, equity and good conscience: (1862) 8 Q. B. 491, Ref. [Para 14]

(c) Tort — Defamation — Privilege—Communication made from sense of duty is privileged — Penal Code (1860), S. 499.

A communication made from a sense of duty, legal, moral or social, must, if the circumstances of the case so justify, be treated as privileged. But for such a rule, considerable inconvenience and even hardship is likely to ensure.

The assistant manager of a taluqdari prepared certain representations for submission to the talukdar through the manager, taluqdar. In them, there were passages, containing veiled accusations against the taluqdar and his employees and remarks that the wife of the taluqdar was conspiring against the taluqdar; that the taluqdar was imbecile and was influenced by his wife in matters of administration and many other insinuations. The assistant manager took these representations to the manager who after going through them remarked that he was "a traitor and disloyal" to the taluqdar. There was no one present there. Not liking the remark, the assistant manager sent his resignation to the manager, along with a letter withdrawing the representations. In the letter of resignation the assistant manager had said, "as my immediate officer thinks I have not been true to your honour, I think it unworthy of me to continue in service any more and beg to resign." When this resignation was put before the taluqdar, he questioned the manager what the assistant manager meant by his reference to his "immediate officer" and what he thought about him. The manager told the taluqdar what had transpired between him and the assistant manager. The defamation complained against was that the manager called the assistant manager "a traitor" before the taluqdar:

Held, that the communication made by the manager to the taluqdar concerning the assistant manager clearly fell under the above rule, and that even if the manager was wrong in his judgment the occasion was privileged: 1891 A. C. 73, Rel. on. [Para 14]

(d) Tort—Defamation—Justification — Employer while accepting resignation of employee using strong language — Conduct of employee justifying such strong language — Acceptance letter held not defamatory — Employee's superior officer handing over file containing this letter to his personal assistant in ordinary course of business — Held no justification for action for libel.

In the representation prepared for presentation to a Taluqdar (Maharaja) through the Manager, an employee (plaintiff) of the Maharaja not only made insinuations but actually impressed upon the Maharaja that the Maharani Sirkar was opposing his wishes. Certain paragraphs of his representation made exceedingly mischievous suggestions about the Maharani. The representations contained distortions of facts, half truths and untruths, jumbled together to suit his own purpose and fancies. The Maharaja was ridiculed as an imbecile and the Maharani Sirkar was accused of conspiracy against the Maharaja. Not liking a certain remark made by his superior officer on these representations the plaintiff resigned his services. The Maharaja accepted the plaintiff's resignation and passed an order containing amongst others the following remarks : "It is extremely wicked, ignoble and disloyal on the part of plaintiff to make even veiled insinuations against Maharani Saheba. The plaintiff has not been true to the Maharani Saheba and myself. I am definitely of opinion that he is unworthy of being retained in the service of my Raj any longer . . . ." The plaintiff complained that this letter contained defamatory expressions, and his superior officer published them to his personal assistant by handing over the file to him containing that order :

Held that the words used by the Maharaja could not be said to be inappropriate or untrue in describing the plaintiff's conduct. Publication of these words could not make his superior officer liable in damages for libel.

Held further that assuming that the order passed by the Maharaja, if published could form the basis for a suit for libel, the handing over of the file containing the order by his superior to his personal assistant was in the ordinary course of business, and no action for libel could be founded on such publication. [Para 16]

(e) Tort—Defamation— Justification—Attack on person's character— Answer to attack containing remarks against character of attacker—Communication of answer to those who heard the attack held justified.

Where an attack is made upon a man's character, he has a right to answer it and to communicate his answer to all concerned, particularly those who heard the attack.

The plaintiff in his representations to the employer referred the defendant, another employee, as one of the "intriguers and hypocrites who shed gallons of crocodile tears etc. etc." The defendant in answer called the plaintiff "intriguer and disloyal" :

Held that the defendant clearly had a right of self-defence. He had a right to convince those who had read the plaintiff's representation, of the falsity of the remarks, contained in them, by showing the orders passed by the employer, containing remarks against the conduct of the plaintiff. The defendant was further fully justified in calling the plaintiff "intriguer and disloyal" since the plaintiff had hatched a plot against him to injure him by the way he was referred to, in the representations. Hyder Husain—for Respondent.

Judgment. — These are two appeals arising out of the same judgment and may conveniently be disposed of together. The material facts are as follows :

[2] The Maharaja of Balrampur is the proprietor of a big taluqa in Gonda district, and owns extensive zamindari property. He naturally employs a large staff to manage the estate, and to look after the affairs of his Raj. Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh, appellant in appeal No. 272 of 1942, is the son of one Captain Adhya Pratap Singh who was in the service of the Balrampur Raj for about 20 years. Captain Adhya Pratap Singh was also related to the second wife of the late owner of the Raj-Maharaja Sir Drigbijai Singh Bahadur of Balrampur. Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh was educated in India and in England at the cost of Balrampur Raj. In 1935 he was appointed Superintendent of the Raja's Stables and gardens. On 1-10-1938, he was raised to the position of Assistant Manager of the Raj. Y. A. Dikshit, the appellant in the other appeal, (No. 144 of 1942), is also an employee of the Raj. He is the confidential adviser of the Maharani. The suit which has given rise to these appeals was brought in the Court of the Munsif Utraula by Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh for recovery of Rs. 2000 damages for defamation. Four persons were impleaded as defendants : (1) H. S. Bates, Esq., I. C. S., Manager of Balrampur Raj, (2) Y. A. Dikshit, Confidential Adviser to the Maharani Saheba, Balrampur Raj, (3) Virendra Vikram Singh, Private Secretary to the Maharaja, and (4) Maharaja Sir Pateshwari Prasad Singh Saheb of Balrampur.

[3] The plaint alleges that the plaintiff worked as Assistant Manager of Balrampur Raj till 1-3-1940, when his resignation was accepted by the Maharaja. The facts that led to his resignation were that on 9-2-1940, the plaintiff prepared a representation to be presented to the Maharaja through Mr. Bates, and personally took it to him. Mr. Bates, after glancing through the representation, returned it to him with the observation that he should not press it. On 26-2-1940, Mr. Bates asked the plaintiff to see him the next morning. Along with his reply to Mr. Bates' note, asking the plaintiff to meet him, he sent to Mr. Bates the unsigned representation which he had taken to him on 9th February and another amended representation which was signed by him. He requested Mr. Bates to deal with those representations. The next day the plaintiff went to Mr. Bates, who, after going through both the representations, called the plaintiff a "traitor to the Maharaja." This accusation was, according to the plaintiff, wholly unfounded. The plaintiff, however, returned to his house and sent a letter to Mr. Bates withdrawing the representation. He also submitted his resignation to him the same day.

[4] On 1-3-1940, the Maharaja accepted the plaintiff's resignation and passed an order containing amongst others the following remarks :

"It is extremely wicked, ignoble and disloyal on the part of Mr. Radha Krishna Pratap Singh to make even veiled insinuations against Maharani Saheba .... Mr. Radha Krishna Pratap Singh has not been true to the Maharani Saheba and myself. I am definitely of opinion that he is unworthy of being retained in the service of my Raj any longer ....."

The plaintiff alleged that these words, which were defamatory of him, were published to various persons by the defendants. The plaintiff further complained that defendants 1 to 3 had called him "an intriguer and disloyal." Paragraph 3 of the plaint ran as follows :

"That during the term of his service the plaintiff had to fight oppositions and face difficulties at every stage and prior to his resignation things were so manoeuvred by the defendants 1 to 3 who concerted together against the plaintiff, as to make it impossible for the plaintiff to remain serving in the estate except at the cost of losing his prestige and self-respect. In that very connection defendants 1 to 3 poisoned the ears of the Maharaja defendant 4 against the plaintiff by misrepresenting and distorting facts."

His resignation having been accepted, the plaintiff on 27-2-1941, instituted his suit for damages for defamation amounting to Rs. 2000. Originally no relief was claimed against the Maharaja (defendant 4) but subsequently a decree against him was also claimed. Defendant 1 Mr. Bates admitted that he had called the plaintiff "traitor to the Maharaja." He added, however, that this was done when no one else was present in the room except himself and Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh. He further claimed "qualified privilege." He denied any conspiracy against the plaintiff and challenged the assertion that he had called the plaintiff an intriguer and disloyal. Defendant 2 Y. A. Dikshit and defendant 3 Mr. Virendra Vikram Singh, denied the conspiracy and further challenged the assertion that they had called the plaintiff "intriguer and disloyal." The Maharaja denied that he was actuated by any malice in passing the order complained of. As the plaintiff's employer, he claimed a "master's privilege against his servant to comment on his servant's conduct."

[5] The following issues were framed by the trial Court :

"(1) Is Maharaja Pateshwar Prasad Singh's order dated 1-3-1940 accepting the resignation of the plaintiff in general and the words alleged in para 7 of the plaint in particular defamatory in the ordinary and natural meaning ?

2. Did defendants 1 to 3 call the plaintiff "intriguer and disloyal" ?

3. Are the words "traitor" uttered by Mr. Bates and "intriguer and disloyal" alleged to have been used by defendants 1 to 3 defamatory in their ordinary and natural meaning ?

4. Did defendants 1 to 3 publish the alleged defamatory statements concerning the plaintiff as given in issues (1) and (3)? If so, did they do so maliciously?

5. Were the defendants justified in making and publishing the alleged statements as covered in issues (1) and (3) ?

6. Did defendants 1 and 4 make the statements as given in issues (1) and (3) in their privileged position as alleged ?

7. Is the suit bad for multifariousness ?

8. Are the defendants entitled to special costs under S. 35A, Civil P. C. ?

9. To what relief and amount of damages is the plaintiff entitled ?"

[6] The learned Munsif in an elaborate and carefully written judgment held that the order passed by the Maharaja was not defamatory but was a fair comment on the plaintiff's action in submitting the two representations to which reference has been made. He was of opinion that in the case before him there could be no question of the ordinary and natural meaning of the words used, as the order must be read with reference to the representations made by the plaintiff, Exs. A2 and A3. He further held that it was proved that only Y. A. Dikshit had called the plaintiff "intriguer and disloyal." It was found by him that there was no malice on the part of any of the defendants. On the question of publication he held in favour of the plaintiff. He further held that the defendants were justified in using the expressions complained of and that all the four defendants could claim privilege. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

[7] Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh filed an appeal which was disposed of by the Additional Civil Judge of Gonda. He held that the expression "traitor to the Maharaja" used by Mr. Bates, as well as the expressions used in the order passed by the Maharaja, and the words "intriguer and disloyal" used by Y. A. Dikshit were defamatory. On the evidence before him he came to the conclusion that though Mr. Bates had originally called the plaintiff "traitor to the Maharaja" while no one else was present, subsequently he repeated these before the Maharaja and another person Mukat Behari Lal. He was of opinion, however, that Mr. Bates was not actuated by any malice and that the occasions were privileged. He held that there was no proof of any conspiracy among the defendants, nor was it proved that Mr. Virendra Vikram Singh at any time used any defamatory words in relation to the plaintiff. He held that Y. A. Dikshit could not claim privilege and as the expressions used by him "intriguer and disloyal" were defamatory, he was liable to damages. As a result of these findings he dismissed the appeal of Radha Krishna Pratap Singh against Mr. Bates, Virendra Vikram Singh and the Maharaja. He allowed it against Mr. Dikshit and passed a decree for Rs. 2000 and cost in favour of the plaintiff. Two appeals before me are preferred against this decision: Appeal No. 144 by Mr. Y. A. Dikshit and Appeal No. 272 by Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh. Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh's appeal is directed against Mr. Bates alone. I will deal with this appeal first.

[8] In order to enable us to see the points which arise for consideration in their proper perspective, it is necessary to reproduce here in extenso the two representations submitted by the appellant, Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh, and the order passed by the Maharaja accepting his resignation. Exhibit A2 reads as follows:

"To

Sri Man Maharaja Sahib Bahadur, Balrampur Raj.

Through:

H. S. Bates, Esq, I. C. S.,

Manager, Balrampur Raj.

May it please your honour,

Most respectfully I beg to lay the following for your kind consideration:—

1. That though we have a Maharaja—with a majestic personality, wonderful memory, untiring energy, radient health—Free of all evils and under the influence of no one, Always eager to hear patiently the Riyaya of the Raj and redress their grievances. Touring in all the corners of the Raj at a good bit of inconvenience and personal discomfort—Of firm determination still ready to yield to reason — Always ready to learn and look into things still least interfering in the day-to-day administration of the various departments and exceedingly polite to services—the qualities that make you so dear to all and an ideal Maharaja for running the Estate on democratic lines.

2. That though we have a Maharani Sirkar "coming out of a family of administrators of high repute and calibre and known to be absolutely devoted to Maharaja Bahadur and like an ideal "Hindu Dharma-Patni" wanting nothing for herself and ready to take any risk and to any sacrifice for the "Pati."

3. That though we have Mr. Bates as Manager of the Raj who is a senior member of Civil Service, extremely kind and polite to his subordinates, always ready to yield to reason and loved alike by services and riyaya for his kind and sympathetic heart and saintly ways and highly loyal and faithful to Maharaja Bahadur and chiefly responsible for the release of the Raj from Court of Wards.

4. That though masses are solidly for Maharaja Bahadur whom they love and admire for his good qualities and for whom if the need be and they know of it they may do any sacrifice.

5. That though such a district as Bahraich where we have comparatively speaking less influence thought fit to praise the qualities of Maharaja Bahadur by presenting him various addresses.

6. That still it is a strong rumour that Maharaja Bahadur has to sit with Maharani Sirkar in Purdah to deal important papers which if true will undermine Maharaja Bahadur's prestige and position in public eye and may be resented by every faithful citizen and servant.

7. That still it appears to be a fact that everything is not so smooth running and plain sailing as it should be and there appears to be a sense of uncertainty and insecurity prevailing in services and certain amount of dissatisfaction all round.

8. That these fears have naturally risen due to successive retrenchments and other economic measures which were the outcome of the bogey of financial crisis raised by brainy people when Mr. Bates was out in England on leave and ended in hardship to certain bumble servants of the Raj and increase in deputation allowance of the author of the retrenchment scheme on top of annual graded promotion. What was the real motive of these brainy people has yet to be probed into.

9. That still one finds that a particular report written about Maharaja Bahadur which is said to be not very complimentary to Maharaja Bahadur is claimed to have been written with the help of one of Maharani Sirkar's trusted servants.

10. That still it is said that the period of Court of Wards was extended for the first time on account of opposition from a certain quarter not unknown to your goodself and even at the time of release taking advantage of these, certain demands it is said were pressed on behalf of Maharani Sirkar which created a deadlock and it is said that ultimately an English Officer had to remark that H. E. was fighting like that for Sirkar and who was to fight, for Maharaja and declined to agree with the request in its entirety.

11. That since your honour mentioned my name in connection with Private Secretary's appointment there has been a great intrigue against me and certain gross untruths and deliberate lies were told against me to Mr. Bates and to other respectable personalities which I regard as my duty to expose and fight.

12. That though Maharaja Bahadur is the constitutional head of the Balrampur administration still it is an open secret that he could not have a Secretary of his choice even when he gave an option as wide as to give him any English man and the news is all the more discomforting when one hears that even Maharani Sirkar opposed Maharaja Bahadur's wishes.

13. That there are a good few other rather unpleasant things which I do not want to mention here.

14. That these things are bound to cause a serious rupture in the house some day and I consider it my duty to struggle to stop it after carefully studying things and thinking out ways and means for doing so.

15. That this cannot be done and should not be done as long as I am in regular service and I have therefore decided to go on long leave.

16. I therefore beseech your goodself to grant me all my due leave and order immediate payment of my dues and to relieve me early so that I may:

Fight for your cause as an independent and faithful citizen and relation,

Struggle to remove the sense of insecurity and uncertainty from service.

Give Maharani Sirkar frank and correct advice if and when needed. Help your honour and Mr. Bates to establish constitutional rule in Balrampur. Enlighten the masses on their duty to your goodself and the Raj. Expose the intriguers and hypocrites who shed gallons of crocodile tear and profess tons of love to you and still talk lots of nonsense and indulge in undesirable propoganda against your honour. And thus do real service to the Raj which may be remembered long after I am dead and gone.

Thanking your goodself, Maharani Sirkar and Mr. Bates for all the kindness and special considerations shown to me.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,"

This representation bears no signature. Exhibit A3 is a copy of the same representation signed by Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh and differs from the former only in two particulars. The last two lines of para. 1 in this representation are as follows:

"An ideal Maharaja for running the estate on constitutional lines with the help and advice of his manager."

Paragraph 6 has also been slightly altered and runs as follows:

"That still it is a strong rumour that Maharaja Bahadur has to sit with a "body of administrators" in purdah to deal important papers which if true is not only wrong from legal and constitutional point of view but is bound to undermine Maharaja Bahadur's prestige and position in public eye and may be resented by every faithful citizen. In view of what I have said above there is no need at all of these "administrators" but in case any body feels that there is any need of a helper or helpers this privilege should go to the riyaya of the Raj who have an inherent and birth right to advise their Maharaja."

Accompanying these representations was a covering letter Ex. A4. This ran as follows:

Manager: In compliance to your above order I shall be at your service at 10. I am sorry I could not see you last time when you sent for me as I had gone out with your permission. As you said nothing about it at Lucknow, I thought there was no urgency and was waiting for the visiting day. Meanwhile you may kindly deal with the accompanying envelope. To be frank the more I learn now is to create a misunderstanding between us which I want to avoid at any cost.

27/2/40. (Sd.) R. K. Pratap Singh."

Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh's resignation is Ex. A6. It is addressed to the Maharaja and runs as follows:

To

Sriman Maharaja Saheb Bahadur,
Through H. S. Bates, Esq. I. C. S., Manager,
May it please your honour,

As my immediate officer thinks I have not been true to your honour I think it unworthy of me to continue in service any more and beg to resign.

I had the honour to be,
Your humble servant,
(Sd.) R. K. Pratap Singh."

The two Courts below have differed as to the purport and true meaning of the representations made by Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh. The learned Munsif on a careful analysis of the various paragraphs of the representations was led to the conclusion that the appellant was attacking the honour and prestige of the Maharaja. He further found in the representations "a veiled insinuation against the Maharani." He also records his opinion that Radha Krishna Pratap Singh called Y. A. Dikshit and Virendra Vikram Singh hypocrites and intriguers and that he wanted to prejudice the Maharaja against them. He accordingly held that the expressions used by the Maharaja in his order with reference to his Assistant Manager were justified.

[9] The learned Civil Judge in appeal took a different view. He recorded it as his opinion that the representations did not "merit such a strong and defamatory disapprobation on the part of the Maharaja or Mr. Bates." It is therefore necessary to examine the representations and consider what is their true import.

[10] Having given the representations my careful consideration and read them as a whole I have no doubt in my mind that these are most mischievous documents. Though in the beginning they purport to shower encomiums not only upon the Maharaja and Maharani, but also upon Mr. Bates, yet by insinuations and innuendoes, which at times are hardly veiled, the appellant not only criticises the administration of the Maharaja, but attempts to create bad blood between the Maharaja and the Maharani. He wants to impress it upon the Maharaja that the estate employees are hypocrites and intriguers and he alone is a faithful and true servant. He also indicates why he intended to go on long leave, that is: (1) To fight for the Maharaja's cause "as an independent and faithful citizen and relation," (2) struggle to remove the state of uncertainty from services, (3) give the Maharani Sirkar frank and correct advice, if and when needed, (4) help the Maharaja and Mr. Bates to establish constitutional rule in Balrampur, (5) enlighten the masses on their duty to the Maharaja, and (6) to expose the "intriguers and hypocrites . . . . and thus do real service to the Raj . . . . "

[11] Paragraphs 1 to 5 of this representation are devoted to bestowing praise and describing the good qualities of the Maharaja, the Maharani and their manager Mr. Bates, and assuring the Maharaja that the masses were solidly for him. With para. 6 begins the criticism of the Maharaja's administration and of his conduct in consulting his Maharani in matters of the Raj. In the unsigned representation Ex. A2 there is a direct reference to the Maharaja Bahadur "sitting with the Maharani Sirkar in parda" to deal with important papers. The writer does not take the responsibility for the averments. On the other hand it is cleverly stated that there is a strong rumour that the Maharaja does so. Then the appellant gives his opinion that if this is true, it would undermine the Maharaja's prestige and position in the Raj and will be resented by every faithful citizen and servant. It is obvious that no weight can be attached to the opening words of this paragraph that there was a strong rumour to that effect. The appellant was the Assistant Manager of the estate. He was distantly related to the Maharaja. His father had been in the service of the estate for 20 years. Such a person could not pretend to be ignorant of how the Maharaja dealt with the affairs of the estate. The expression of opinion that the conduct of the Maharaja would be resented "by every faithful citizen and servant" is only an euphemism for saying that the appellant resents this. He was telling the Maharaja in effect and with undisguised contempt that the latter had no will of his own and was altogether led by the Maharani. Paragraph 7 tells the Maharaja that there was a sense of uncertainty prevailing in the services and a great deal of dissatisfaction all round. Paragraph 8 criticises the retrenchment measures adopted by the Maharaja on the advice of some of his officials. In Para. 9 there is a direct attack upon the Maharani Sirkar and her servants. Not improbably the reference is to Y. A. Dikshit. He tells the Maharaja that the Maharani and her servants were responsible for making a report which was not complimentary to the Maharaja Bahadur. Paragraph 10 is in the same strain. It accuses the Maharani Sirkar and seeks to impress upon the Maharaja that in her dealings with her husband the conduct of the Maharani and her servants was not what it should be. Paragraph 11 draws the Maharaja's attention to an alleged intrigue against the writer since his name was proposed by the Maharaja for the post of the private secretary and informs him that the appellant was determined to "expose and fight" the intrigue. Paragraph 12 also deals with the same subject. The writer points out to the Maharaja that though he is the "head of Balrampur administration" still he had been rendered so helpless by his Maharani that he could not appoint a private secretary of his own choice. Paragraph 13 is still more mischievous. It says "there are a good few other rather unpleasant things which I do not want to mention here." This may imply anything, and in the setting in which it is placed, it suggests that the unpleasant things which the writer did not consider proper to mention related to the Maharani. Paragraph 14 shows that these unpleasant and unmentionable things had reference to the Maharaja's family and his household. Paragraph 15 emphasises the grave nature of the things which the writer has left unmentioned. The matters referred to are, according to the writer, of such serious character that he cannot tolerate them and accordingly he decided to go on long leave.

[12] I have already mentioned earlier the alleged objects which the appellant had in view in applying for leave. Whatever be the form of expression chosen by the appellant, it is clear that one of the tasks he had set to himself while on leave was to see the establishment of "constitutional rule" in Balrampur and "to enlighten the masses on their duty to the Maharaja and the Raj." It is not difficult to see what the writer really implied. Obviously there is no question of any constitutional rule in Balrampur. The Maharaja is not the ruler of the residents of the estate. He is only a taluqdar. The reference to the establishment of a constitutional rule in Balrampur Raj leaves no doubt in my mind that there was an implied threat, held out to the estate authorities that the appellant intended to start a mass agitation in Balrampur. Even if the writer did not actually intend to do so, he could not legitimately complain if, from the language used by him, Mr. Bates inferred that Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh was much mortified at not being appointed private secretary of the Maharaja, and was so dissatisfied with the manner in which the estate administration was being carried on, that he wanted to start mass agitation to set things right. This agitation was expressly intended to the establishment of a constitutional rule in Balrampur, and the means to achieve that end were "enlightenment of the masses", which is another expression for "rousing the tenantry". The appellant cannot legitimately complain if Mr. Bates, having regard to all that the appellant owed to the estate considered his conduct "as disloyal to the Maharaja", and called him a traitor to his employer. At the present day when there is so much talk about the abolition of zamindari system, and relations between the zamindars and their tenants are subject of much acrimonious controversy between different political parties, to talk about the establishment of a constitutional rule by enlightenment of the masses cannot but be interpreted as disloyalty to the taluqdar. This would be considered as an unfriendly act on part of even a stranger, but certainly it was disloyalty to the Maharaja if done by one of his own servants who, and whose family were under great obligations to him. The imputations conveyed by the words "traitor to the Maharaja" cannot be called false. The conduct of the appellant fully justified the use of this epithet. Apart from others, on this ground alone the appellant's claim in respect of the use of this epithet, and its publication by Mr. Bates, must fail.

[13] Mr. Bates had called the appellant "a traitor to the Maharaja". This was done while he and the appellant were the only persons in his room. It is well settled that no action for slander can be maintained unless there has been publication of the slanderous words to some one other than the person slandered. As observed by Lord Esher M. R. in (1894) 2 Q.B.D. 54[1] at p. 58 "the material part of the cause of action in libel is not the writing, but the publication of the libel." This applies both to libel and slander. The appellant complains that Mr. Bates told the Maharaja that he had called him a traitor. This is not denied by Mr. Bates, but it was the appellant's own resignation, EX. A6 which made it necessary for Mr. Bates to tell the Maharaja of what had passed between him and the appellant in connection with his representations. He said in his resignation "as my immediate officer thinks I have not been true to your honour, I think it unworthy of me to continue in service any more and beg to resign". Naturally when this resignation was put before the Maharaja, he must have questioned Mr. Bates what the appellant meant by his reference to his 'immediate officer' and what he thought about him. In these circumstances Mr. Bates could not but tell the Maharaja what had transpired between him and the appellant.

[14] There is no statutory law of defamation in India except what is contained in Chap. XXI, Penal Code. As to civil liability for defamation, however, it has long been settled in this country that an action for damages would lie in proper cases. The basis on which Courts entertain suits for damages for libel or slander in India is the same as in England, viz., that every man has a right to have his name maintained unimpaired, i.e. "to have", as was said by Cave J. in (1882) 8 Q. B. D. 491[2] at p. 503 "the estimation in which he stands in the opinion of others unaffected by false statements to his discredit" A large number of artificial and technical rules have grown around this branch of the law in England. We in this country are not bound by them. The dicta of English Judges or general rules based on such dicta may, however, be helpful if they can be applied to Indian cases as principle of justice, equity and good conscience. In England if a person is asked as to the character of his former servant, there is a social duty upon him to tell the inquirer what he knows about him. In such a case, even if it turns out that the master was mistaken in some of his statements no action will lie against him at the instance of the servant. It was observed by Lord Macnaghten in 1891 A. C. 73[3] at p. 78 that "there is no reason why greater protection should be given to a communication made in answer to an inquiry with reference to a servant's character than to any other communication made from a sense of duty, legal, moral, or social."

This statement contains a principle of wider application than in the country where it was made. A communication made from a sense of duty, legal, moral or social, must if the circumstances of the case so justify, be treated as privileged. But for such a rule considerable inconvenience and even hardship is likely to ensure. The communication made by Mr. Bates to the Maharaja concerning the appellant clearly falls under this rule, and even if Mr. Bates was wrong in his judgment about the appellant, the occasion would be privileged.

[15] The next point urged was that the order passed by the Maharaja on the appellant's resignation, an extract from which has been quoted earlier in this judgment, contained defamatory expressions, and Mr. Bates published them to his personal assistant Mukat Behari Lal by handing over the file to him containing that order. The first question to be considered in connection with this argument is whether the order passed by the Maharaja upon the appeallant's resignation could form the foundation for an action for damages for defamation. If what the Maharaja said about the appellant in his order was true, there is no question of defamation. It is true that the Maharaja used the words 'wicked, ignoble and disloyal' in relation to the appellant's conduct in making the insinuations against the Maharani. That he not only made insinuations but actually impressed upon the Maharaja that the Maharani Sirkar was opposing his wishes. Paragraphs 13 and 14 of his representation make exceedingly mischievous suggestions about the Maharani. The appellant made no attempt to explain, while he was in the witness box, what he meant by saying that there were 'other rather unpleasant things which he did not want to mention,' and that those things were bound to cause a serious rupture in the (Maharaja's) house some day. It is well known that more may at times be conveyed by suggestions than by express words. What was conveyed to the mind of the Maharaja by these two paragraphs is clear from the observations made by him in his order that it was impossible to condemn in restrained language

"Such behaviour and the sinister meaning he (the appellant) has sought to convey. I desire most emphatically to pronounce that the allegations contained in his (appellant's) application dated 26/27-12-1940, are distortions of facts, half truths, and untruths jumbled together to suit his own purpoe and fancies."

Paragraphs 13 and 14 apparently were meant to convey to the Maharaja, and did convey to him, more than some express vituperative epithets about the Maharani and himself would have done. The appellant was only an assistant manager of the Maharaja. It was sheer impertinence on his part to presume to advise the Maharaja about matters which did not concern him. He had no business to assume to himself the role of the Maharaja's guardian and preceptor and to tell him what he should or should not do. I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Additional Civil Judge in appeal of the appellant's representation. The learned Judge observed :

"I cannot hold that the Maharaja is ridiculed in this representation as an imbecile or that the Maharani Sirkar is accused of conspiracy against the Maharaja or that the plaintiff held out a threat to raise the masses of the estate against the Maharaja. The representation is not a cry against the appointment of Mr. Singh as the private secretary to the Maharaja. The plaintiff never aspired for this post. The representation does seek to bring to the notice of the Maharaja and to the Maharani that all was not well in the estate and that Mr. Dikshit who would shed gallons of crocodile tears and profess tons of love for the Maharaja and the Maharani was an intriguer and hypocrite and that if he was allowed to work out his scheme of transference of power a serious rupture in the house of the Maharaja would be a matter of no surprise."

The learned Judge is an Indian and can well understand what is implied in the language used in para. 6 of the representation. If the appellant had said in express words that the Maharaja Bahadur cannot deal with important papers relating to the estate himself, and that he has to sit with the Maharani Sirkar in purda to deal with them, the paragraph would have been less offensive. The sting in this paragraph is clear. It tells the Maharaja in effect that he was an imbecile who had allowed his wife to thoroughly dominate over him and she was leading him by the nose. The sarcasm and contempt conveyed in the language used by the appellant does not require comment nor am I able to agree with the lower Court in its view that the representation was not 'a cry against the appointment of Mr. Singh as the private secretary of the Maharaja.' There is no warrant for the observation 'the plaintiff never aspired for this post.' May be that the appellant did not formally apply for the post. There is, however, express mention of this matter in paras. 11 and 12 of the representation. The learned Judge observed that the appellant wanted to bring to the notice of the Maharaja and the Maharani that 'all was not well in the estate.' There is nothing on the record to show that this was so, nor was any attempt made to prove that Mr. Dikshit was an intriguer and a hypocrite or that if he was allowed to work there would be a serious rupture in the family of the Maharaja.

[16] In dealing with the appellant's highly impertinent representation, the Maharaja acted with commendable restraint. The expressions 'wicked, ignoble and disloyal' are none too strong to condemn the appellant's conduct in sending such a representation to his employer. 'Wicked' is a strong term of general disapprobation. That the appellant was attempting to create ill-will between the Maharaja and the Maharani is obvious, and such conduct was certainly disloyal, ignoble and mean. I have no doubt that the words used by the Maharaja cannot be said to be inappropriate or untrue in describing the appellant's conduct. Publication of these words could not make Mr. Bates liable in damages for libel. Assuming, however, that the order passed by the Maharaja, if published could form the basis for a suit for libel, did the action taken by Mr. Bates with respect to it constitute publication? It has been found by the lower appellate Court that Mr. Bates placed the Maharaja's order on a file which he passed on to his personal assistant Mukat Behari Lal for being copied on a typewriter and sent to the applicant. It has further been found that Mukat Behari Lal saw the order. This part of the learned Judge's finding was challenged before me and my attention was not drawn to any evidence showing that the order was read by Mukat Beari Lal. But assuming that he read it, could this constitute publication of the libel by Mr. Bates? It was the duty of Mr. Bates to communicate to the appellant the order passed by the Maharaja on his representation, his handing over the file containing the order to his personal assistant Mukat Behari Lal was in the ordinary course of business, and no action for libel could be founded on such publication. In the circumstances of the case, it must be held to be an act done in the discharge of his duty.

[17] The communication of the order to Mr. Waugh, who was Adviser to the estate was also privileged. As pointed out by the trial Court, it was the duty of Mr. Bates to communicate the Maharaja's order on the appellant's representation submitted through him. I am clear that the appeal preferred by the plaintiff Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh is without substance. It is dismissed with costs.

[18] I will now turn to the other appeal by Y. A. Dikshit. The learned Additional Civil Judge held that Dikshit had published the order of the Maharaja to Suraj Narain Singh and to Adya Bakhsh Singh. He further held that Dikshit had called the plaintiff 'intriguer and disloyal.' He was of opinion that the occasions on which the libel was published could not be said to be privileged, and that the use of the expressions 'intriguer and disloyal' was not justified. He accordingly gave Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh a decree for Rs. 2000 and costs. I have already stated earlier in this judgment what I consider to be the true meaning and import of the representations submitted by the plaintiff to Mr. Bates, and have further held that the strong expressions used by the Maharaja with reference to the plaintiff's action in making insinuations and levelling charges against the Maharani were fully justified. The action condemned as "extremely wicked, ignoble and disloyal" cannot be said to be inappropriately or incorrectly so-called. If indirectly this casts a reflection upon the appellant's character, it was not an undeserved reflection and cannot form the basis of an action for defamation.

[19] Apart from the fact that what was said of the appellant's action in the Maharaja's order was true, we should not forget that the plaintiff had attacked Dikshit. It has been found by the Court below that the plaintiff when talked in his representation of exposing "intriguers and hypocrites who shed gallons of crocodile tears etc. etc." referred to Diksbit. Thus he made a direct and vile attack upon him and Dikshit had clearly the right of self-defence. In addition to other cases in which privilege arises owing to the existence of a duty, moral, social or legal or of common interest, where an attack is made upon a man's character, he has the right to answer it and to communicate his answer to all concerned, particularly those who heard the attack. Adya Bakhsh Singh was the plaintiff's father, and Suraj Narain Singh a relation. The plaintiff's resignation, and the circumstances in which it was brought about, were known to them. Y. A. Dikshit was under the rule enunciated above fully entitled to show the Maharaja's order to both of them in order to convince them that the accusations made against him by the plaintiff were unfounded and had been strongly condemned by the Maharaja to whom the representation was addressed.

[20] He was further fully justified in calling Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh "intriguer and disloyal." The plaintiff had hatched a plot against Dikshit. "Intrigue" means the exertion of tortuous or under-hand influence to accomplish some purpose; underhand scheming. By sending the representation referred to above to the Maharaja, he clearly wanted to injure Dikshit. No attempt was made at the trial to justify the allegations made against Dikshit by the plaintiff in his representation, and Dikshit cannot be said to be unjustified in calling him an "intriguer;" nor can there be any doubt that Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh was disloyal to his employer the Maharaja. So the imputations made by Dikshit against the plaintiff, apart from being privileged, were true and no action for defamation could be brought for use of those epithets by him with reference to Kunwar Radha Krishna Pratap Singh.

[21] It was argued before us that the plea of justification was not expressly taken by Dikshit in his written statement, and such a ground of defence should not be considered. I see no merit in this contention. Whatever be the English law on this point of procedure, I am clear that under our Code of Civil Procedure, the pleading has to state facts, and it is for the Court to apply the law. An issue was framed on this point. This was issue 5:

"Were the defendants justified in making and publishing the alleged statements as covered in issues (1) and (3)?"

The matter was considered in both the Courts below, and it is now too late in second appeal to raise the contention that inasmuch as justification was not expressly pleaded as a defence by the defendants' written statement, this should not be considered.

[22] I am of opinion that the conclusion of the Additional Civil Judge in so far as he held Y. A. Dikshit liable for damages cannot be upheld. Appeal No. 144 of 1942 by Y. A. Dikshit is allowed. The decree of the lower appellate Court in so far as it made Y. A. Dikshit liable for damages is set aside and the entire suit of the plaintiff is dismissed with costs throughout.

Mirza Inayat Beg — Defendant — Applicant v. Mirza Abdul Rauf Beg — Plaintiff —Opposite Party.

Application No. 162 of 1942, Decided on 18-2-1947, from order of District Judge, Lucknow, D/- 14-9-1942.

Oudh Civil Rules, Chap. 7, R. 289, cl. 10 — Vakalatnama filed in original Court — Necessity of filing fresh vakalatnama for taxing fee of counsel.

Rule 289 means simply this that where a counsel, who appears either for the appellant or the respondent, has not filed either a vakalatnama or a slip, his fee would be taxed only to the extent of half of the amount to which he would be ordinarily entitled unless a vakalatnama or slip is filed at least a day before the hearing; but if there is already a vakalatnama on the file which had been filed in the earlier stages of the case and it still validly subsists, no fresh vakalatnama or a slip would be necessary for purposes of taxing the fee of the counsel. [Para 3]

Mohd. Ayub — for Applicant.

Habib Ali Khan — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The facts in this case are that the plaintiff opposite party instituted a suit for recovery of arrears of rent in respect of some property in Lucknow against the defendant-applicant. The suit was partially decreed in the Court of first instance. The plaintiff carried the matter in appeal to the District Judge, Lucknow, who dismissed it with costs. At the time of the taxation of costs, the defendant-applicant was allowed half the fee certified by his counsel. The matter was agitated under S. 152, Civil P. C., before the learned District Judge, who in a short order rejected the claim for full fee. He held that the provisions of R. 289, chap. 7, cl. 10, Oudh Civil Rules were not complied with in order to entitle the defendant to full counsel's fee being taxed as the slip of appearance or a vakalatnama was not filed by him in the Court of appeal a day before the hearing of the appeal as required by the rule. It seems that the counsel for the defendant-applicant had filed a vakalatnama in the original Court, and it is not in controversy that that vakalatnama was valid in the Court of appeal. According to the interpretation of the rule by the learned Judge, it was necessary, notwithstanding the vakalatnama which existed in favour of the counsel for the applicant, who appeared in appeal he should have filed a fresh vakalatnama or slip in terms of cl. 10 of R. 289, Oudh Civil Rules, in order to entitle the defendant-applicant to taxation of full fee for counsel.

[2] To me it is clear that the rule has been misinterpreted. Paragraph 1 of cl. 10 of R. 289 runs as follows :

"In calculating costs of appeals, if the memorandum of appeal was not signed by a legal practitioner, only one-half of the ordinary fee will be allowed on account of the legal practitioner of the appellant; similarly, only one-half of the ordinary fee will be allowed on account of the legal practitioner of the respondent, unless in the case a legal practitioner has filed either his vakalatnama or a slip in the form appended to this paragraph after the filing of the appeal and before the first date fixed for hearing the case."

[3] Upon a reasonable construction the rule means simply this that where a counsel, who appears either for the appellant or the respondent, has not filed either a vakalatnama or a slip, his fee would be taxed only to the extent of half of the amount to which he would be ordinarily entitled unless a vakalatnama or slip is filed at least a day before the hearing but if there is already a vakalatnama on the file which had been filed in the earlier stages of the case and it still validly subsists, no fresh vakalatnama or a slip would be necessary. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff opposite party that notwithstanding the existence of a vakalatnama it is still necessary to file either a fresh vakalatnama or a slip to entitle a counsel to have his full fee taxed; for, he contends that the existence of any previous vakalatnama though valid for the purposes of hearings is not valid for the purposes of taxation of the fees. I cannot bring myself to accept the reasoning advanced by the learned counsel. To me it is clear that where a vakalatnama already exists no further necessity arises for filing either a fresh vakalatnama or a slip for the purposes of taxing the fee of the counsel. If the interpretation of the rule by the Court below is accepted the result would be that except in the case of a counsel, who has signed the memorandum of appeal in that case, either two slips or two vakalatnamas will be required, one for appearance and one for taxation of fee, which is obviously absurd. In my judgment the Court below has misinterpreted the rules and the application must therefore be allowed with costs. I order that full fees of the counsel for the defendant-applicant be taxed in the Court below.

Exn. of Decree Appeal No. 8 of 1943, Decided on 5-2-1948, from order of Civil Judge, Bahraich, D/-1-10-1942.

(a) U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (10 [X] of 1937), S. 5 (2) — Applicability — Sub-s. (2) does not apply unless judgment-debtor is agriculturist within the meaning of the Act.

The Act itself, as the preamble shows, is meant only for the benefit of agriculturists within the meaning of the Act and the benefit of sub-s. (2) of S. 5 can only be taken by a decree-holder whose judgment-debtor is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act at the date of passing of the Act: 32 A. I. R. 1945 All. 117 (F. B.), Disting [Para 5]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Execution proceedings — Interlocutory orders in same execution proceedings — Objection as to limitation in execution proceedings dismissed on judgment-debtor's prayer — Judgment-debtor is precluded from raising same objection in subsequent stage of same proceedings.

Where the judgment-debtor at an earlier stage in the same execution proceedings prayed for dismissal of his objection regarding limitation, and his objection was accordingly dismissed:

Held, that the objection raised was of such a nature that had it succeeded there would have been no further proceedings in execution and if the judgment-debtor chose not to get the objection decided on merits it was his own fault and it was no longer open to him to raise the objection in a subsequent stage of the same proceedings: 13 A. Judgment. — This is an appeal of the decree-holder against the order of Mr. Hasan Irahed, Civil Judge of Bahraich, dated 1-10-1942.

[2] Sant Ram, father of Ram Pearey, appellant, obtained on 11-2-1927 a decree for Rs. 267-15-6 in a suit for accounts of partnership. Eventually the Chief Court granted the appellant's father a decree on 26-7-1928 for Rs. 846 5-6 with interest at 6 per cent. from 11-2 1927 till realisation and proportionate costs. The first execution application by Sant Ram was made on 19-12-1929. It was consigned to records on 11-10-1930. On 23-9-1933 he gave a second application which was consigned to records on 21-10-1933. On 13-10-1936 he gave a third application which was consigned to records on 2-2 1937. A fourth execution application was apparently given on 9-9-1936 by Ram Pearey appellant. It was consigned to records on 12-12-1938. On 2-1-1941 the appellant gave another application for execution. The judgment-debtor objected against the execution under S. 47, Civil P. C., and under Ss. 8 to 10, Debt Redemption Act, alleging that the interest charged was not in accordance with the provisions of the Debt Redemption Act and that the application for execution was time barred. Some other objections were also taken. On 26-4-1941 the judgment-debtor prayed that his objection be dismissed and they were dismissed. Proceedings in execution were then taken on 2-5-1941 and the property of the judgment-debtor was attached. On 13-9-1941 the judgment-debtor filed his objection saying that the application for execution was time barred. The decree-holder said that the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist and so he was entitled to exclude the time during which the U. P. Act 10 [X] of 1937, (The Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act) was in force. The judgment-debtor denied that he was an agriculturist. The executing Court held that the judgment debtor was paying at the time the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act came into force a rent of Rs. 1040 and odd and so he was not an agriculturist and that in the circumstances the decree-holder was not entitled to exclude the period of three years during which that Act remained in force. It also held that the judgment-debtor by reason of previous dismissal of objection regarding limitation was not estopped from raising the same ground again because in the earlier proceedings the question of limitation had not been decided on merits. The application for execution was accordingly dismissed. The decree-holder went up in appeal and the learned appellate Court has held that the judgment-debtor was not estopped from raising the ground of limitation again because his previous objection on the point had not been decided on merits and also because his previous objection was in effect an application for amendment of the decree under the provisions of the Debt Redemption Act and the question of limitation was unnecessary for decision in such a case. The Court also held that the judgment-debtor is not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act and so the decree-holder could not exclude the time during which the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act was in force.

[3] It has been urged that the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act as he was paying less than Rs. 1000 as rent, that the finding of the Court to the contrary was based on inadmissible evidence, that even if the judgment-debtor was not an agriculturist S. 5, Temporary Postponment of Execution of Decrees Act applied to all kinds of decrees and that the judgment-debtor was estopped from raising the question of limitation.

[4] I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and see no reason to interfere. It appears that certain extracts from khitaunis were filed for the year 1345 Fasli to show that the judgment-debtor was paying more than Rs. 1000 as rent. It was said that Exs. 13 and 14, which showed a rent of Rs. 384 in respect of certain khatas were not admissible because full details of the khatas were not given. The learned lower appellate Court has rightly pointed out that the patwari was examined and he explained the entries recorded in Exs. 13 and 14 and gave the details of all the plots and the finding of the lower appellate Court is based on that evidence. The learned counsel for the appellant is therefore in effect trying to challenge only a finding of fact, which is no longer open to him.

[5] As to the question of limitation in this case it is admitted that if the benefit of the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act is not given the application for execution is clearly time barred under the provisions of S. 48, Civil P. C. The learned counsel for the appellant says that although the judgment-debtor is not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decress Act, he is nevertheless entitled to the benefit of the Act as sub-s. (2) of S. 5 of the Act says that in computing the period of twelve years prescribed by S. 48, Civil P. C., the period during which this Act shall remain in force shall be excluded. The learned counsel for the appellant has misunderstood the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 5. It will be seen that cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) of S. 5 allows in execution of decrees exclusion of the time during which the Act remains in force only in respect of decrees of the kind referred to in S. 3, and not covered by S. 6 and here the decree is not covered by S. 6 and S. 3 refers only to decrees for money or for foreclosure or sale in enforcement of a mortgage passed by a civil Court on the basis of a liability incurred before the passing of the Act against a judgment-debtor who is an agriculturist, at the date of passing of the Act. If such a period is to be excluded for the purposes of making an execution application it is only natural that the Legislature should provide also for excluding the same period for the purposes of S. 48, Civil P. C. The Act itself, as the preamble shows, is meant only for the benefit of agriculturists within the meaning of the Act and the benefit of sub-s. (2) of S. 5, Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, can only be taken by a decree-holder whose judgment-debtor is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act at the date of passing of the Act.

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant wanted to rely on I.L.R. (1945) ALL. 438[1] for the proposition that S. 5, U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, applies to all decrees and not only to those against agriculturists. This authority does not support the appellant at all. The headnote is as follows:

"Section 5, U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, is independent of, and is not subject to, the provisions of S. 3, and it is controlled by that section only to this extent that its application is restricted to the decree referred to in S. 3. Once it is found that the decree is of the character contemplated by S. 3, it will attract the application of S. 5, irrespective of the fact whether an application for stay has or has not been filed by the judgment-debtor in pursuance of the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 3."

In that case there was no doubt whatever that the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist paying more than Rs. 250 but less than Rs. 1000 as land revenue and the judgment-debtor was therefore an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act. Their Lordships in that case were considering the effect of sub-s. (1) of S. 5 and not of sub-s. (2) of S. 5. There is not the least doubt that sub-s. (2) of s. 5 has no application whatever unless the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist within the meaning of Act 10 [X] of 1937 (Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act). The execution application in the circumstances is clearly time barred.

[7] It was also urged that the objection as to limitation could not be raised by the judgment-debtor as his previous objection on the same point had been dismissed in the course of the same proceedings earlier. This contention has considerable force. It is a fact that the judgment-debtor at an earlier stage in the same execution proceedings prayed for dismissal of his objection regarding limitation, and his objection was accordingly dismissed. Both the Courts below have held that as the objection was not decided on merits it will not operate as res judicata. This view of the Courts below seems to me to be erroneous. The objection raised was of such a nature that had it succeeded there would have been no further proceedings in execution and if the judgment-debtor chose not to get the objection decided on merits it was his own fault and it is no longer open to him to raise the objection in a subsequent stage of the same proceedings. In 1 Luck. 171[2] it was held that :

"An interlocutory order passed in execution proceedings is final not only in respect of a matter decided by it if such matter is raised again in subsequent execution proceedings, but has also the effect of finality attached to it, if it is passed in continuation of the same proceedings."

In that case a decree was made absolute on 16-3-1920. The first application for execution of the decree was made on 24-4-1923 alleging a payment of Rs. 20 on 16-6-1922. After service of notice on the judgment-debtor the Court passed an order on 29-11-1923 allowing execution to proceed by transferring the decree to the Collector. It was held that the judgment-debtor not having chosen to oppose the application for execution, there was an implied adjudication against him so far as the question of limitation was concerned. In this view of the matter, the judgment-debtor had no right to raise the question of limitation again.

[8] The learned lower appellate Court has looked at this question of the previous objection of the judgment-debtor from another point of view. It has treated that objection as merely an application for amendment of decree. In my opinion the view which the learned lower appellate Court has taken on this point is not correct considering the application itself. There the judgment-debtor styled his application as objections under S. 47 and Ss. 8 to 10, Debt Redemption Act. Even the executing Court, which had the application before it, did not treat the objections as merely application of the judgment-debtor for amendment of the decree. However, the mere fact that it was not open to the judgment-debtor to raise the question of limitation does not prevent this Court from giving effect to the plea of limitation. It is apparent on the face of the record itself that the application for execution has been made more than 12 years after the passing of the decree. The execution is thus time barred and the decree-holder cannot seek assistance of the Court.

[9] The result is that the decision of the lower Court is correct and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 8 — Usufructuary mortgage — Order absolute for sale under old S. 93, T. P. Act, not executed within limitation — Effect — Possession of mortgagee, if adverse.

An order absolute for sale under the old S. 93, T. P. Act, if not executed within time limited by law, cannot operate as a decree for foreclosure. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, on the passing of an order absolute for sale, the ownership of the mortgagor is relieved of the encumbrance, that is to say, the right of the usufructuary mortgagee to remain in possession, which right is only given to secure the repayment of the loan comes to end. The mortgagor's title cannot be extinguished merely by the lapse of 3 years without execution of the decree though it can be extinguished by adverse possession for 12 years by a person not entitled to hold the property : 25 Mad, 244 (F. B.), Rel. on; Case law reviewed. [Paras 13 and 16]

In order to claim title by adverse possession, the mortgagee has to show (1) that the possession changed its nature from permissive possession to adverse possession or (2) that it has been proved by clear and unequivocal evidence that the mortgagee's possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title: 22 A. I. R. 1935 P. C. 53, Foll. [Para 26]

Where a usufructuary mortgagee continued in possession of the property even after obtaining an order absolute for sale in 1897, it was held that the possession of the mortgagee must be deemed to be permissive and not adverse to the mortgagor till the year 1918 when their Lordships of the Privy Council finally settled the law by their decision in 5 A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 34 by holding that the effect of the passing of an order absolute for sale was the immediate extinguishment of the security. Previous to that case the view had been that the security lasts till a sale actually takes place in execution of the order absolute for sale : Case law distinguished. [Paras 26, 27 and 30]

(b) Precedent—Value of—How to be applied.

A case is only authority for what it actually decides and it is not a legitimate method of applying a precedent to detach from the context, remarks in the judgment, not necessary for the decision of the case and to apply them to an entirely different set of circumstances. [Para 17]

(c) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 of 1934), S. 11 — Scope of enquiry.

The enquiry in proceedings under S. 11, is only directed to ascertain whether the property mentioned in the notice in the Gazette or any part of it is liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant. Where there is a finding that the title of landlords applicants continues it must be held that it is so liable and that is an end of the matter. The question whether there is any mortgage in existence will only arise at the stage of the enquiry under S. 14, of the Act. The question whether objectors have acquired mortgagee rights by adverse possession will be open to enquiry in proceedings under S. 14 but not under S. 11 of the Act. [Para 38]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 11 and 47 — Suit for redemption — Preliminary decree—Order absolute under S. 93, T. P. Act (prior to its repeal in 1908) — Order not executed within limitation — Application by mortgagor under S. 4, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act — Proceedings, if barred by S. 11 and 47, Civil P. C.

In 1897 in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage a preliminary decree for redemption on payment of a certain sum was passed. Thereafter the mortgagee applied for and obtained an order absolute for sale under S. 93, T. P. Act (as it stood prior to its repeal in 1908). The order absolute for sale remained unexecuted and the mortgagee continued to be in possession and continued to be recorded in revenue papers as mortgagee and the mortgagor as mortgagor. In 1936 the mortgagor presented an application under S. 4, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, asking for liquidation of debts. The mortgagee filed objections under S. 11 of that Act and pleaded that the proceedings were barred under Ss. 11 and 47, Civil P. C.

Held that if the proceedings were treated as a suit for redemption, then obviously S. 47, Civil P. C., had no application because it did not relate to the execution of any previous decree. Even if it was not treated as a suit for redemption S. 47 was irrelevant because what the landlords applicants claimed by those proceedings was an assertion of their title. In the redemption suit of 1897 that title was not in dispute at all and the decree did not relate to it. Moreover these being proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act even decreed claim must be proved. By the force of S. 18, and other sections of the Act even decrees can only be executed in the manner and to the extent prescribed in the Act. Quite apart therefore from the question of limitation, action under the Encumbered Estates Act in no way militated against the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C. 21 A.I.R. 1934 P. C. 205, Applied. [Para 41]

Held further that the proceedings were not barred by res judicata as the question whether the right to redeem was barred or not did not arise and was not decided in previous case. Moreover, in the present proceedings which arose under S. 11, Encumberred Estates Act, the question raised was of the title of the landlord applicant to the property in dispute. In the redemption case this question did not arise because in that case it was admitted that the title lay with the mortgagor. 21 A. I. R. 1934 P. C. 205, Foll. [Para 42]

B. K. Dhaon & Manoharlal Devedi—for Appellants.

Faiyaz Ali & Ali Hasan—for Respondents 1 and 2.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act. It is admitted that one Ghulam Abbas was the owner of a 4 annas 10 pies 6 kirants 2 jau share in village Kithori district Barabanki. On 3-3-1888, he mortgaged this share to Nand Kishore to secure a debt of Rs. 8,500. Under the terms of the mortgage deed (Ex. 9) the mortgagee was entitled to enter into possession of the property if the principal and interest was not paid within 3 years. A default occurred and, in 1891, Nand Kishore took possession of the property.

[2] Ghulam Abbas and Nand Kishore thereafter died and three of the five sons of Ghulam Abbas, namely, Muhammad Ibrahim, Muhammad Shafi and Muhammad Ilias sued Prag Narain and Ganga Sagar, the sons of Nand Kishore, then minors under the guardianship of their mother Mohan Dei, for redemption. At a subsequent stage, on the objection of the defendants, Muhammad Ismail and Muhammad Ishaq, the other two sons of Ghulam Abbas were also impleaded as defendants. On 18-12-1897, a preliminary decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 15,551-13-0 was passed. Thereafter the mortgagee's heirs applied for an order absolute for sale under S. 93, T. P. Act, (Ex. 1, the application wrongly mentions S. 89) and the order was passed for sale of the whole of the mortgaged property, Ex. 2. The money was to be paid into Court to satisfy the mortgage debt and the balance, if any, was to be paid to the heirs of the mortgagor.

[3] Execution of this decree was taken out but subsequently on 8-6-1900, Mt. Mohan Dei applied that for certain reasons she desired the application to be consigned to the records with liberty to apply again, Ex. A7. This prayer was granted and the execution proceedings terminated, vide Exs. A-8 and A-9. No further execution was taken out but the heirs of the mortgagee continued in possession of the mortgaged property and they all along continued to be entered in the revenue papers as mortgagees while the heirs of Ghulam Abbas continued to be recorded as mortgagors.

[4] In 1915 the village was partitioned at the instance of Janki Prasad Ex. A10. In this application both the heirs of Ghulam Abbas and those of Nand Kishore were impleaded, the former being shown as mortgagors and the latter as mortgagees. The partition took place with all these parties on the record and in the partition papers, including the khewat Ex. A14 the heirs of the mortgagor were entered as mortgagors and the heirs of the mortgagees as mortgagees. The original share of Ghulam Abbas was constituted into a separate mahal named after Prag Narain. This state of affairs has continued ever since.

[5] on 8-2-1936, Muhammad Ibrahim and Muhammad Shafi instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif Ramsanehighat, Barabanki, under S. 33, Agriculturists' Relief Act, claiming an account of the transaction (Ex. A18 is the plaint). Prag Narain appellant 1 resisted this suit on various grounds (Ex. A19) and it was dismissed on 29-10-1936, the date on which the landlords filed their application under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act, on the ground that the plaintiffs who represented the mortgagor were no more debtors as there is no recoverable debt subsisting and also on the ground that, since some of the representatives of the original mortgagor had applied under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act, no other proceedings could continue in respect of the same debt: vide Ex. 13. On appeal the District Judge of Barabanki upheld the decision of the Munsif but he decided the second only of the points mentioned above : vide Ex. A29. Thereafter a second appeal to this Court was dismissed on the ground that no second appeal lay: vide EX. A30,

[6] On 29-10-1936, Muhammad Ibrahim and Muhammad Shafi presented an application under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act, asking that action should be taken under that Act for liquidation of their debts. With their application they filed a list of debts and also gave particulars of their property. The only debt shown in the mortgage of 1888 by Ghulam Abbas to Nand Kishore, whose son and grandsons are shown as the sole creditors (lists A and E). The only property shown is a 7/20th share in superior proprietary mahal Prag Narain in village Kithori (see list C). The manner in which this share was arrived at is shown in the reply filed on 3-3-1938, by the landlords-applicants to the claim put forward by Prag Narain and his nephews and there is no dispute as to its extent.

[7] On 3-1-1938, Prag Narain, a son of Nand Kishore, and Onkar Nath and Somnath, the sons of Ganga Sagar, the second son of Nand Kishor, who had all been shown by the landlords-applicants as creditors, filed an objection under S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act. They pleaded the previous suit for redemption and the fact that an order absolute had been passed under S. 93, T. P. Act, in that suit. They then pleaded :

"That prior to the passing of the order under S. 93, T. P. Act, the heirs of the mortgagee were mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property. After the passing of the said order the objector No. 1 and the father of objector Nos. 2 and 3 remained in adverse and proprietary possession for more than 12 years as against the heirs and representatives of Ghulam Abbas and are in possession up to this time. Hence the objectors are full owners of the property mentioned in para. 1 and the applicants have no right of any sort in respect of the said property."

No other objection was taken. No other plea was taken either in the written or in the oral pleadings. The landlords applicants in their written reply alleged that the representatives of the mortgagee had always continued in possession on the basis of the mortgage of 1888 and the order absolute under S. 93, did not adversely affect the rights of the mortgagor's representatives; that the representatives of the mortgagee had behaved fraudulently in not executing the decree of 1899 and were estopped from setting up that decree; that owing to the non-execution of the decree, the legal rights of the parties continued to be exactly the same as they were before the decree; that the applicants were treated as having a subsisting right in the property at the partition of 1915-1920 and so the objectors could not deny the title of the landlords by reason of S. 233 (k), U. P. Land Revenue Act, that the objectors' possession was not adverse and that the landlords-applicants had become owners of the property in suit by adverse possession. In replication filed on 30-7-1938, the appellants traversed all the allegations of the landlords-applicants but raised no new plea. The Special Judge, 2nd grade, Barabanki, framed 5 issues of which the last related to relief and only the first two are material for the purposes of this appeal. They read as follows :

"1(a) Are the claimants the owners of the property in suit by virtue of S. 93, T. P. Act and have they become owners thereof by adverse possession as alleged? If so, is the same not liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in lieu of the applicants' debts as claimed? If so, to what effect?

(b) Are the claimants in possession of the property only as mortgagees as pleaded? Its effect"?

(2) Are the applicants still the owners of the property in question and have they also acquired title to the equity of redemption by adverse possession as pleaded in paras 13 and 19 of the written reply? Its effect?"

[8] On these issues the learned Special Judge found:

(1) That the order absolute under S. 93, T. P. Act did not have the effect of divesting the mortgagors of title and vesting it in the mortgagees (issue 1 (a)).

(2) That the mortgagee's heirs had not become owners of the property by adverse possession (issue 1(a)).

(3) That by reason of the fact that the mortgage of 1888 merged in the decree of 1899 the possession of the claimants can no longer be regarded as that of mortgagees (issue 1 (b)).

4. That the landlords-applicants are still owners of the property (issue 2).

5. That it is not necessary to decide whether the landlords-applicants have become owners by adverse possession.

He accordingly disallowed the objection. The claimants appealed. Their grounds of appeal indicated that they challenged the judgment of the Special Judge on the ground that they had become full owners "at the expiry of the statutory period after the decree under S. 93, T. P. Act"; that they had perfected their title by adverse possession; and that the respondents were not owners of the property since their rights, if any, had become extinguished.

[9] By his judgment, dated 7th November 1942, the learned District Judge of Barabanki held :

"(1) That the landlords-applicants were still owners of the mortgaged property.

(2) That the claimants had not completed their title as full owners by adverse possession.

(3) That, in spite of the merger of the mortgage in the decree, the claimants had perfected their rights as mortgagees by adverse possession."

[10] He accordingly dismissed the appeal making it clear that the landlords-applicants were still the owners of the property subject to the mortgagee rights of the claimants. The claimants have now come up to this Court in second appeal and their learned counsel contends:

(1) That the decree of 29th April 1899 put an end to the mortgagor's right to redeem and since this was the only right which he possessed in the mortgaged property he ceased to have any right in that property after the date of the decree.

(2) That, in any case, the mortgagee was no longer entitled to continue in possession of the mortgaged property after the date of the decree and that his possession thereafter was without title and adverse to the owner.

(3) That the present proceedings being in their essence for redemption of the mortgage, are barred by the rule of res judicata in view of the fact that this very matter has been the subject of a previous decision which adjudicated the rights of the parties in 1898 and 1899.

(4) That the matter raised in this case relates to the discharge of a decree and this cannot, by reason of S. 47, Civil P. C. be done by way of suit.

(5) That, at any rate, the District Judge was not justified in holding that the appellants had become mortgagees by adverse possession since the appellants had not claimed this."

At one time he also contended that the question in issue as to proprietary title had also been in issue in proceedings under the Agriculturists' Relief Act and that the finding given in those proceedings that the landlords-applicants were debtors was res judicata. On our pointing out to him that he had never raised this plea in either of the two lower Courts and that in any case, the suit under the Agriculturists' Relief Act had been dismissed as being incompetent, he withdrew this plea and only the four points stated above call for decision.

[11] On the first point the learned counsel for the appellant urges that if a decree for sale is not executed within the time limited by law for this purpose it operates virtually as a decree for foreclosure. This really means that a decree-holder can improve his position and acquire a title which he does not otherwise possess by failing to execute his decree. The learned counsel realising the weakness of such an argument contended that the true position was that the mortgagor himself was a decree-holder in a case to which old S. 92, T. P. Act applied and could execute that decree by getting the mortgaged property sold. He contends that it is not by reason of any default by the mortgagee that the mortgagor suffers but he suffers by reason of his own failure to execute the decree.

[12] This contention of the learned counsel finds support from some decisions of the Madras High Court: vide 36 Mad. 32,[1] A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 816[2] and 25 Mad. 244.[3] It is not, however, necessary for us to consider the correctness of this view which did not find favour with the Calcutta High Court: vide 21 Cal. 818[4] and 22 Cal. 931[5] because the point does not really arise.

[13] There is nothing in the wording of the unamended S. 93, or any other section of the Transfer of Property Act to lead to an inference that a decree for sale if not executed within the time allowed, operates as a decree for foreclosure. Indeed the language used clearly differentiates between sale and foreclosure and directs that in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, a decree for foreclosure is not to be passed. It is, however, contended that, because the unamended S. 93 provided that, on the passing of an order under that section, the right to redeem is extinguished the only right left to the mortgagor, in such an eventuality, is to get the property sold. If this is not done and limitation bars the execution of the decree, even this right goes and the mortgagor has no right at all left in the property. This contention ignores the provision that it is not only the right to redeem that is extinguished but also the security: that is to say, the mortgagor is transformed into a decree-holder and the only right which he has is to get his decree executed. The learned counsel conceded that in the case of a simple mortgage, the failure to execute the decree for sale results in depriving the mortgagee of all rights and in freeing the property from all encumbrances but he contends that, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee, being in possession must continue in possession. We cannot accede to this argument.

[14] Unlike the English law, the Indian law does not contemplate the absolute transfer of the property to the mortgagee in every form of mortgage. Under S. 58, T. P. Act, it is only an interest in specific immovable property that is transferred. The interest transferred may be more or less e. g., in the case of an "English mortgage" the whole property is transferred absolutely subject to a condition and similarly in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale: vide cls. (c) and (e) of S. 58. In the case of simple and usufructuary mortgages the proprietary title is not transferred: vide cls. (b) and (d) of S. 58. That is why old S. 93, T. P. Act makes a distinction and in the case of mortgages by conditional sale and "English mortgages", permits the passing of an order absolute for foreclosure. The effect of such an order is not to pass title that is already vested in the mortgagee—but to debar the mortgagor from enforcing the provisions of the deed giving him the right to get back the property. On the other hand, in the case of simple and usufructuary mortgages, in which title continues to remain with the mortgagor, something more is required to be done to deprive the mortgagor of his title and vest it in some one. That is why a decree for sale is passed, and it is only on a sale actually taking place that the title of the mortgagor ceases. Until the sale takes place the title remains in the mortgagor: if the property is sold it is his property that is sold and even after the passing of the order absolute for sale he has all the rights which the Code of Civil Procedure gives to a judgment-debtor to pay off the decre-

tral money and save the property from sale or get the sale set aside. If he had no title left in the property, obviously this would not be possible. Here we may usefully refer to some observations made in a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court. In 25 Mad. 244,[3] Benson J., in dealing with a case under old S. 89, T. P. Act, remarked at p. 267:

"Section 89 provided that when an order absolute for sale was passed the right to redeem was thereupon extinguished and the security was also extinguished, but (as pointed out by Mr. Macpherson, 'Law of Mortgage in British India,' Edn. 7, p. 697) until the sale was effected the mortgagor had the right as a debtor to discharge the decree-debt and thus obviate the necessity for a sale. In that case the property being freed from the incumbrance, reverted to the mortgagor in full ownership."

[15] Another learned Judge, Bhashyam Ayyangar J., at p. 281, also quotes at length from the same author in support of the same view. The following extract is very apposite the present discussion:

". . . . . As on the passing of an order absolute for sale, the security is extinguished the mortgagee's interest in the property must then also come to an end. The effect of this must, it is submitted, be that the entire ownership of the property reverts to the mortgagor, for after the mortgagee's interest in the property is extinguished there is nothing to limit the full ownership which is vested in the mortgagor. In the event, therefore, of the mortgagor paying off his debt after such an order as above suggested, no retransfer of the property by the judgment-creditor to the judgment-debtor would appear to be necessary inasmuch as the full ownership of the property reverted to the judgment-debtor when the order absolute for sale was made."

After giving the above quotation the learned Judge proceeds to express his own opinion in the following words:

". . . There is no need for a reconveyance by the mortgagee, inasmuch as, on the passing of an order absolute for sale under S. 89, the mortgage security was extinguished and the ownership reverted to the mortgagor by operation of law."

[16] Thus, on this view, which we consider to be the correct view, on the passing of the order absolute for sale on 1-6-1899 (Ex. 2), the ownership of the heirs of Ghulam Abbas was relieved of the encumbrance; that is to say the right of Prag Narain and his father to remain in possession, which right was only given to secure the repayment of the loan, came to end. This right could not be extinguished merely by the lapse of three years without execution of the decree though it could be extinguished by adverse possession for 12 years by a person not entitled to hold the property.

[17] In order to support his contention on this point, the learned counsel for the appellant sought to rely upon remarks made in the course of the judgment in some cases. It is, however, a well-established principle that a case is only authority for what it actually decides and it is not a legitimate method of applying a precedent to detach from the context, remarks in the judgment, not necessary for the decision of the case and to apply them to an entirely different set of circumstances. A consideration of the cases upon which the learned counsel relied will show that none of them are applicable to the facts of the present case.

[18] In 7 Bom. 467[6] the learned Judges followed some decisions of the Allahabad High Court on the application of the rule of res judicata. In the judgment of Kemball, J., the following remarks occur:

"By reason of the default in payment of the money declared to be due within the time prescribed by law for the execution of decrees (no time having been fixed in the decree), the order for redemption must be taken to have operated as a judgment of foreclosure."

This was a case to which the Transfer of Property Act had no application and the judgment of the Court does not indicate what the result of non-payment by the mortgagor was to be, i. e., whether it was to be sale or foreclosure. If the latter, no second decree or order being at that time required in the case, failure to pay the money within the time fixed would quite rightly result in foreclosure. We have no reason to suppose in view of the remarks of the learned Judge that that was not so. Moreover in that case the decision was based on the application of the rule of res judicata to the second suit.

[19] In 13 Bom. 567[7] the learned Judges followed 7 Bom. 467.[6] That was also not a case under the Transfer of Property Act. Further the quotation from the judgment of the Assistant Judge given at p. 568 indicates that that was a case in which direction for foreclosure should have followed the default clause. In the course of his judgment Birdwood J. remarked:

"The decree made in the defendants' suit was practically a foreclosure decree, if not executed in three years and therfore, effectually determined the rights under the mortgage both of the mortgagee and the mortgagors."

Thus the Court was only interpreting the decree in a case in which foreclosure should have followed default in payment of the money fixed for redemption.

[20] The decision in A. I. R. 1945 Bom. 307[8] proceeded on an interpretation of the decree which had been passed on the basis of a compromise and was governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and not under the Transfer of Property Act—a fact to which the learned Judges particularly refer.

[21] In 43 Bom. 703[9] the decree expressly provided that if the mortgagor failed to pay the money "his right to redeem shall be for ever barred." It was held that failure to redeem the property by payment of the money due under the decree within the time allowed prevented a second suit being filed on the ground that the non-execution of the decree resulted in foreclosure. The learned Judges in this case based their decision on the express language of the decree and they clearly stated that the case was not governed by the Transfer of Property Act.

[22] Thus none of these cases can support the appellants' contention that the non-execution of a decree for sale of the mortgaged property if not executed within time, operates as a decree for foreclosure. On the other hand, in 11 ALL. 386,[10] 21 ALL. 251,[11] 24 ALL. 44[13] and 44 ALL. 730[13] the non-execution of a decree for redemption was held not to have the effect of foreclosure. These cases are also not applicable to the present case because in all of them the decree directed that, on the failure of the mortgagor to pay the money the suit was to be considered dismissed or the decree was to be treated as non-existent.

[23] The result is that the failure to execute the decree of 18-12 1897, and the order absolute of 1-6-1899, within the time allowed did not divest the mortgagor of his title to the property mortgaged.

[24] This brings us to a consideration of the question of adverse possession. At the outset we must state that the plea of limitation, as distinct from adverse possession was not raised at any stage of the case. It is, therefore, not necessary for us to consider whether Art. 143 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act applies or Art. 144 : it is only pleaded that the mortgagee's heirs have acquired title to the property by adverse possession.

[25] There are numerous authorities dealing with what requires to be proved to establish adverse possession and it is not necessary for us to consider them all. We may, however, usefully refer to a comparatively recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 1935 O. W. N. 178.[14] In that case Wazir Ali the taluqdar whose name came subsequently to be entered in the lists prepared under S. 8, Oudh Estates Act of 1869 died in 1863 leaving an infant son, Hashmat Ali and two brothers Amir Ali and Samsam Ali. Navazish Ali first cousin of Wazir Ali, however, obtained possession of the property and was entered in the revenue records as owner. This, their Lordships found, was due to a family custom by which the senior member of the family was recorded as owner and managed the property on behalf of the whole family. During the course of Nawazish Ali's possession, while Hashmat Ali was still alive the operations of the first regular settlement took place and decrees by the settlement Courts were passed in favour of Nawazish Ali. Hashmat Ali died issueless in 1882 and, on his death, his uncle and next heir Samsam Ali entered into joint possession with Nawazish Ali. This state of affairs continued till 1892 when Nawazish Ali died and Samsam Ali came to be recorded in the revenue records as sole owner. In the course of mutation proceedings Muzaffar Ali the only son of Nawazish Ali stated that according to the family custom, Samsam Ali as the senior member of the family was entitled to succeed. On Samsam Ali's death in 1901, his son Asghar Ali succeeded and both he and Muzaffar Ali made the same statement as to family custom as had been made by the latter on the death of his father. In order to determine whether the estate was governed by the Oudh Estates Act or not the Courts had to consider whether, Muzaffar Ali had become owner by adverse possession or not. All the Courts held that he had not. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say, at p. 183 of the report :

"There can be little doubt that he obtained possession with the consent of all the persons interested in the estate, and his possession was at its inception, merely permissive. It is not suggested that there was any subsequent change which converted it into adverse possession. The principle of law is firmly established that a person who bases his title on adverse possession must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title to the property claimed. This onus the appellants have failed to discharge. Neither the entry of Nawazish Ali's name in the revenue records as the owner of the taluqa nor his possession thereof could in the circumstances of the case, affect the title of the person or persons who had the right to inherit it."

[26] If the case is judged, as it must be judged, in accordance with the above principle the appellants had to prove

"(1) that the possession changed its nature from permissive possession to adverse possession or

(2) that it has been proved by clear and unequivocal evidence that the mortgagee's possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title."

[27] Before considering the evidence bearing on the question of adverse possession it will be as well to state the position as it must have appeared to the parties in 1899, when the order absolute was passed. At that time Prag Narain and Ganga Sagar were in possession of the property claiming title as mortgagees from the respondents, that is to say, possession was permissive and it was to secure the repayment of the loan advanced and would in ordinary course, continue until the debt was repaid. The effect, however, of the passing of the order absolute under unamended S. 93, T. P. Act, was the immediate extinguishment of the security. This position only came to be understood in 1918 when their Lordships of the Judicial Committee construed the words used in the statute in this sense in 45 I. A. 130=A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 34.[15] Previous to that case the view had been that the security lasts till a sale actually takes place in execution of the order absolute or of the decree under S. 92.

[28] In 31 Cal. 863[16] in which the question of the construction of the identical words contained in unamended S. 89, T. P. Act, was involved, the learned Chief Justice at p. 868 said :

"The Legislature can scarcely have intended that the security was to be extinguished on the mere making of the order for sale, and before the mortgagee had been paid out of the proceeds of sale. The mortgagee continues to be the owner of the property subject to the payment of the debt, until the sale is completed, and then the ownership passes to the auction-purchaser."

The other learned Judges expressed their agreement with this view. The High Courts of Allahabad and Madras also accepted this view: vide 28 ALL. 778[17] and 29 Mad. 37[18] and in 48 I. A. 465 = A. I. R 1922 P. C. 11[19] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee themselves felt the force of the difficulties pointed out in 29 Mad. 37[18] in accepting the construction adopted in A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 34.[15]

[29] Even as late as 1926, one of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court considered that the decision of the Judicial Committee in A.I.R. 1922 P. C. 11[19] doubted the correctness of the decision in A.I.R. 1918 P. C. 34[15] and that, therefore, the view which had prevailed before 5 A I.R. 1918 P. C. 34[15] should be accepted. The other learned Judge did not accept this view and we also think that the law laid down in A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 34[15] still stands, but the judgment of the learned Judge shows the great measure of doubt that has existed as to the construction of the words of unamended Ss. 89 and 93, T. P. Act, directing that both the right to redeem and the mortgage security shall be extinguished on the passing of any order under those sections.

[30] A consideration of the above authorities shows that it cannot be assumed that in 1899, the mortgagor and mortgagee were aware that the security had come to an end and that the mortgagor was entitled to get back the property. Rather it may reasonably be inferred that the passing of the order absolute for sale, as distinguished from an order for foreclosure, left the position unaltered and that the mortgagor's successors continued in possession as before, i. e. that, even after the passing of the order absolute they were in permissive possession under the mortgage. A consideration of the evidence available in the present case will show that this is in fact the true position and that both the parties to the mortgage accepted it. (After conisdering the evidence their Lordships proceeded.)

[31] On this evidence it must be held that neither of the two alternatives which it was necessary for the appellants to make out in order to establish a case of adverse possession has been made out. The learned counsel for the appellants referred to certain cases for the proposition that possession of a mortgagee entering into possession without title is adverse. These decisions are not applicable to the present case because here the mortgagee did not enter into possession without title but the only question is whether the nature of his possession changed. This is a question which depends upon the evidence and we have already shown that the evidence established that it did not change. A.I.R. 1920 ALL. 92,[20] A. I. R. 1935 ALL. 174[21] A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 165,[22] A.I.R. 1919 P. C. 62[23] and 7 O. L. J. 282[24] have no bearing on the question before us. In A. I. R. 1931 Oudh 69[25] the mortgagees entered into possession of the property after a decree for sale under S. 88, T. P. Act, had been passed It was held that as the mortgagee was not entitled to possession either under the terms of the mortgage or of the decree, his possession was adverse. In that case the entering into possession was without any title at all and was consequently from its inception adverse.

[32] In A. I. R. 1926 ALL. 62[26] the whole of the money due under mortgage had been paid off and thus the debt itself had been extinguished. Further the person who was in possession of the property was not the heir of the original mortgagee but his widow who had no title to succeed in the presence of his sons. In these circumstances it was held that the widow's possession, not being based on any title was adverse. The position here is very greatly different.

[33] In A. I. R. 1914 ALL. 242[27] the mortgagee had issued a notice of foreclosure under S. 8 Bengal Regulation, 17 of 1806. Thereupon the money was deposited but the mortgagee refused to accept it and sued for foreclosure and possession of the property since, he alleged that possession over only a part had been delivered. The Court found that the money deposited was sufficient for redemption and dismissed the suit for foreclosure and possession. The mortgagee, however, continued in possession and about 25 years later the mortgagor sued to recover possession of the property. It was held that a decree of Court having declared that the mortgage had been redeemed, the continued possession by the mortgagee was not of mortgagee rights but as indicated by his claim to foreclose and recover possession, of proprietary rights and was in the circumstances of the case, adverse. The learned Judges distinguished those cases in which there was only a decree for sale from those in which the decree declared the mortgage either redeemed or otherwise terminated. The facts in the present case indicate an entirely different state of affairs : the mortgagee never signified his intention to foreclose or recover proprietary possession which makes a very great difference as to the nature of his possession. The mortgagee's acts in the case under consideration clearly indicated that he had changed the nature of his position.

[34] In A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 407[28] the mortgage itself was invalid and in a proceeding relating to it the mortgagee asserted that it was invalid and set up a different title in himself. The Court declared the mortgage to be ineffective and it followed that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee had never existed. It was in these circumstances that the continued possession of the mortgagee after the date of the decree was held to be adverse.

[35] In 8 O. C. 33[29] a mortgagee obtained a decree under unamended S. 86, T. P. Act. Time was allowed up to 20-1-1888, for payment of the mortgage money. The money was not paid and an extension for four months was granted. The mortgagee, however, stipulated that he should be put into possession of the mortgaged property and promised to return it on payment being made. In that case the mortgagee was not entitled to possession under the terms of the mortgage or of the decree and consequently he never entered into mortgagee possession at all and it was in these circumstances that his possession was held to be adverse.

[36] In A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 13[30] a learned Judge of this Court held that "the question whether possession of a mortgagee after the mortgage debt has been satisfied is adverse to the mortgagor or not is always a question of animus or intention."

In that case the mortgagor paid off the mortgage money and the deed of mortgage was returned to him. The Court held that the intention was clearly to put an end to the mortgage and the continued possession of the mortgagee was not under the mortgage. In the present case we have held that the intention of the parties was that mortgagee possession shall continue as before and the mortgage debt still remained to be paid.

[36] In A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 616[31] it was definitely held that the nature of possession had changed by reason of various transfers and that possession was without any title and so adverse.

[37] Thus none of these cases supports the proposition which the learned counsel for the appellants placed before us for our acceptance. We must, therefore, hold that the appellants have not perfected their proprietary title in the property in suit by adverse possession. The property thus remains liable for attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the landlord applicant and the Courts below are quite right in having so held. The lower appellate Court has, however, proceeded further and has held that, though the claimants have failed to prove that they have become proprietors by adverse possession, it has nevertheless been established that they have become mortgagees by adverse possession. The respondents against whom this finding appears to have been given have not challenged it either by filing an appeal for a cross-objection but the learned counsel for the appellant himself contends that the finding is uncalled for at this stage. We agree with this contention.

[38] The enquiry in proceedings under S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act, is only directed to ascertain whether the property mentioned in the notice in the Gazette or any part of it is liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of debts of the applicant. On the finding that the title of the landlords applicants continues it must be held that it is so liable and that is an end of the matter. The question whether there is any mortgage in existence will only arise at the stage of the enquiry under S. 14 of the Act. The finding that the appellants have acquired mortgagee rights by adverse possession must, therefore, be set aside and the question will be open to enquiry in proceedings under S. 14 of the Act.

[39] On the question of res judicata and the bar of S. 47, Civil P. C., there has been considerable divergence of opinion between various High Courts and two of them, Allahabad and Madras, have changed their opinion on the first question. The learned counsel for the parties have taken us at considerable length through a large number of decisions of the various High Courts and we have taken time to consider them. In view of the very great divergence of opinion, it would have been necessary for us to consider the matter afresh but we are relieved of the necessity of doing so because, though in their earliest decision in 10 Bom. 461[32] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee assumed, without deciding on the strength of the then Madras view, vide 7 Mad. 423,[33] that the rule of res judicata did not bar the second suit, in their latest pronouncement they have expounded the law in very clear terms. In 61 I. A. 362 = A. I. R. 1934 P. C. 205,[34] a decree was passed on 26-9-1896 on the basis of a mortgage by conditional sale. Under it the plaintiff (the mortgagor) was entitled to possession by redemption on payment of Rs. 4208-3-0 by 15-11-1896 but if he made default the suit was to stand dismissed. The money ordered to be paid was not paid and the mortgagee who was in possession, continued in possession. Subsequently, the heirs of the mortgagor instituted a second suit for redemption alleging that the mortgage had been paid off out of the profit and that they were entitled to possession of the property. The suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 5243 13-0 to the mortgagees. On appeal the High Court upheld the decree but altered the amount payable. The successors of the mortgagees took the case up in appeal to His Majesty-in-Council and before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee it was contended :

"(1) That the suit, though in form a redemption suit, was in reality an application to enforce the old decree of 25-9-1896, that such a suit could not be maintained and that execution of the old decree was barred by limitation;

(2) that the decision in the former suit operated as res judicata and that therefore S. 11, Civil P. C. prohibited the Courts from trying the present suit; and

(3) that no payment having been made under the old decree the former suit stood dismissed on 15th November 1896 with the result that the mortgagor's right to redeem became extinguished under S. 60, T. P. Act, 1882."

[40] In deciding these three points their Lordships say :

"In regard to the first point it can only arise for consideration if the appellants fail to establish their third point and their Lordships feel a difficulty in appreciating how it could then prevail; because if a second suit for redemption is, in the circumstances of the present case, properly maintainable, then the simple answer to the first point is that the present suit is a redemption suit and is not an application to enforce the old decree. In regard to the second point their Lordships are of opinion that no relevant question of res judicata here arises. The issues decided in former suit were (1) whether the mortgagors were then entitled to redeem; and (2) the amount then to be paid if redemption then took place. The issues in the present suit are (1) whether the right to redeem now exists, and (2) the amount now to be paid if redemption now takes place. If it could be said that the old decree involved a decision that the mortgagor's right to redeem was extinguished, that matter would indeed be res judicata, but this very question of the meaning and effect of the old decree arises for consideration of the third point."

Their Lordships then proceed to a consideration of the third point.

[41] This decision of their Lordships is fully applicable to the facts of the present case and clearly negatives the arguments of the appellants' learned counsel on both the points. If this is treated as a suit for redemption as the appellants contend, then obviously S. 47, Civil P. C., has no application because it does not relate to the execution of any previous decree. Even if it is not treated as a suit for redemption, S. 47 is irrelevant because what the landlords applicants claim by those proceedings is an assertion of their title. In the litigation of 1898 that title was not in dispute at all and the decree did not relate to it. Further it is to be noticed that these are proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act and even decreed claim must be proved. By the force of S. 18, and other sections of the Act even decrees can only be executed in the manner and to the extent prescribed in the Act. Quite apart therefore from the question of limitation action under the Encumbered Estates Act in no way militates against the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C.

[42] On the question of res judicata also the decision of their Lordships mentioned above is fully applicable. As pointed out by their Lordships the question whether the right to redeem is barred or not did not arise and was not decided in previous case. Moreover in the present proceedings which arise under S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act, the question raised is of the title of the landlord applicant to the property in dispute. In the redemption case this question did not arise because in that case it was admitted that the title lay with the mortgagor. This is an additional ground for holding that these proceedings ars not barred by the rule of res judicata.

[43] The result is that the decision of the learned District Judge of Barabanki, except in so far as it varied the decision of the Special Judge, must be maintained. On the question of acquisition of mortgagee rights by adverse possession the decision is set aside and the matter is left open for enquiry at the proper stage. With this modification the appeal is dismissed. The appellants will pay the costs of respondents in this appeal and the order of the District Judge as to costs will stand. The stay order dated 18-2-1944 is vacated.

Order.—One Gur Sahai filed a complaint under S. 452, Penal Code, against the applicants Debi Dayal and his son Ram Chandra and four other persons alleging that on 2nd April 1946, between 4 and 5 P. M. in the absence of the complainant these persons broke open the lock of a temple known as Ramshala in village Kanderpur, District Unao of which he was in possession and took possession. The charge was denied. The two applicants alone were convicted by a second class Magistrate under S. 448, Penal Code, and the trial Court also ordered delivery of possession to the complainant Gur Sahai. The applicants went up in appeal, but their appeal was dismissed. Then they went up in revision to the learned Sessions Judge, Unao and among other things challenged the propriety of the order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., regarding delivery of possession. The learned Sessions Judge quoted the evidence of P. W. 5 Raj Kishore and came to the conclusion that from his evidence it appeared that there was a show of force in taking possession and in the circumstances he refused to interfere with the order under S. 522, Criminal P. C.

[2] The only point now urged before this Court is that the order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., was illegal as the dispossession of the complainant was not accompanied by use of criminal force or by show of force. There cannot be the least doubt that this contention is correct. P. W. 5 Raj Kishore, on whose evidence the learned Sessions Judge relied is to the following effect:

"There is a Ramshala in Kanderpur. Gur Sahai is Pujari. He is also the manager of the property which appertains to it. Five or six months ago, at about 4 P. M. I saw from my shivala, which is also close by, accused Nos. 1 and 2 breaking open the lock of Ramshala. The other accused were also standing there. After breaking open the lock all of them went in. I asked them why they were breaking open the lock and they replied that they would perform worship, take possession of it and would manage it. I had never seen them performing the worship or managing the property."

It will be noticed that there is not a word in this evidence of the use of any criminal force or show of force to any person and it is the use of force or show of force against a person which entitles the Magistrate or Court to pass an order regarding delivery of possession under S. 522, Criminal P. C. Raj Kishore never said that he asked the applicants not to go there. He simply asked them what they were doing. It has been held in A. I. R. 1934 Oudh 185[1] that where there was no occasion for the use of any force or show of force on the part of the accused when they took possession of the property, as the complainant was absent and no one on behalf of the complainant appeared to prevent the accused from committing the offences of which they had been convicted, the order restoring possession to complainant could not be passed under S. 522.

[3] This is the view which has been adopted by practically all the High Courts now. The learned counsel for the opposite party tried to rely on A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 839[2] wherein it was held that:

"When an accused takes possession of a house by breaking the lock in the absence of a person in possession of the house he uses criminal force to the lock which he breaks, criminal because it involves the crime of mischief and an order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., is therefore competent."

This has been expressly overruled by a Bench of the same High Court in A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 460[3] and it has been held that:

"The only force that is contemplated by S. 522, is force as applied to a human body—the use of force as maintained in Ss. 349 and 350, Penal Code. Hence where the complainant was dispossessed of his house in his absence no criminal force can be said to have been used to any person. No order can therefore be made under S. 522."

[4] The order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., is in these circumstances illegal and must be set aside. Accordingly the order directing delivery of possession to Gur Sahai is set aside and if possession has been delivered to him under this illegal order the possession shall be restored to the applicants. It is open to Gur Sahai to take proper legal steps to recover possession of the property if he is so advised.

Basdeo Gir — Defendant — Appellant v. Jugraj Prasad and another — Plaintiffs— Respondents.

First Appeal No. 124 of 1942, Decided on 25-2-1948, from decree of Civil Judge, Sitapur, D/- 30-9-1942.

(a) Grant — Ancient grant — Dedication — Evidence — Actings or statements of grantee or his successor and treatment on administrative records may be considered.

The question was whether a certain property was part of the endowment for the upkeep of a temple. The temple being an ancient one and its origin lost in antiquity, there was no evidence to show whether it had any endowment attached to it when it was founded:

Held that the actings or statements of the grantee or his successor might be relevantly taken into account as to their interpretation of the original grant; while the method in which the property had been treated on the administrative records may also throw light on the same problem. These things are not conclusive, but are circumstances worthy of consideration: 11 A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 109, Foll. [Para 13]

(b) Wajib-ul-arz — Tradition recorded in—Evidentiary value.

In the absence of any defects of anachronism and more reliable evidence to the contrary, the general accuracy of the tradition recorded in a wajib-ul-arz of a village must be accepted: 7 A. I. R. 1920 Oudh 258, Foll; 12 O. C. 236 and 32 I. A. 113 (P. C.), Ref. [Para 15]

Further, even if the tradition set out in the wajib-ul-arz is not strictly accurate, it affords valuable proof of what the dictators of the wajib-ul-arz conceived the nature of the property to be : that is to say, it affords valuable proof of how the property was treated by all concerned. [Para 16]

(c) Hindu law — Religious endowment—Dedication — Evidence — Property in possession of lay holder and subject to ordinary law of inheritance—Fact that income of property was devoted to upkeep of temple does not prove dedication.

Where property is found in the possession of a lay holder and has been subject to the ordinary law of inheritance, transfer and bequest, the mere fact that a part, or even the whole, of the income has been devoted to the upkeep of a religious institution does not lead to the conclusion that the property was dedicated for the upkeep of that institution : Case law discussed. [Para 24]

(d) Hindu law — Religious endowment—Dedication—Evidence—Mere fact that property descended from guru to chela for several generations is not sufficient to prove dedication.

Under the Hindu law, even the undedicated property in the possession of an ascetic, who has severed himself from the world, does not descend to his blood relations but to his spirtual relations, his disciples, his preceptors and so on. Thus, if nothing else were proved than that property had come into the possession of an ascetic by descent from his gurus for several generations, this would be quite inconclusive to determine the nature of the property, i. e. whether it was the personal property of the ascetic or was endowed property appertaining to the institution over which he presided. [Para 26]

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 1 — Plaintiffs cannot be permitted to depart from their pleadings and raise a new question of fact in appeal. [Para 28]

Annotation : ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 1, N. 12.

(f) Hindu law — Religious endowment — Math or Asthan — Requirements of, stated.

An asthan commonly known in Northern India as a math, is an institution of a monastic nature. It is established for the service of a particular cult, the instruction in its tenets, and the observance of its rites. The followers of the cult and disciples in the institution are known as chelas; the chelas are of two classes — celibate and non-celibate. The mahant must, by the custom of the math, be a bairagi or religious chela. The mahant is the head of the institution. He sits upon the gaddi; he initiates candidates into the mysteries of the cult; he superintends the worship of the idol and the accustomed spritual rites; he manages the property of the institution; he administers its affairs; and the whole assets are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself. Upon his death or abdication he is succeeded by one of the bairagi chelas: 3 A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 256, Foll. [Para 29]

Even if the mahant for the time being neglected his duties in giving instruction to his chelas it would not mean that the institution which fulfils all the other requirements of a math is not a math. [Para 30]

(g) Hindu law — Religious endowment—Mahant — Property granted to individual who was head of math, held not personal property of mahant.

Held that village Gayabar which formed part of the property granted as muafi to an individual who was head of a math, was part of the endowed property and was not the personal property of the Mahant: 14 A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 113, Foll; 5 A. I. R 1918 Oudh 345 and 8 A. I. R. 1921 P. C. 126, Ref.; 11 A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 109 Disting. [Paras 33, 36]

(h) Hindu Law—Religious institution — Mahant — Powers of — Alienation of endowment property without legal necessity is not binding on endowment.

The manager of an endowment can alienate or charge it in the same manner and to the same extent as the manager holding on behalf of an infant heir: 2 Cal. 341 (P. C.), Foll. [Para 36]

Where there is no legal necessity to justify the mortgage of the endowed property, the mortgage is not binding on the trust estate. [Para 37]

(i) T. P. Act (1882), S. 41—"Ostensible owner" — Religious endowment — Mahant is not ostensible owner of math property—S. 41 does not apply.

Section 41 only applies to cases in which a person is the ostensible owner "with the consent, express or implied, of the persons interested in immovable property." In the case of a mortgage of a religious endowment by a Mahant the "person interested" is the deity or institution on whose behalf the "ostensible owner" was in possession as manager. The so-called ostensible owner is entitled to be in such possession and to exercise the powers of a Mahant, which includes the power of alienating it for legal necessity, over the property. The fact, therefore, that he is allowed to be in possession and to deal with it as Mahant will not constitute him as an "ostensible owner" within the meaning of S. 41 nor can it be said that the deity or the institution, which cannot express itself except through him, allowed him, either expressly or impliedly, to hold himself out to be the owner. Thus S. 41, T. P. Act has no application to such a case. [Para 38]

Judgment. — In the town of Misrikh, in district Sitapur, on the banks of a sacred tank, in which pilgrims, who visit the locality on the occasion of the Parikarma, bathe, there stands an ancient temple ascribed by tradition, to one Raja Dudhich, a Rishi of great repute. In this temple an idol, known as Dudhich Nathji, is installed and there is no serious controversy about the fact that there is also a Mahanti Gaddi in existence, the Mahant of which is charged with the administration of the temple.

[2] On 30-6-1925, the then Mahant Bijai Gir, mortgaged a village Gayabar, to Mahraj Bal Krishan, to secure a loan of Rs. 6000 which he had taken. The mortgage was for a period of 10 years and was without possession. Interest at 12 per cent. per annum, compoundable yearly was stipulated. The mortgagor described the property as his zemindari haquiat, which he owned and possessed and it was stated that the money was required "to meet the expenses of Naga Sadhus etc."

[3] Mahraj Bal Krishan died in 1927 and the respondents succeeded to his mortgagee rights. Mahant Bijai Gir died in November 1935, after the mortgage money had fallen due, and Mahant Basdeo Gir, appellant, succeeded him.

[4] On 2-7-1941, the respondents commenced the suit out of which this appeal arises, for recovery of Rs. 13,500 on the foot of the mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property. It was stated that a larger sum was due but the claim was confined to Rs. 13,500. It was also stated in the plaint that village Gayabar was the personal property of Bijai Gir, but that, even if it belonged to an endowment, the money was borrowed for a legal necessity and created a valid charge.

[5] The defendant did not admit the mortgage in his written statement but later admitted the genuineness of the document and no issue was framed on this point. He also pleaded that village Gayabar, along with other villages had, from very ancient times, stood endowed for the expenses of the temple and the Sadhus and Sanyasis visiting it, and that, consequently, Bijai Gir had no authority to charge it with the debt in question which was not incurred for legal necessity but for immoral purposes.

[6] The plaintiffs filed a replication giving detailed reasons for their case that Gayabar was the personal property of the Mahant and did not belong to any endowment. They also developed their case as to legal necessity by adding to the original object mentioned in the deed the necessity for extensive repairs to the buildings involving an expenditure of Rs. 3000. It was also claimed that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of S. 41, T. P. Act, since he had taken the mortgage from an ostensible owner. Finally it was pleaded that Mahant Bijai Gir owned property which he had himself acquired and that, in any case, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover this money from that property.

[7] Upon these pleadings the trial Court framed the following issues :

"(1) Whether the property is waqf property ? (2) If so, was the money advanced for legal necessity ? (3) To what amount is the plaintiff entitled ? (4) To what relief is the plaintiff entitled ? (5) Whether Mahant Bijai Gir was the ostensible owner of the property ? If so, its effect ?

[8] It will be seen that no issue was framed on the point raised in the replication that, in any case, a decree should be passed executable against the personal property of Mahant Bijai Gir because the right of the plaintiffs to obtain such a decree was not disputed in the written statement.

[9] The parties adduced a considerable amount of evidence, both oral and documentary, and the learned Civil Judge, on a consideration of this evidence, found : (1) That village Gayabar was the personal property of the Mahant and was not part of any endowment. (2) That no legal necessity for the loan was established. (3) That a sum of more than Rs. 13,500 was due and a decree for that sum should be passed.

[10] In view of his decision that Mahant Bijai Gir was the owner of village Gayabar the learned Civil Judge did not feel himself called upon to decide whether the plaintiffs were entitled to the benefit of S. 41, T. P. Act.

[11] The suit was accordingly decreed for recovery of Rs. 13,500 by sale of village Gayabar. The defendant, being dissatisfied with this decision, has come up in appeal and, in this Court, his learned Advocate has contended that the evidence on the record substantiates his plea that village Gayabar is not the personal property of the Mahant but is part of an endowment for the upkeep of the temple of Dudhich Nath. On the other hand, the respondents' learned counsel has not only sought to support the finding of the trial Court that village Gayabar belonged to Mahant Bijai Gir personally but has also urged that legal necessity for the loan is made out.

[12] The first point which we proceed to consider is whether Gayabar is endowed property or is the personal property of the Mahant for the time being.

[13] As we have already stated the temple is an ancient one and its origin is lost in antiquity. There is thus no evidence to show whether it had any endowment attached to it when it was founded. Further no document of title, earlier than the annexation of Avadh by the British is forthcoming, although EX. A-46 shows that, according to the statement of the Kanoongo, a "sanad" from the Emperors of Delhi did exist and was filed at the time of the first summary settlement after the annexation of Avadh. The "sanad" together with most of the papers relating to the first summary settlement, seem to have been destroyed during the troubles of 1856-57, and it was not available even at the time of the first regular settlement. In the present case, therefore,

"the actings or statements of the grantee or his successor may be relevantly taken into account as to their interpretation of the original grant; while the method in which the property has been treated on the administrative records may also throw light on the same problem. These things are not conclusive, but are circumstances worthy of consideration: vide 51 I. A. 192.[1]

[14] The first document relating to village Gayabar, which we have on the record, is the decree passed by the officer engaged in making the first regular settlement of the Province. This is Ex. 3, and is a decree for proprietary rights in favour of Mahant Ganesh Gir, the predecessor of Mahant Bijai Gir, and his co-sharers. The decree was so framed in pursuance of the orders contained in Circular NO. 46 of 1864 dated 29th September 1864 (see Bannerji's Settlement circulars, p. 154), and it indicates that the decree was not intended to confer a new title upon Mahant Ganesh Gir but that all rights which had existed before the annexation and which had been confiscated by Lord Canning's proclamation were restored. Words, therefore, which seemingly confer a absolute proprietary right on Mahant Ganesh Gir, would not terminate the rights of any other person or institution which had any right in the property before the annexation. We have then to determine what was the nature of village Gayabar before the annexation.

[15] The principal evidence on the question whether Gayabar was a part of an endowment or not is furnished by EX. A-1 and EX. A-2. Exhibit A-1 is a pedigree filed, as was then the practice, to assist in the preparation of the khewat of village Gayabar. It also contains important statements by the mahant and the various disciples of the preceding mahants then in existence, as to the manner in which the income of the village was being spent. Exhibit A-2 is the wajib-ul-arz of village Gayabar. Paragraph 1 of this wajib-ul-arz gives a short history of the village. It is true that this is nothing but tradition, yet "in the absence of any defects of anachronism and more reliable evidence to the contrary, the general accuracy of the tradition must be accepted": vide 23 O. C. 303[2] at p. 307. See also 12 O. C. 236.[3] In 32 I. A. 113,[4] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee even relied upon a tradition recorded in a wajib-ul-arz about an ancient adoption as furnishing evidence of the adoption. Thus the history contained in the wajib-ul-arz provides valuable evidence in this case.

[16] Further, even if the tradition set out in the wajib-ul-arz is not strictly accurate, it affords valuable proof of what the dictators of the wajib-ul-arz conceived the nature of the property to be: that is to say it affords valuable proof of how the property was treated by all concerned.

[17] Before, however, proceeding to consider the evidence, it is necessary for us to review the numerous authorities that have been placed before us by the learned advocates for both the parties to assist us in arriving at a correct conclusion as to whether village Gayabar is endowed property or not. Of course the facts of none of the cases are identical with those of the present case but, in so far as certain principles are enunciated in them, they are of great assistance.

[18] The first principle, for which the learned counsel for the respondents contended, is that, if a person in possession of particular property utilises its profits towards the upkeep of a mosque, or temple or shrine, that does not by itself constitute the property wakf property. In support of this proposition he relied upon 2 Cal. 341,[5] 16 O. C. 76,[6] 2 O. L. J. 259[7] and the unreported decision of this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 114 of 1937.[8]

[19] In 2 Cal. 341,[5] a document endowing the property was set up but this was not accepted and the only proof of endowment was that the rents and profits of a mahal, which was ancestral family property, had been devoted to the upkeep of the idol. The family owned other properties also and there were other deities which were maintained. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say that the evidence was vague and indefinite and could not be held to be sufficient to discharge the burden which rested upon the person setting up the endowment. In coming to this conclusion their Lordships relied upon, (a) the absence of any books of account to show that the rents of the mahal were separately collected and kept merely to be applied to the worship of the idol; and (b) proof of the fact that the mahal was dealt with as property belonging to the family and was the subject of inheritance by various members of the family in the same way as the rest of the property and the person in possession did not object to a partition on the ground that it was endowed property and as such not divisible.

[20] Their Lordships then say, at p. 350:

"Therefore, there is not only weakness of proof on the part of the plaintiff, but a very strong presumption, arising from the conduct of the parties in the suit in question, that this was not debutter property. . . . "

[21] In 16 O. C. 76,[6] the learned Judicial Commissioners followed the decision in 2 Cal. 341,[5] and held that proof of the fact that income of certain property was spent upon the upkeep of a mosque was not by itself sufficient to prove that property was endowed property. It was, however, not merely upon the above-mentioned fact that reliance was placed but, as, in the Privy Council case, other circumstances were also relied upon to lead to this conclusion.

[22] In 2 O. L. J. 259,[7] the facts clearly indicated that no endowment existed. In that case property, belonging to one Jogi Mal, was left by him to his sister and her husband, Gattu Mal, for their absolute use. Gattu Mal built a Thakurdwara in 1875 and formally installed an idol. On the facts the learned Judicial Commissioners found that the Thakurdwara was a public temple. They then proceeded to consider whether village Pahia Asampur, which was purchased in 1876, a year after the foundation of the temple by Gattu Mal in his own name, had been endowed for the upkeep of the temple. It was shown that the income of the village was about Rs. 1,300 a year and that it was deposited in a common account with the income from the other properties of Gattu Mal, while a sum of Rs. 300 only was spent annually on the upkeep of the temple. No deed of endowment was executed by Gattu Mal or by any one else and, on the death of Gattu Mal, his widow, a minor whom he had married on the death of his first wife, succeeded. On mutation being made in her favour the following entry—the origin of which was not ascertained — was made in the column of remarks: "Ba shart sarf Thakurdwara Thakur Dwarka Dhish." This entry continued in the records even when Kalka Das, a cousin of Gattu Mal, succeeded to the property in 1888. Kalka Das bequeathed the property to his sister-in-law for her life and thereafter to his nephew, Girdhari Lal. The will provided that out of the income of the village, Rs. 526 were to be spent on the upkeep of the expenses of the Thakurdwara. These facts clearly disclosed that there was no endowment and it was in those circumstances that the learned Judicial Commissioners remarked, following 2 Cal. 341,[5] that

"the mere fact that Gattu Mal was spending a portion of his income on the upkeep of the temple was insufficient to show that the corpus of the property was dedicated to its use."

[23] In First Civil Appeal No. 114 of 1937,[8] which was decided by a Division Bench of this Court on 11th March 1940, the question was whether a 12 anna share of village Serai Pir was endowed for the upkeep of a Dargah and the expenses of an "urs" at Rudauli in the district of Bara Banki. It was proved, from the recital contained in the wajib-ul-arz, that originally some land had been granted to the ancestors of the then holders as "madad maash." It was also proved that, in British times, the grant was confirmed by a muafi sanad which laid down the conditions, namely that the Dargah would be properly lighted and repaired and that visitors to the shrine should be fed for one day each year at the annual fair. The evidence further established that the property had been subject to the ordinary law of inheritance, the shares of all the heirs of the original grantee being specified. The Court came to the conclusion that those facts did not establish a waqf.

[24] Thus the proposition has been too broadly stated by the respondents' learned counsel and all that can be deduced from these authorities is that, if property is found in the possession of a lay holder and has been subject to the ordinary law of inheritance, transfer and bequest, the mere fact that a part, or even the whole, of the income has been devoted to the upkeep of a religious institution does not lead to the conclusion that the property was dedicated for the upkeep of that institution.

[25] The next contention of the respondents' learned counsel was that the mere fact that property in the possession of an ascetic had descended for several generations from guru to chela is not proof of the fact that the property was endowed for the upkeep of the institution over which the ascetic presides. In support of this proposition he relied upon 65 I. A. 252=1938 O. W. N. 693,[9] 1939 O. W. N. 634[10] and 50 ALL. 485.[11]

[26] This contention cannot be seriously disputed because it is clear that, under the Hindu law, even the undedicated property in the possession of an ascetic, who has severed himself from the world, does not descend to his blood relations but to his spiritual relations—his disciples, his preceptors and so on. Thus if nothing else were proved but that property which was proved to have come into the possession of an ascetic by descent from his gurus for several generations, this would be quite inconclusive to determine the nature of the property, i. e. whether it was the personal property of the ascetic or was endowed property appertaining to the institution over which he presided. It must be noticed, however, that in all the cases to which reference has been made there was evidence to show that the property was acquired by the original holders out of their private funds, was treated by successive holders as private property and there was no evidence of any endowment having been created.

[27] On the basis of these decisions the respondents' learned counsel contended that even if it is proved that the property had descended for a considerable length of time from guru to chela and that its income had been devoted to the upkeep of a religious institution, it could not be said that it was endowed property. He did not, however, confine his argument to this aspect of the matter, he proceeded further and contended that, in the present case, there is in existence no religious institution of such a character as to be able to hold property. He urged that although there is in existence a building which is called a temple, it is not in fact a temple according to Hindu law and that the so-called "math" or "asthan" does not satisfy the requirements of a "math" as laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 43 I. A. 73[12] at p. 76.

[28] The first contention is based upon the statement made in the written statement that in the temple there is an idol of Dadhich installed. The argument proceeds that Dadhich was not a deity but only a Rishi: vide Sitapur Gazetteer, p. 192, and as such could not be an object of worship. This may be the strict religious theory but there have been many developments and there can be no doubt that the building, in which the idol of Dadhich is installed, has long been considered to be a temple which is the object of a visit by pilgrims on the occasion of a Parikarma fair. It is not necessary for us to go into this question at any great length because, in the present case, the plaintiffs in their replication admitted the existence of a temple as such: vide paras. 11 and 22, and the whole case was dealt with in the trial Court on this footing. The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, be permitted to depart from their pleadings and raise a new question of fact in appeal.

[29] Further, whether there is a temple strictly so called in existence or not, there can be no doubt that there is in existence an "asthan" or "math." In 43 I. A. 73[12] a "math" is described at pp. 75 and 76 in the following words:

"An asthan, commonly known in Northern India as a math, is an institution of a monastic nature. It is established for the service of a particular cult, the instruction in its tenets, and the observance of its rites. The followers of the cult and disciples in the institution are known as chelas; the chelas are of two classes—celibate and non-celibate .... The Mahant must, by the custom of the math, be a bairagi or religious chela. The mahant is the head of the institution. He sits upon the gaddi; he initiates candidates into the mysteries of the cult; he superintends the worship of the idol and the accustomed spiritual rites; he manages the property of the institution; he administers its affairs; and the whole assets are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself. Upon his death or abdication he is succeeded by one of the bairagi chelas."

[30] In the present case all these requirements are fulfilled except that it is contended that there is no evidence to indicate that any instructions are given as to the tenets of the institution. Even if the mahant for the time being neglected his duties in this respect, it would not mean that an institution which fulfils all the other requirements of a math is not a math. Moreover this plea also was not taken in the trial Court and the defendant was not called upon to prove whether religious instruction was imparted at the institution or not. Further Ex. A-1 a pedigree, filed during the course of the First Regular Settlement contains a note by the Mahant, verified by the remaining inmates of the institution, that there was an asthan in existence. Thus it cannot be said that there is no institution in existence which may hold endowed property.

[31] We then come to a consideration of the question whether the evidence in this case satisfactorily proves that village Gayabar is in fact endowed property or not. In doing so we must not lose sight of the fact that, while we may not be able to arrive at a particular conclusion on proof of one or more facts, the conclusion becomes irresistible when several facts all tending in the same direction are established. In the present case the facts which are established from Ex. A-1, the pedigree, and the notes appended to it, filed by the then Mahant to assist in the preparation of the khewat, and Ex. A-2 the wajibul-arz of the village, are as follows: (1) That a mahanti gaddi was established by one Gayanath about 1000 years ago. (2) That so long ago as the reign of the Emperor Shah Jehan i.e. about 300 years ago a considerable property, including village Gayabar, was granted to one Soroman Nath, a successor of Gyan Nath, as a muafi. (3) That this property descended from one mahant to another without diminution of a considerable period of time during which, on many occasions, there were disorders and disturbances in the course of which properties very often changed hands and passed out of the possession of their real owners. (4) That when Nawab Saadat Ali Khan made an enquiry into muafis—an enquiry which was of a very searching character and which the Nawab himself supervised touring his dominions for the purpose—he maintained the grant, except to this extent that he assessed revenue on three of the villages, one of which passed out of the possession of the mahant. (5) That, thereafter, for about 50 years, till the annexation of Avadh by the British, the entire property again continued to be held undiminished by the mahant during a period when most holders of property suffered from vicissitudes of fortunes, owing to the weakness of the administration.

[32] It is further established that, at the time of the regular settlement, when titles to all landed property in Avadh were being enquired into the muafi grants were upheld and sanads were issued stating that since they had been held "under the former Government for the support of a shrine" they would be maintained "so long as the shrine is kept up." It is true that the revenue paying villages are not covered by these sanads but Exs. A-1 and A-2 clearly indicate that, during the Moghal rule, as well as during the Nawabi, they had been held on exactly the same tenure and their income was even then being utilised for the same purpose. Sanads were only issued for taluqdari estates and muafis and consequently the conditions can only be gathered from the decree passed by the Settlement Court and from the village administration papers. As we have already stated, the decree, Ex. 3, is inconclusive but Exs. A-1 and A-2 indicate the object of the grant with reasonable certainty.

[33] It is also true that Ex. A-2 shows that the original grant was to an individual, Soroman Nath, but that individual was the head of a religious institution and any grant meant for the institution would also be made to him as representing that institution. The case in 2 Luck. 109[13] is a very analogous case. In that case also the decree was in favour of an individual and the muafi sanad was granted to him, the object being the upkeep of the buildings of a "khanqah" and the maintenance of a school. It was held that this was a wakf and the property did not belong to the Sajjadanashin personally. In this case also the main facts are similar and it must be held that Gayabar is part of the endowed property and is not the personal property of the Mahant. See also 5 O. L. J. 38[14] and 23 O. C. 117.[15]

[34] We are aware that in 51 I. A. 192[1] a grant made to a Hakim "for the Imambara of Pir Hussain" was held not to create a wakf but only to make a grant to the Hakim subject to the condition of maintaining the Imambara. This case was cited before the learned Judges in 2 Luck. 109[13] and they say that it was decided on its own facts. Indeed there is a great point of distinction between the two cases because the grant was not made to the head of any religious institution but to a private individual to whom the grantor was under an obligation. Moreover the point which weighed very greatly was that succession to it had been according to the personal law of the grantee and not to a single mutawalli.

[35] It may also be noted that the witnesses produced by the plaintiffs themselves speak of a "math" and refer to the property as dedicated property. Those witnesses, except Mahesh Datt, P. W. 5, can of course, have no personal knowledge of any dedication. Nevertheless their evidence is valuable as showing how the property was dealt with. Mahesh Datt was for a long time the general agent in charge of the affairs of the institution and he seeks to make a distinction between 10 mauzas dedicated to the gaddi and 5 mauzas not dedicated but he is unable to point out what was the distinction in the manner in which the income of the two was utilised.

[36] Thus Gayabar must be held to be endowed property belonging to the institution and not to Mahant Bijai Gir. That does not, however, end the matter because, it is agreed that the manager of an endowment can alienate or charge it in the same manner and to the same extent as the manager holding on behalf of an infant heir: vide 2 Cal. 341[5] at pp. 345 and 352. We have, therefore, to see whether there was any legal necessity to justify the mortgage.

[37] The alleged grounds of necessity are that money was required for making extensive repairs to the buildings of the institution and for feeding a large number of Nahang Sadhus about 400 who had suddenly arrived for a prolonged stay and whose arrival at that juncture was of advantage to the institution because it was being attacked by a rival group who desired to take possession of it. If either of these two objects is proved to have existed, the mortgage would be for legal necessity. [Their Lordships discussed the evidence and held that neither of the alleged grounds of necessity were established, and the transaction of loan is not binding on the trust estate. Their Lordships proceeded.]

[38] The plea that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of S. 41, T. P. Act, was not decided by the trial Court but the plea is wholly untenable. That section only applies to cases in which a person is the ostensible owner "with the consent, express or implied, of the persons interested in immoveable property." In the present case the "person interested" was the deity or institution on whose behalf the "ostensible owner" was in possession as manager. The so-called ostensible owner was entitled to be in such possession and to exercise the powers of a mahant, which included the power of alienating it for legal necessity over the property. The fact, therefore, that he was allowed to be in possession and to deal with it as mahant would not constitute him as an "ostensible owner" within the meaning of S. 41, nor could it be said that the deity or the institution, which could not express itself except through him, allowed him, either expressly or impliedly, to hold himself out to be the owner. Thus S. 41, T. P. Act, has no application to the case.

[39] The plaintiffs, however, claimed a personal decree against the defendant as the personal representative of Mahant Bijai Gir, in case a mortgage decree could not be passed. This was not objected to by the defendant and such a decree must be passed.

[40] The result is that the appeal is allowed. The decree of the trial Court is set aside and a simple money decree is passed against the defendant as the successor of Mahant Bijai Gir to the extent of the assets of Mahant Bijai Gir, if any, in his hands.

[41] The appellant will get his costs of this appeal and of the suit from the respondents but the respondents will get their costs both of the suit and of the appeal from the assets of Mahant Bijai Gir, if any, in the hands of the appellant.

Second Appeal No. 425 of 1942, Decided on 5-12-1947, against order of Dist. Judge, Unao, D/- 31-7-1942.

(a) U. P. Tenancy Act (17 [XVII] of 1939 as amended in 1940), S. 288—S. 288 is retrospective.

Section 288 lays down only the law of procedure and such law is retrospective in the sense that it applies to proceedings pending at the time: 20 A. I. R. 1933 Oudh 274, Ref. [Para 3]

(b) Landlord and tenant — Relinquishment — Notice of relinquishment given by tenant not in actual possession — Landlord executing patta in favour of another person — This indicates that tenant gave up possession.

It is true that mere notice of surrender is not enough to terminate the relationship of landlord and tenant. Relinquishment of possession is also necessary. It is however not necessary that actual physical possession should be delivered in every case. All that is necessary is that the tenant who has given notice of relinquishment should give up his own possession. Where a notice of relinquishment is sent by a tenant who is not in actual possession and the landlord after receipt of notice of relinquishment executes a patta in favour of another person, these facts are sufficient to indicate that the tenant gave up possession. P. N. Chaudhri—for Appellant.

Judgment.—Dargahi Lal, the plaintiff appellant, sued in the civil Court for recovery of possession of plot No. 2623 in village Kusumbhi, district Unao, and for Rs. 25 as damages. He alleged that one Mt. Subeda was the tenant-in-chief of the plot but she relinquished that plot in favour of the landlord Biswas Bakhsh Singh, respondent 2, and that he in turn gave him a patta of the plot on 1st July 1939. He alleged that Manna, respondent 1, was a sub-tenant of Mt. Subeda and that as Mt. Subeda had surrendered her rights of tenancy he too ceased to have any rights and he was in possession as a trespasser. He, therefore, sought to eject Manna and obtain possession for himself. The landlord did not contest the plaintiff's case. Manna denied any relinquishment by Mt. Subeda and also denied the execution of the patta by the landlord in favour of the plaintiff. Parties led evidence and the evidence was closed on 13th December 1939. 22nd December 1939 was fixed for judgment, but somehow it was postponed and the judgment was delivered on 2nd January 1940. In the meantime, the U. P. Tenancy Act of 1939 came into operation on 1st January 1940. The trial Court held the relinquishment to be proved and the patta to be genuine and effective, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the decree of the trial Court was set aside and it was directed that the question of tenancy should be disposed of by referring the matter to a competent revenue Court and then the case would be disposed of. This was done and on 15th January 1941, the trial Court accepted the finding of the revenue Court that although there had been a notice of relinquishment no relinquishment had actually taken place and that in these circumstances the patta was ineffective and the suit was dismissed. On appeal the decree of the trial Court was confirmed.

[2] In appeal it has now been urged that S. 288, Tenancy Act was not applicable and therefore any reference to the revenue Court was erroneous and that in any case, accepting the findings of the Courts below, there is no doubt that there was a relinquishment of the tenancy by Mt. Subeda.

[3] Nobody appears on behalf of the respondents. I have heard the learned counsel for the appellant and am satisfied that the appeal must be allowed. There was no provision like that contained in sub-s. (1) of S. 288, Tenancy Act of 1940 before that Act came into force. As the language of the sub-section itself shows, it will be applicable only to suits which come before the civil Courts after the coming into force of the Tenancy Act of 1940. Such suits may be those either pending at the time the Act came into force or those instituted after coming into force of the Act. Section 288 lays down only the law of procedure and such law is retrospective in the sense that it applies to proceedings pending at the time (see 8 Luck. 504[1]). In this case the suit was pending when the Tenancy Act of 1940 came into force. The procedure therefore adopted in sending the case to the revenue Court for decision on the issue of tenancy was correct.

[4] The learned lower appellate Court has found that as required by S. 20, Avadh Rent Act, notice of relinquishment was duly served by Mt. Subeda, the tenant in-chief. It has found also as a fact that no actual delivery of possession was made to the landlord because in July 1941 it was the sub-tenant who remained actually in possession. In this particular case the tenant-in-chief was in constructive possession through her sub-tenant. The interest of the sub-tenant ceases with the tenant and, if the sub-tenant retains possession, his position is only that of a trespasser, as has been held in several decisions by the Board of Revenue. It is true that mere notice of surrender is not enough to terminate the relationship of a landlord and tenant. Relinquishment of possession is also necessary. It is, however, not necessary that actual physical possession should be delivered in every case. All that is necessary is that the tenant who has given notice of relinquishment should give up his own possession. Mt. Subeda is admittedly not in actual possession herself. The landlord, on the other hand, after the receipt of the notice of relinquishment executed a patta in favour of the plaintiff. In my opinion, these facts are sufficient to indicate that Mt. Subeda gave up possession of the land.

[5] In this view of the matter, Manna is merely a trespasser in possession and the plaintiff is entitled to possession as tenant and also damages. The plaintiff and defendant 1, Manna, had agreed in the trial Court that in case the suit was decreed the plaintiff would be entitled to Rs. 12-8-0 only as damages. Accordingly I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and decree the plaintiff's suit for possession and Rs. 12-8-0 as damages. The plaintiff appellant will get his proportionate costs in all the Courts against defendant 1, Manna, only.

First Appeal No. 109 of 1942, Decided on 17-2-1948, against decree of Civil Judge, Unao, D/- 12-8-1942.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92 — Outsiders and designing persons should not be allowed to institute suit in order to put pressure upon trustee to give up possession of trust property to them.

It is true that a trustee of a public trust of a religious and charitable nature is liable to render accounts of the income of the trust property. Care should, however, be taken not to permit outsiders and designing persons to abuse the process of law. Where it is found that a suit under S. 92 is brought, not with the purpose of advancing the objects for which the trust was created but with sinister designs, to put pressure upon the trustee to give up possession of the trust property to the plaintiffs the Court should not lend its support to such men. While giving sanction to institute a suit under S. 92, it would be useful if the Advocate-General would go into the question not only of the conditions of the trust deed but also into the question of the bona fides of the would-be plaintiffs and of their capacity to represent the public, on whose behalf they are purporting to act: 31 A. Judgment. — This is a defendant's appeal in a suit brought under S. 92, Civil P. C. One Mahasukh, Brahman of village Salempur, began constructing two temples; but before they were completed he died, some time before the year 1890. The temples were completed by the widow Mt. Mithana and in one of them she installed the idol of Lord Shiva and as appears from a trust deed executed by her, the images of Radha Krishnaji were installed in the other. By a trust deed dated 6-9-1890 she endowed the temples and dedicated the properties mentioned in the deed for religious and charitable purposes specified therein. She appointed herself as the first trustee. By this deed of trust as well as by a subsequent will executed by Mt. Mithana, she nominated her brother's wife along with her own guru as joint trustees who were to administer the endowment after her death. Mithana (Mahasukh's widow) died in 1919 and as her guru had predeceased her the administration of the trust devolved upon the other Mithana. She managed the properties dedicated to the temples till her death in 1930. Shortly before her death she executed a will by which she appointed her daughter the present appellant Saraswati as the next trustee. The management of the temples and of the endowed properties has accordingly been carried on by her since her mother's death.

[2] In 1940 five persons, Raja Ram, Rameshwar, Narpat Singh, Sheo Ram Singh and Mohabat Singh made an application under S. 3 of Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 in the Court of the District Judge of Unao alleging that Mt. Saraswati who was in possession of the trust property was mismanaging it. They prayed that she be instructed to furnish accounts of the trust property which should be audited. The application was contested on behalf of Mt. Saraswati. The learned Judge dismissed the application as he held that the trust in question was not proved to be a public trust to which Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 could apply. After that application was dismissed, Raja Ram, Rameshwar, Narpat Singh and Mohabat Singh instituted the suit which has given rise to this appeal. It was a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., instituted with the sanction of the Advocate-General. The plaintiffs alleged that there was a public religious and charitable trust created by Mt. Mithana widow of Mahasukh with the object and purpose of maintaining two temples, and the phulwari attached to them. The trustee was required to engage pujaris for the two temples and for the celebration of religious festivals such as Ram Navmi, Janma Ashtami, Sheo Ratri etc. According to the plaint allegations, it was also the duty of the trustee to feed sadhus and other pilgrims who might come to the village to visit the temples. They complained that Mt. Saraswati was guilty of a breach of trust inasmuch as she did not furnish a correct and accurate account of the income of the trust, did not manage the trust property and had allowed the phulwari, the temples as also the dharamshala attached to the temples to fall into a state of disrepair. They also charged her with not observing the usual religious festivals in the temples. It was alleged that the daily worship was not regularly performed nor was any money spent on the bhog of the idols. It was further alleged that pilgrims and sadhus were not regularly fed as was provided by the trust deed. They prayed for the following reliefs:

"(a) Removal of the defendant from the office of trustee;

(b) appointment of new trustees and vesting the trust property in them;

(c) directing the defendant to furnish accounts and to hand over the balance found due in her hands to the new trustees and

(d) directing the new trustees to apply the income of the trust properties to the objects of the trust. It was prayed in the alternative that a scheme for the proper administration of the trust be drawn up."

The claim was contested by Mt. Saraswati.

[3] On the pleadings of the parties the learned Civil Judge of Unao before whom the matter came up for consideration, framed the following issues:

"1. Is the trust in question a public trust?

2. Is the sanction of the Advocate-General obtained by the plaintiffs invalid as alleged?

3. Is the defendant guilty of any breach of trust as alleged?

4. To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled against the defendant?

5. Is the building in front of Shiva's temple a Dharamshala and was it built by Mithana and forms a part of the trust property?

6. Are the plaintiffs not entitled to sue on account of their alleged opposition to the trust as alleged in paras 12 and 13 of the defendant's written statement?"

Issue 1 was answered in the affirmative. Issue 2 was found in the negative. As regards issue 3, the learned Judge held that there was no evidence to show that the temples or the phulwari or the well or the alleged dharamshala had been allowed to fall into a state of disrepair. He further found that there was no evidence to prove that religious festivals were not observed or that the daily worship was not performed or that no money was spent in the bhog of the idols; nor was it proved that the sadhus and pilgrims were not fed. He could not on the evidence before him come to a finding that any portion of the trust funds had been misappropriated by Mt. Saraswati. Issues 5 and 6 were also found against the plaintiffs. The learned Judge was, however, of opinion that in order to ascertain if the defendant had misappropriated any of the trust funds it was necessary "that a regular accounting should be made." He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit for rendition of account against the defendant and passed a preliminary decree for accounts under O. 20, R. 13, Civil P. C. The decree further provided that in case the defendant was found to be guilty of any mismanagement or mis-appropriation of the trust funds, she would be liable to removal. The learned Judge, however, considered it unnecessary, in view of what was provided in the trust deed to draw up a scheme for the management of the trust. Dissatisfied with the decree Mt. Saraswati has come up in appeal.

[4] As Rameshwar (plaintiff 2 in the trial) died before the present appeal was filed, his name does not appear in the array of parties.

[5] It was contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that in view of the findings arrived at by the learned Judge that there was no evidence to show that the temples or the phulwari or the dharamshala had been allowed to fall into a state of disrepair, nor had the plaintiff succeeded in showing that religious festivals were not observed or the daily worship not performed nor was it proved that the appellant did not spend money on the bhog of the idols or on feeding pilgrims and sadhus the suit should have been dismissed. It was pointed out that the suit was not a bona fide one. That Rameshwar (plaintiff 2 in the trial Court) had in 1930 executed a sale-deed in favour of respondent 3 Mohabat Singh and certain other persons in respect of a portion of the trust property in order to raise funds to challenge the validity of the trust. That Mohabat Singh and other plaintiffs were persons who were the enemies of Mahasukh and had instituted this suit in order to harass his relations.

[6] Before proceeding further, we may mention that the appellant's counsel did not dispute the finding of the learned Judge that the trust created by Mithana's deed of 1890 was a public trust of a religious and charitable nature.

[7] We will now address ourselves to a consideration of the question whether the suit instituted by the respondents and Rameshwar since deceased, was or was not a bona fide suit. Paragraph 4 of the plaint reads as follows:

"That the defendant is guilty of a breach of trust. She does not give a correct and accurate account of the income of trust. She does not manage the trust property properly. The temples, the phulwari and the well and the dharamshala have been allowed to fall into a state of disrepairs. Religious festivals are not observed. No puja is regularly made at the temples nor is any amount spent in the bhog of idols. Pilgrims and sadhus are not fed."

This contained all the allegations which, according to the plaintiffs, constituted a breach of trust. The finding of the learned Judge on all these points is against the respondents. Evidence was led on behalf of the respondents to show that some land had been given by Mt. Saraswati for cultivation to her own relations. With regard to this the learned Judge observed that the giving of a small fraction of land by the defendant to her relations "cannot by itself be enough to disentitle her from remaining a trustee any more." It further appears from the evidence that accounts of the trust property are maintained; though possibly they are not so fully as would be kept by a qualified accountant. The defendant was, under the trust deed, entitled to an annuity of Rs. 300, but she had all along contented herself with taking Rs. 100 only per year. The appellant's allegation that Rameshwar who was the chief person behind this litigation had sold away a portion of the mortgaged property to which he laid claim as a reversioner of Mahasukh in order to raise funds to have the deed of trust set aside (see EX. A-2) is not without foundation. (Their Lordships after considering evidence on the point, proceeded.) We are satisfied, therefore, that the suit brought by the respondents was not a bona fide one. In these circumstances, as the allegations of a breach of trust were not substantiated the suit should in our opinion have been dismissed. It is true that a trustee of a public trust of a religious and charitable nature is liable to render accounts of the income of the trust property. Care should, however, be taken not to permit outsiders and designing persons to abuse the process of law. Where it is found, as is the case in the present instance, that a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C, is brought, not with the purpose of advancing the objects for which the trust was created but with sinister designs, to put pressure upon the trustee to give up possession of the trust property to the plaintiffs the Court should not lend its support to such men. The suggestion made by Allsop and Malik JJ. in 1914 O. W. N. H. C. 129[1] that it would be useful in cases under S. 92, Civil P. C. if the Advocate General would go into the question not only of the conditions of the trust deed but also into the question of the bona fides of the would-be plaintiffs and of their capacity to represent the public, on whose behalf they are purporting to act, was not kept in view when sanction for bringing the suit which has given rise to this appeal was accorded.

[8] Having given the matter our best consideration, we are of opinion that the learned Judge in the Court below should on the facts found by him, instead of passing a preliminary decree for accounts, have dismissed the suit. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the trial Court and dismiss the suit. The appellant shall get her costs from the respondents in both the Courts.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration by the appellants, which has been dismissed by both the Courts below concurrently.

[2] The only question that arises for determination is whether the view of the Courts below that the entries in the khewat of the second settlement evidencing an acknowledgment on the part of the predecessors of the appellants of their status as a mortgagee vis a vis the predecessors in interest of the respondents as mortgagors constituted a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of S. 19, Limitation Act, is correct. It is not disputed that two mortgages were executed in 1850 and 1854 A. D. by the predecessors of the defendants in favour of the predecessors of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs came to Court asking for a declaration that the mortgages had become irredeemable and they should be declared the owners of the property covered by the mortgages. The defendants pleaded that the mortgages were still subsisting inasmuch as the mortgagees had acknowledged them by means of certain entries in the khewats of the first and the second settlement. The entries in the former are admittedly of no help and the only question is whether EX. A-3, which is a copy of the khewat of the second settlement, contains a valid acknowledgment as contended for on behalf of the respondents.

[3] Exhibit A-8 is a settlement khewat. The first two entries in this khewat refer to the proprietary interest of the co-sharers. The remaining entries refer to mortgagee rights. One of them mentions the predecessors of the defendants as mortgagors and the plaintiffs' predecessors as mortgagees. The mortgagees have signed and attested the accuracy of the entries at the foot of the document and the settlement officer has recorded the fact of verification. Section 32 (c), Land Revenue Act, read with the explanation, requires that the record of rights shall also contain a register of mortgagees with possession. Section 54 lays down that all undisputed entries in the record of rights shall be attested by the parties interested .... and by force of S. 57 all entries in the record of rights prepared in accordance with the provisions of Chap. IV, which relates to the revision of records at settlement, shall be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the entry of mortgage must be accepted as correct. Indeed it is conceded on behalf of the appellants that the accuracy of the entry is not disputed. What is contended, however, is that there is nothing to show that the attestation of the mortgagees is referable necessarily to the mortgage and not to their proprietary interest alone. There is no force in this contention. The entries in the khewat must be taken as a whole. There is no reason to think that these entries must refer to one portion and not to the other. There is also no good reason to think that entries about the mortgage were not brought home to the mortgagees and that their attestation was other than a conscious acknowledgment of the liability. The signatures of the mortgagees were verified by the Settlement Officer, and it is obvious that this could not have been done without the mortgagees being conscious of the fact that the entry of the mortgage was being made in the khewat within their knowledge. The criterion laid down in 1943 O.W.N. 302[1] that for an acknowledgment to operate as a valid acknowledgment, it must be a conscious acknowledgment of the existing liability is fully satisfied in the case.

[4] In 10 I.C. 215[2] a mortgagee was recorded as such in a khewat and the entry was duly attested by him through the pen of an agent in his presence and apparently with his sanction. It was held that the entry in the khewat was a valid acknowledgment under S. 19, Limitation Act. The case of Chunni v. Hukum Singh[3] at p. 238 of the same volume does not help the appellants. There the wajib-ul-arz which referred to a khewat recording certain persons as mortgagees and others as mortgagors was signed by one of the mortgagees only and it was, therefore, rightly held that it could not be considered to be an acknowledgment of the mortgage.

[5] Learned counsel has referred to the decisions in 1880 P. R. 32,[4] 1888 P. R. 63,[5] 1891 P. R. 116[6] and 1910 P. R. 39.[7] It would be sufficient to remark in respect of these cases that they took a somewhat rigid view of the provisions of S. 19, Limitation Act, and I am unable to follow the view taken on those cases. On the other hand, a Bench of this Court in A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 457[8] has held that evidence of a statement mentioning the mortgage in a pedigree of the co-sharers of a village which was the subject of mortgage signed by the mortgagees, and of an entry signed by them in the village wajib-ul-arz, duly verified before a Settlement Officer, the pedigree and wajib-ul-arz both forming part of the settlement record, satisfies all the essentials of a valid acknowledgment required by S. 19.

[6] I accept the soundness of the view taken in the aforesaid case and hold that the entries in the khewat of the second settlement were a conscious acknowledgment of the existence of the liability. I see no reason to differ from the view taken by the Courts below.

[7] Accordingly I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 7 of 1943, Decided on 28-1-1948, from order of Civil Judge, Bahraich, D/- 2-10-1942.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 68—"Document required by law to be attested" — Bond does not require attestation — S. 68 does not apply — Party contending to contrary must show that it requires attestation—Fact that it is in fact attested is irrelevant — Stamp Act (1899), S. 2 (5) — Limitation Act (1908), S. 2 (3).

The question whether a bond is a document required to be attested by law or not within the meaning of S. 68, Evidence Act, is a question to be determined with reference to the law. The fact that a document purports to be attested has no bearing on the question. Accordingly it is for the party who contends that S. 68 applied to the case to refer to the law under which a bond is required to be attested. [Para 4]

A bond is not a document required by law to be attested. The definitions of that term as contained in S. 2 (5), Stamp Act and S. 2 (3), Limitation Act are not exhaustive and are meant only for the purposes of those Acts and cannot be taken to apply generally to the term 'bond'. Moreover those definitions do not make any reference to attestation. Hence S. 68, Evidence Act has no application to a bond. [Para 5]

Judgment. — This is a defendant's second appeal in a suit brought to enforce a bond.

[2] The material facts lie within a short compass. On 2-7-1933 a bond was executed by Baba Ram Dat Ram, appellant, in favour of Bachchu Lal who was defendant 2 in the trial Court. On 9-1-1942 Bachchu Lal purported to transfer the bond to Lalta Parshad and Tribhuwan Dutta. On 12-7-1942 the persons above-named instituted a suit out of which the present appeal has arisen to recover Rs. 600 due in respect of eight instalments payable under the bond and Rs. 148-8-0, interest. A number of pleas were taken in defence by the appellant Baba Ram Dut Ram but only one of these now survives. In order to prove the bond, the plaintiffs examined Bachchu Lal. They did not call any of the two witnesses Bindra Prasbad and Ram Narain by whom the bond purports to be attested. The evidence of Bachchu Lal in proof of the bond was accepted by the Munsif. It was contended before him that in view of the definition of the term "bond" given in S. 2 (5), Stamp Act, and the provisions of S. 68, Evidence Act, it should be held that the bond was not proved as required by law. The learned Munsif repelled this contention and decreed the claim in part. Dissatisfied with this decision, Baba Ram Dat Ram preferred an appeal which was disposed of by the learned Civil Judge of Bahraich. The learned Judge in the appellate Court pointed out that S. 68 was applicable only to documents which were required by law to be attested and that S. 2 (5), Stamp Act, nowhere laid down that a bond must be attested. Accordingly he dismissed the appeal. Baba Ram Dat Ram who with a pertinacity worthy of a better cause has come in second appeal. I have heard a learned argument addressed by the learned counsel for the appellant but am clear that the appeal is wholly without substance. I entertain serious doubt if this was a case in which the learned counsel who filed the appeal was justified in giving a certificate that the grounds mentioned in the memorandum of the grounds of appeal were good grounds for a second appeal.

[3] Mr. Ram Bharosey Lal referred to 6 Lah. 276[1] and 8 Cal. 284.[2] None of these cases to my mind has any bearing on the point which was placed before me for consideration in this appeal. So far as I could follow the learned counsel the only point for consideration was whether S. 68, Evidence Act, was applicable to this case. In none of the cases to which reference has been made this point came up for consideration. I would, therefore, refrain from saying anything further about those cases.

[4] The next point urged was that the document in question purports to be attested by two witnesses hence unless the other side showed that it was not required by law to be attested it must be taken that it was required to be attested. I frankly confess that I am unable to follow the line of reasoning which formed the basis of this contention. The question whether a bond is a document required to be attested by law or not is a question to be determined with reference to the law. The fact that a document purports to be attested has no bearing on that question. Accordingly it is for the party who contends that S. 68, Evidence Act, applied to the case to refer to the law under which a bond is required to be attested.

[5] Reference was made by the learned counsel for the appellant to the definition of that term as contained in the Stamp Act and the Limitation Act. As pointed out by the learned Judge in the Court below, none of these definitions are exhaustive. The definitions of these Acts are meant only for the purposes of those Acts and cannot be taken to apply generally to the term 'bond'. The definition in the Stamp Act opens with the words. "Bond includes . . . . . " The definition in cl. (3) of S. 2, Limitation Act, reads as follows:

> "'Bond' includes any instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be."

It does not make any reference to attestation. I am clear that the appeal is wholly without substance. It is dismissed with costs.

[6] The order for stay of execution of decree dated 7-9-1944 is vacated.

Execution of Decree Appeal No. 94 of 1943, Decided on 16-12-1947, against order of District Judge, Lucknow, D/- 26-8-1943.

U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (10 [X] of 1937), S. 3 — Decree for costs is decree for money — Act applies to such decree.

The Act applies to all kinds of money decrees based on any liability incurred before the passing of the Act. The words "any decree for money on the basis of a liability" are of the widest import and do not suggest a money decree on the basis of a loan only. Hence a decree for costs passed before the Act came into force is a decree for money and the Act applies to such a decree. This being so, in computing the limitation for an application to execute such a decree, the period during which the decree could not be executed by reason of the Act, should be excluded: 27 A. I. Judgment. — Jagannath and Balbhaddar, Halwais, respondents, filed suit No. 55/87 of 1934 for partition against Jagannath Prasad, Kayasth, father of Bhagwat Sahai appellant, and some others. The suit was dismissed. In the decree there were two orders for costs. The appellant's father Jagannath Prasad was given Rs. 226 as costs against the plaintiffs while Rs. 208-6-0 were allowed as costs to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs went up in appeal and their appeal was dismissed on 22 5 1936. Rupees 100 were awarded as costs to the appellant's father. The plaintiffs went up in second appeal to the Chief Court and that appeal was also dismissed summarily under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., on 23-11-1936. On 12-1-1939 the present respondents-plaintiffs in the partition suit transferred their decree for costs to one Jugal Kishore. On 17 9-1942 the present appellant Bhagwat Sahai applied for execution of his decree for Rs. 117-10 0 after allowing a set off amounting to Rs. 208-6-0 the costs awarded in the partition suit to the respondents. Certain objections were raised and the principal one was that the application for execution was time-barred having been made more than three years after the passing of the decree. It was held that limitation should be counted from the date of passing of the Chief Court's decree, that is 23-11-1936. It was also held that from 1-1-1938 to 31-12-1940 the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act 10 [X] of 1937 was in force and as the present respondents were agriculturists, the decree could not have been executed during that period of three years and so in computing the period of limitation this period must be excluded and if that is done the decree is clearly within time. The benefit of this period of three years was given to the appellant and the decree was held to be within time. The respondents went up in appeal to the learned District Judge and he held that the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, 10 [X] of 1937, did not apply to a decree for costs and accordingly held that the application for execution was time-barred and dismissed the application for execution.

[2] The only point now urged in appeal is that the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, 10 [X] of 1937, does apply to a decree for costs which is a decree for money and therefore the application for execution was not time-barred. I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and am satisfied that the appeal must be allowed.

[3] Sub-section (1) of S. 3, Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, 10 [X] of 1937, lays down that all proceedings in execution of any decree for money passed by a civil Court on the basis of a liability incurred before the passing of the Act, in which the judgment-debtor or any one of the judgment-debtors is, at the date of the passing of this Act, an agriculturist shall be stayed during the period this Act shall remain in force, if such judgment-debtor does not pay more than Rs. 250 as land revenue or rent, or more than Rs. 30 as local rate for revenue-free land or if, the total of the revenue rent and ten times the local rate payable by him or any two of them does not exceed Rs. 250. On the terms of the sub-section the appellant is entitled to succeed. It was urged for the respondents that the liability contemplated in this section is the liability on the basis of a loan. This contention has no force. No such words have been used in the section. The Act applies to all kinds of money decrees based on any liability incurred before passing of the Act. The words "any decree for money on the basis of a liability" are of the widest import and do not suggest a money decree on the basis of a loan only. This section has been interpreted by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in A. I. R. 1940 ALL. 326.[1] At p. 328, column 3, Thom C. J., while delivering the judgment of the Full Bench said :

"It was urged that S. 3 applied only to decrees for money passed by a Civil Court on the basis of a liability incurred before the passing of the Act and that a decree for costs was not a decree on the basis of such liability. There is no force in this argument. The decree for costs was passed precisely because there was a liability. The plaintiff, judgment-debtor, came into Court with a false claim against the decree-holder. His claim was dismissed and he had incurred a liability to indemnify the defendant in respect of the costs of the defendant in the litigation. In passing the decree for costs the Court did not as was contended for the judgment-debtor, create the liability. The decree was passed because there was the liability to pay the successful defendant in the suit his costs. The decree for costs was passed before the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act came into force. It was passed upon a liability which had been incurred before the passing of the Act."

In the present case the decree was admittedly passed before the Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act, 10 [X] of 1937, came into force. The decree was, therefore, passed upon a liability which had been incurred before the passing of the Act. The view of the Court below was erroneous and the appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

[4] In the result the appeal is allowed with costs of this Court and the lower appellate Court and the order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the application for execution shall be deemed to be within time and shall be disposed of according to law.

Where an appeal is filed under S. 45, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act against an order of Special Judge under S. 11 of that Act the case is covered by R. 2 of Chap. 12 of Oudh Chief Court Rules framed under S. 223, Government of India Act. That rule is peremptory in its terms and leaves no discretion whatever with a Court to dispense with a copy of judgment. The appellate Court cannot therefore dispense with the copy of the judgment. Order 41, R. 1, Civil P. C. has no application to such a case as the order passed by Special Judge under S. 11, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, strictly speaking, is not a decree but is only deemed to be a decree. [Para 2]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 5—Sufficient cause.

Where in an appeal under S. 45, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act the appellant being under a misapprehension in good faith files one single copy of the judgment in two appeals, the delay may be condoned and the appellant may be granted time to file the other copy as there is sufficient cause for condoning the delay. [Para 3]

N. Banerji —for Applicants.

Judgment.—Four first civil appeals are filed under S. 45, Encumbered Estates Act by two sets of parties. Two appeals are filed by Mohammad Zahir Uddin Khan and two by Tahawar Khan and others. Application No. 26 of 1936 was filed by Tahawar Khan and others while application No. 32 of 1936 was filed by Ranjit Khan under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act. Zahir Uddin Khan's paternal grandfather Ranjit Khan had two brothers Najib Khan and Naurang Khan. Ranjit Khan set up exclusive right in the property which was the subject-matter of his application while his opponents, namely the representatives of his two brothers, set up joint rights in the same property. There was also a question whether the gift of seven villages made by Ranjit Khan to one Ghulam Mohiuddin Khan was fictitious and fraudulent. Objections under S. 11 were filed by both parties and related to the property in suit as also to the property covered by the deed of gift. Application No. 32 was made the leading case and all evidence was produced in that case but it was agreed between the parties that the same evidence would be read in application No. 26 in which, therefore, no evidence was produced. The Special Judge decided these claims by one common judgment. This covers 36 typed pages. The judgment was given on 29th March 1947. Mohammad Zahir Uddin Khan, as we have already said, filed two appeals, one against the decree in application No. 32 in which he filed both the copy of the judgment and the decree and one against the decree in application No. 26, in which he contented himself with filing a copy of the decree only. Tahawar Khan and others followed the same line of action.

[2] The question arising before us is whether the copy of the judgment should be dispensed with in two appeals as, if this is not permissible by law, then the parties may be allowed to file a copy of the judgment within a time to be fixed by this Court. Both the parties have filed an application under S. 5, Limitation Act as two of the appeals will admittedly be beyond time if it is held that the filing of the copy of the judgment was indispensable. Order 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., upon which great reliance is placed for the appellants has no application. That rule does empower the appellate Court to dispense with the copy of the judgment but it applies only to appeals from original decrees. Strictly speaking, the order passed by the Special Judge under S. 11 is not a decree but by force of sub s. (4) of that section it is to be deemed to be a decree of a civil Court of competent jurisdiction. Under S. 122, Civil P. C. this Court has the power to make rules from time to time regulating its procedure and the procedure of civil Courts subject to its superintendence, and may by such rules annul, alter, or add to all or any of the rules in Sch. 1. There can be no doubt that this Court has the power therefore to alter R. 1 of O. 41. We may also refer to S. 223, Government of India Act which confers upon High Courts wide powers including the power to make rules of Court. Under this rule-making power this Court has framed R. 2 which appears in Chap. 12 of the Rules of the Chief Court of Oudh. It runs thus :

"No memorandum of appeal from appellate decree or from an order shall be presented unless it be accompanied by a copy of the decree or order appealed against and a copy of the judgment upon which such decree or order is founded....."

While R. 1 of O. 41, Civil P. C., refers to appeals from original decrees, this rule clearly refers to an appeal from an appellate decree or from an order which may be either original or appellate. The appellate decrees and orders are not covered by R. 1 of O. 41. The case, therefore, is covered by R. 2 quoted above as these appeals are against an order of the Special Judge which is appealable under S. 45, Encumbered Estates Act. It is no doubt to be regarded as a decree of a civil Court of competent jurisdiction which means only this that the order is binding upon the parties and cannot be interfered with by a regular civil Court upon the supposition that it is an order of a summary character which is less effective than a decree made between the parties. Rule 2, in our opinion, is peremptory in its terms and leaves no discretion whatever with a Court to dispense with a copy of judgment. The language of this rule stands in striking contrast to the language of R. 1 of O. 41, which empowers the Court to dispense with the copy of judgment. We are unable, therefore, to dispense with the copy of the judgment.

[3] We have considered the applications under S. 5 and have heard counsel in support of them. We are satisfied that having regard to the particular circumstances of this case they have made out a sufficient cause for condoning the delay. The appeals of both parties in the leading case are within time and it is conceivable that parties may have been under a misapprehension in good faith that one single copy of the judgment in the two appeals will be sufficient. We think, therefore, that time should be given to the appellants to file the copies of the judgment. We allow them one month's time to do so. The appeals will be put up for orders when the copies have been filed.

Where upon the Receiver's seeking permission of the Court to sell a house belonging to the insolvent, the insolvent files an objection claiming that he was an agriculturist and that the house was used for the purposes of agriculture and could not be sold, it is necessary for the Court dismissing the objection to prepare a formal order as such an order is specified in Sch. 1, Provincial Insolvency Act, and is appealable to the Chief Court under S. 75 (2) of that Act. [Para 6]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 75 (2)— Oudh Civil Rules, Chap. 12, R. 2—R. 2 is peremptory—Order dismissing objection of insolvent to sale of his house—Appeal—Memo must be accompanied by copy of order.

Rule 2, Chap. 12, Oudh Civil Rules, having been framed under the powers conferred upon the Court by S. 122, Civil P. C., must govern the procedure in presenting appeals. This rule is peremptory in its terms and leaves no discretion to the Court. An appeal against an order dismissing an objection of the insolvent to the sale of his house on the ground of his being an agriculturist must therefore be accompanied by a copy of the formal order dismissing the objection and where no such copy is filed with the memorandum within the time allowed by law the appeal is not properly constituted : 35 A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 261, Rel. on. [Para 7]

Kalbe Mustafa—for Appellants.

Ali Hasan—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants were declared insolvents on 28-4-1941, at the instance of a creditor and a Receiver was appointed to take charge of their property. Thereafter the Receiver sought the permission of the Court to sell a house belonging to the insolvents. The insolvents filed an objection claiming that they were agriculturists and that the house was used for the purposes of agriculture and could not be sold. The District Judge, after recording the evidence, dismissed the objections on 27-3-1942. A formal order was prepared and it was signed by the District Judge on 1-4-1942. The insolvents filed an appeal against the order on 27-4-1942. No copy of the formal order was filed along with the memorandum of appeal, the advocate for the appellants stating that no formal order had been prepared.

[2] On receipt of the record in this Court, it was discovered that a formal order had been prepared. A notice was accordingly issued on 27-6-1942, to the appellants to file a copy of the formal order, but they failed to do so and a report was laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Judge, who, on 25-7-1942, allowed one week's time for filing a copy of the formal order subject to any objection that the respondents might take as to limitation, since the period allowed for filing an appeal had expired on 11-7-1942. A copy of the formal order was filed on 1-8-1942.

[3] The appeal was then fixed for hearing before our learned brother, Kaul J., and a preliminary objection was taken that, by reason of the failure of the appellants to file a copy of the formal order along with the memorandum of appeal within the time allowed by law, the appeal was not properly presented and should be dismissed. Our learned brother agreed with this contention and dismissed the appeal but, at the oral request of the appellants' learned counsel, he made a declaration that the case was a fit one for appeal under S. 12 (2), Avadh Courts Act.

[4] The argument of the appellants' learned counsel before us has been two-fold. He has contended: (1) That the order being one which was passed under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, no formal order was required to be prepared; and (2) that, even if a formal order was required to be prepared, it was not necessary to file it since this was not an appeal under the Code of Civil Procedure but was one under S. 75 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, and that consequently the provisions of O. 41, R. 1 and O. 43, R. 2, Civil P. C., did not apply to it.

[5] With regard to the first point, we are in entire agreement with our learned brother that this was a case in which a formal order was required to be prepared. Apart from R. 3, added by this Court to O. 43, there is an express rule made by this Court in exercise of the powers conferred upon it by S. 79, Provincial Insolvency Act, directing,

"A Court shall draw up a formal order embodying its adjudication and the memorandum of costs incurred by the parties in—

(a) decisions and orders specified in Schedule I of the Act, from which an appeal lies to the Chief Court under S. 75 (2), and,

(b) any other decision or order against which a party or Receiver signifies in writing to the Court his intention to appeal": vide Avadh Civil Rules, Chap. 6, R. 277, sub-r. 41.

[6] The provisions of this rule do not seem to have been brought to the notice of our learned brother. They are clear and unambiguous and leave no room for doubt that a formal order should have been prepared in this case which, it is agreed, is specified in Sch. 1 and is appealable to this Court under S. 75 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act.

[7] The second point is one which was not urged before our learned brother and consequently, in view of the rule, laid down in numerous decisions of this Court which are collected together in 1946 O. W. N. 331[1] at p. 336, it cannot properly be advanced in an appeal under S. 12 (2), Avadh Courts Act. Moreover, after hearing the advocates for the parties on this point also we have come to the conclusion that it has no substance. Even accepting the appellants' contention that O. 41, R. 1 and O. 43, R. 2, Civil P. C., do not apply to this case, R. 2 of Chap. 12 of the Rules framed by this Court does apply and that provides that:

"no memorandum of appeal from an appellate decree or from an order shall be presented unless it is accompanied by a copy of the decree or order appealed against and a copy of the judgment upon which it is founded . . ."

This rule having been framed under the powers conferred upon the Court by S. 122, Civil P. C., must govern the procedure in presenting appeals. It has been held in a recent decision by a Division Bench of this Court that this rule is peremptory in its terms and leaves no discretion to the Court: vide 1947 O. W. N. 525.[2] No doubt that case involved a consideration of the effect of the failure of the appellants to file a copy of judgment, but there is no difference between copies of formal orders or decrees and judgments under this rule and it is equally peremptory in the matter of filing copies of the formal order. Thus the decision of our learned brother holding that the appeal was not properly constituted is not open to challenge.

[8] The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 151 of 1943, Decided on 3-2-1948, from order of Addl. Civil Judge, Gonda, D/-31-5-1943.

(a) U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), S. 30 (4) — U. P. Debt Redemption Act (13 [XIII] of 1940), S. 9 (4) — 'Refund' implies returning or paying back of a sum to mortgagor — What is prohibited by these Acts is 'refund' and not something which may be 'tantamount to a 'refund'. [Para 4]

(b) U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), S. 30 (4) — U. P. Debt Redemption Act (13 [XIII] of 1940), S. 9 (4)—Applicability — Usufructuary mortgage—Subsequent mortgage of same property in favour of same mortgagee with stipulation that two debts would be paid simultaneously —Rights of parties are governed by general law — First mortgage paid out of usufruct — Surplus profits remaining in hands of mortgagee can be appropriated in liquidation of subsequent mortgage — Sections do not apply — T. P. Act (1882), S. 76 (h).

In their application to secured loans, S. 30 (4) of Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934) and S. 9 (4) of Act (13 [XIII] of 1940) would apply only to a case where there is a single mortgage on the property of which the mortgagee has been put in possession. If, however, the mortgagor has after creating a mortgage with possession created another mortgage or charge over the same property in favour of the prior mortgagee and there is a stipulation that the two debts would be paid simultaneously or that the first mortgage shall not be redeemed unless the amount due under the subsequent mortgage or charge is also paid, sub-ss. 4 of Ss. 30 and 9 of the two Acts shall not apply. The rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee in such cases shall be determined according to their contract in the light of the ordinary law and principles of justice, equity and good conscience. [Para 4]

Under the general law the mortgagor is entitled at the time of redemption to call upon the mortgagee in possession to account for the profits realised by him from the security during the period of his possession. The mortgagee has to account for any money that has come to his hands. Neither of these Acts has in any way affected the right of the mortgagor to call upon the mortgagee to account for the money received by him. What is prohibited is a claim by the debtor to a refund of any part of the interest already paid by him. Thus, if at the time of taking accounts it appears that of the two debts payable by the mortgagor the first (for satisfaction of which the mortgagee was put in possession of the mortgaged property) has been liquidated and there is a surplus in the hands of the mortgagee, it is not only just and equitable that this surplus should be applied to the liquidation of the second debt but this is also what the law prescribes. There is nothing in the provisions of these two Acts to prohibit such a course. [Para 5]

Order. — This is an application for revision of an appellate order passed by the Additional Civil Judge, Gonda, on 31-7-1943 in proceedings for redemption of a mortgage under S. 12, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act.

[2] The material facts are as follows: On 11-10-1901, Ram Pargat and three others mortgaged some property in village Birsinghpore, district Gonda to Ram Das for a consideration of Rs. 600. Under this mortgage, the mortgagee was put in possession of the mortgaged property and authorised to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest. The mortgage was given for a period of 10 years from 1310 to 1319F. The mortgagors had no right to redeem within this period. He could, however, pay the principal sum at any time between 1319 and 1327F and redeem the property. If he failed to pay the debt by 1327F the deed of mortgage was to be treated as a deed of sale and the mortgagee the owner of the mortgaged property. The mortgagee's interest is now represented by the present applicants Kandhaiyya Lal and Hazari Lal while the mortgagor's interest has devolved upon the opposite party Lal Bahadur and others. On 18-9-1905 Ram Pargat and his co-mortgagors created another mortgage over the same property in favour of the same mortgagee for a consideration of Rs. 1140. Interest on this debt was agreed to be paid at one per cent. per annum compoundable with yearly rests. It was further stipulated by this deed that the mortgagors would not be entitled to redeem the second mortgage without payment of the amount due under the previous mortgage. Possession of the mortgaged property has throughout continued with the mortgagee and his representatives-in-interest.

[3] On 12th December 1941 an application under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, was made for redemption of the mortgage. Among other pleas it was urged in defence on behalf of the mortgagee's representatives that in view of the provisions of S. 9 (4), Debt Redemption Act, any excess profits realised by the mortgagee from the mortgaged property over which he was put in possession under the first deed of mortgage should not be applied towards the satisfaction of the second mortgage. This contention was repelled by the trial Court. The Munsif of Tarabganj before whom the matter came up for consideration for the purposes of taking accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee applied the usufruct of the mortgaged property first to the satisfaction of the debt of 1901. After it was satisfied in its entirety, the proceeds from the mortgaged property were to be applied towards the reduction of the second debt of 1905. He found that a sum of Rs. 923 11-9 was still due to the mortgagee and ordered payment of this amount by the mortgagors. Both the parties were dissatisfied with this decree. The mortgagee preferred an appeal and cross-objections were filed by the mortgagors. Besides other contentions the argument which was urged before the trial Court with regard to the use of the profits of the mortgaged property for the satisfaction of the second debt were repeated before the lower appellate Court. There also the mortgagee's contention was repelled. On taking accounts, however, the learned Additional Civil Judge of Gonda, who heard the appeal and the cross-objections, came to the conclusion that instead of Rs. 923-11-9 as found by the Munsif a sum of Rs. 696-5-0 only was due to the mortgagors. He modified the decree of the trial Court accordingly. Dissatisfied with this decision the mortgagee has come up in revision.

[4] It was contended by the learned counsel for the applicants that the application of the profits of the mortgaged property for the reduction or discharge of the debt due on the second mortgage was tantamount to a refund of the sums already paid by the mortgagor which was prohibited both under S. 30 (4), Agriculturists' Relief Act, and S. 9 (4), Debt Redemption Act. There is a short answer to this argument. Refund implies returning or paying back of a sum to the mortgagor. This is what is prohibited by the provisions of law to which reference has just been made. What is prohibited is "refund" and not something which to use the language of the learned counsel for the applicants may be "tantamount to a refund." Apart from this consideration a little reflection and analysis of the legal position subsisting between the mortgagor and the mortgagee will bring to the surface the fallacy underlying the argument of the learned counsel for the applicants. The full significance of S. 30 (4), Agriculturists' Relief Act, and S. 9 (4), U. P. Debt Redemption Act, will be understood if we recall to mind the provisions of S. 76 (b), T. P. Act. Section 76 (b) reads as follows :

"When, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property his receipts from the mortgaged property or where such property is personally occupied by him, a fair occupation rent in respect thereof, shall, after deducting the expenses mentioned in cls. (c) and (d), and interest thereon, be debited against him in reduction of the amount (if any) from time to time due to him on account of interest on the mortgage money and so far as such receipts exceed any interest due, in reduction or discharge of the mortgage money; the surplus, if any shall be paid to the mortgagor."

This is the general law governing the rights of the mortgagor and his mortgagee in possession. Obviously the legislature had this provision in mind when it enacted S. 30 (4), Agriculturists' Relief Act, and S. 9 (4), Debt Redemption Act. Section 30 (1), Agriculturists' Relief Act, prescribes the rate of interest for undecreed loans taken before that Act came into force for the period after 1st January 1930. Sub-section (2) of that section provides for amendment of decrees passed on the basis of loans advanced to agriculturists in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) in respect of the amount decreed on account of interest. Sub-section (3) is not relevant for our present purpose. Sub-section (4) reads as follows :

"Any amount already received by the creditor on account of interest in excess of that due under this section shall be credited towards the principal; but nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle a debtor to claim refund of any part of the interest already paid by him."

Section 9, Debt Redemption Act, runs as follows :

"9. (1) In a suit to which this Act applies or in amending a decree under the provisions of S. 8 the Court shall notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, decree or contract or in any agreement purporting to close past transactions, determine the principal and take into account all sums paid by or on behalf of the debtor and in the case of mortgage with possession, the net profits realised by the mortgagee or which with the exercise of ordinary diligence might have been realised by him and shall determine the amount if any due by the debtor in accordance with the provisions of the following sub-sections :

. . . . .

(4) Nothing in this section shall entitle the debtor to a refund of any sum already paid by him."

It will be seen that these two enactments materially interfere with contracts as regards interest that can be charged by creditor in respect of loans to agriculturists. The provisions of these two enactments apply not only to future but also to existing contracts. On account of this interference by the legislature with the contracts of parties there would occur cases in which the mortgagee in possession might, acting on his original contract, appropriate to himself in lieu of interest on his debt, the income of the mortgaged property which under the law would exceed what he may legitimately charge on that account in view of these two Acts. In such cases the Legislature says that if the net profits of the property exceed the amount of interest payable in any year at the prescribed rate, the excess shall be applied to a reduction of the principal. Thus in a case where the mortgagee who was entitled to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest has been in possession, say for five years, and the entire debt has on account of reduction in the rate of interest been liquidated in four years, he would have left in his hands a surplus. Under the two sub-sections to which reference has been made the mortgagor cannot claim a refund of the surplus. What is said here applied only to cases where under the contract between the parties the mortgagee is entitled to take the entire annual profits in lieu of interest. Other considerations would apply to cases where interest is to be paid at a stipulated rate. But obviously in their application to secured loans, S. 30 (4) of Act 27 [XXVII] of 1934 and S. 9 (4) of Act 13 [XIII] of 1940 would apply only to a case where there is a single mortgage on the property of which the mortgagee has been put in possession. If, however, the mortgagor has after creating a mortgage with possession created another mortgage or charge over the same property in favour of the prior mortgagee and there is a stipulation that the two debts would be paid simultaneously or that the first mortgage shall not be redeemed unless the amount due under the subsequent mortgage or charge is also paid, sub-ss. (4) of Ss. 30 and 9 of the two Acts shall not apply. The sections in question were I am clear not framed to cover such cases. This is clear from the language in which the two sections are cast. The rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee in such cases shall be determined according to their contract in the light of the ordinary law and principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

[5] We may now consider what will be the position where the mortgagor creates a simple mortgage or charge on property which is already the subject of a possessory mortgage and stipulates that the first mortgage shall not be redeemed unless the second debt is also discharged. In such a case something is added to the original contract which subsisted between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. Under the first contract the mortgagor was entitled to get back his property immediately after the original debt was discharged. The result of the second contract is that even after the first debt is discharged the mortgagee has a right to continue in possession of the property till the second debt secured on a simple mortgage or if it constitutes a charge, as the case may be, is paid off. The question arises what is to happen to the income of the mortgaged property which is in possession of the mortgagee after the first debt is discharged out of the income of the security. Is there anything in S. 30, Agriculturists' Relief Act or S. 9, Debt Redemption Act which would entitle the mortgagee to appropriate the income of the security to himself even after the first debt is liquidated? Apart from the consideration that such a provision of law would be highly anomalous, there is nothing in the language of either of these two Acts to warrant such a conclusion. Under the general law the mortgagor is entitled at the time of redemption to call upon the mortgagee in possession to account for the profits realised by him from the security during the period of his possession. The mortgagee has to account for any money that has come to his hands. Neither of these Acts has in any way affected the right of the mortgagor to call upon the mortgagee to account for the money received by him. What is prohibited is a claim by the debtor to a refund of any part of the interest already paid by him. Thus, if at the time of taking accounts it appears that of the two debts payable by the mortgagor the first (for satisfaction of which the mortgagee was put in possession of the mortgaged property) has been liquidated and there is a surplus in the hands of the mortgagee, it is not only just and equitable that this surplus should be applied to the liquidation of the second debt but this also what the law prescribes. In the class of cases we are considering the two debts are not wholly unconnected with each other. The connection between the two is created by the stipulation that the first mortgage would not be redeemed unless the second debt was also paid. To take any other view would lead to curious results. The mortgagee would be allowed to continue in possession of the property and appropriate the profits thereof in lieu of interest upon the debt which has already been discharged. Obviously this cannot be the law. Under S. 9, Debt Redemption Act, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, decree or contract or in any agreement purporting to close past transactions the Court has to determine the principal and in case of mortgage with possession the net profits realised by the mortgagee. After determining these sums, the Court shall find out the amount, if any, due by the debtor in accordance with sub ss. (2), (3) and (4). There is nothing in the language of this section which would justify an inference that if there were two debts outstanding in favour of the same mortgagee which are both charged on the same property, the amount due shall be determined only in respect of the first debt and the existence of the second debt will be ignored. Under S. 13, U. P. General Clauses Act 1904, in all United Provinces Acts unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, words in the singular shall include the plural, and vice versa. Thus what S. 9 provides for "for case of mortgage with possession" must apply if there are two mortgages created by the mortgagor on the security of the same property in favour of the same mortgagee to both of them.

[6] The fallacy underlying the applicant's counsel's argument consists in an unwarranted assumption that in laying down the rule for claims for refund the law implies that the profits received by the mortgagee under the terms of his mortgage become his property even if another mortgage or charge on the same security in favour of the same mortgagee be outstanding. The general law relating to mortgages is well established that even where the mortgage deed is silent as to possession and there is no agreement to the contrary, the mortgagee who takes possession takes also the obligation upon him to account for the rents and profits during the time he is in possession: 27 ALL. 351[1] at p. 355. Before there can be any surplus in the hands of the mortgagee all the charges subsisting on the security in favour of same mortgagee must be satisfied in full. The view was taken by the learned Judge of this Court in S. 115 application No. 168 of 1943. I am clear that the applicant's contention is not well founded. The application fails and is dismissed with costs.

In an application under S. 25 the sole criterion for disposing of the case is the minor's welfare.

It is only if Court is of opinion that it will be for the welfare of the ward to return to the custody of his guardian that it can pass an order for such return. The rights of the guardian should not weigh at all though it may be presumed that, if the law gives the guardianship to a particular person it is in the interests of the minor that that person should have custody of his person. But other circumstances cannot be ignored. [Para 5]

The husband and wife were married in 1941. In July 1942 when she was enceinte the wife left her husband's house and never returned. In November 1942 the wife gave birth to a son at her father's house. The boy never went to his father's house. In spite of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and various requests the wife did not return to her husband who married a second wife in 1946. In 1947 the father applied under S. 25 for custody of the boy who was then in the custody of his mother:

Held that (1) in the circumstances of the case it was for the welfare of the minor that he should be allowed to remain with his mother: Case law discussed. [Para 14]

(2) the father was nevertheless entitled to have access to his child the method of regulating such access being arranged by the parties or by the Court. [Para 16]

(b) Guardians and Wards Act (1890), S. 25 — Order under, allowing minor to remain with his mother instead of with his father is of temporary character.

An order under S. 25 allowing the minor to remain with his mother instead of with his father is of a temporary character and if at any time it should appear that the mother is not giving that care and attention to the child which is expected of her and is not giving the child a proper education it will always be open to the father to move the Court for a proper order. [Para 15]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 1 — Application under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act — Point that District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain application depending on facts — Point cannot be raised for first time in appeal. [Para 17]

Annotation : — ('44-Com.), C. P. C., O. 41, R. 1, N. 12, Pt. 1.

(d) Guardians and Wards Act (1890), S. 25 — Applicability — Minor son never in custody of his father, the guardian de jure — Father still can apply under S. 25.

Even in cases where the minor son has never been in the custody of his father, the guardian de jure, the minor is in the constructive possession of his guardian de jure since he is in the custody of the other person with the express or implied consent of the guardian and consequently S. 25 applies and the guardian can make an application under S. 25: 5 A. I. R. 1918 Oudh 376; 12 A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 257 and 22 A. I. R. 1935 Oudh 492 (F. B.), Rel. on. [Para 8]

Judgment.—This unfortunate litigation has arisen between a husband and a wife for the custody of their minor child. The appellant, Shushila, was married in October 1941, to Mr. Kunwar Krishna Ganju. She is an educated lady who was then receiving training at a welfare centre with a view to entering service. She did not desire this marriage because, as she said in her letter to her mother, Ex. 1, she considered the proposed bridegroom's family too conservative for her views, but she agreed out of deference to her parents' wishes. The result was, as may well be supposed, anything but happy, and the parties soon parted. In July 1942, when she was enceinte, the appellant left her husband's house in the midst of preparations for the marriage of his sister, and she has never returned. The minor was born in November 1942, whilst the appellant was living at her father's house. The boy never went to his father's house and the father had no opportunity to see him till he was produced in Court by the Court's order.

[2] Subsequent to the birth of the child all efforts at reconciliation failed and the appellant entered Government service as Labour Welfare Officer. The appellant filed a suit (which has not yet been disposed of) for the return of some movable, valued at Rs. 36,000 alleged to have been left by her at her husband's house and the husband filed a suit for restitution of conjugal rights in which he obtained a decree on 4.12.1945 after the appellant had withdrawn from the contest. In spite of the decree and various requests made to her the appellant did not return to her husband who married a second wife in May 1946.

[3] On 4-9-1946, Mr. Kunwar Krishna Ganju applied to the District Judge of Lucknow under S. 10, Guardians and Wards Act (8 [VIII] of 1890) to be appointed guardian of his minor son. He also prayed in the same application that custody of the minor be delivered to him. When the application was made, the appellant was in England, having been sent there by the Government for further study, and the minor was with his maternal uncle, Dr. C. M. Aga at Isatnagar, district Bareilly. The appellant, however, returned very shortly afterwards and filed a written statement on 14-12-1946. Thereafter, on 17-2-1947, Mr. Kunwar Krishna applied to the District Judge under S. 25 of Act 8 [VIII] of
